Free. A new and Positive Cure for Asthma has been found in the Kola Plant, a rare botanic product of West African origin. So great are the powers of this New Remedy that in the short time since its discovery has come into almost universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America for the cure of every form of Asthma. The cures wrought by it are really marvelous. Among others Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, West Va., was cured of Asthma of thirty years' standing and Mr. Alfred Lewis, the editor of the Farmer's Magazine, of Washington, D. C., testifies that after eight years continuous suffering, especially in Hay-fever season, the Kola Plant completely cured him. He was so bad that he could not lie down night or day, for fear of choking. After fifteen years suffering from the worst form of Asthma, Mrs. A. McDonald, of Victor, Iowa, writes that the Kola Plant cured her in two weeks. Rev. S. H. Eisenberg, Centre Hall, Pa.; Rev. John L. Moore, Alice, S. C.; Mr. Frank C. Newall, of the Market National Bank, Boston, and many others give similar testimony of their cure of Asthma, after five to twenty years suffering, by this wonderful new remedy. If you suffer from Asthma in any form, in order to prove the power of this new botanic discovery, we will send you one Large Case by Mail entirely free. All that we request in return is that when cured yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. It costs you absolutely nothing. March Offering Notes.

There is unprecedented interest in the March offering among the churches.

A few of the larger churches have shown no signs of interest, but we still count upon them to do their part.

The Missionary Voice has awakened much interest. If one copy were placed in each family theresult would be seen in the annual offering.

Make a thorough canvass of your church. See every member. Ask for a definite amount. A genorous offering is no accident.

We feel confident more churches will observe the March offering this year than last, but why not make a bold effort to enlist every church?

Last year the church at Hawaii sent $66.70 to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. We believe in gospel expansion. A peace treaty has been ratified for all kindreds and tribes and tongues.

It is an encouraging fact that the receipts of the Foreign Society have been more than doubled during the last five years.

Last year 752 churches reached their full apportionment or more. No doubt this number will be considerably increased this year. We are confidently expecting at least 1,000 on the Roll of Honor for the great Jubilee Convention.

If you have not ordered March Offering Envelopes and the Missionary Voice, do so at once. The time until the offering now grows short.

Last year the churches in Kentucky led in their offerings for Foreign Missions. This year Missouri is arousing herself. A Missouri preacher not long since wrote us, "Missouri is a sleeping giant." But she is awakening. And then Ohio, Illinois and Indiana will work hard for the front seat.

May we not ask every preacher to join us in an effort to enlist every church in the approach ing March offering? Let each preacher undertake to enlist at least one new church.

The churches at Indianapolis and Irvington, Ind., will support David Rioch and his wife in India. They were educated at Butler College. This step forges two more Living Link churches.

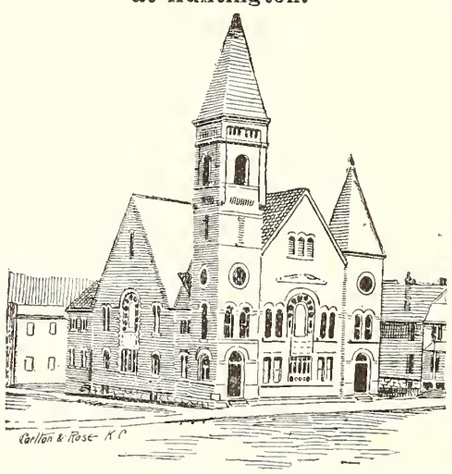
Already over 150,000 Missionary Envelopes have been ordered and they are now going out at the rate of more than 5,000 a day. In one day 150 churches signified their purpose to observe the March offering.

Last year we apportioned a church $50. The preacher has asked us to apportion it $75 this year. The church is neither large nor wealthy, but the preacher is large and vigorous.

Last year the churches as church gave only $45,650. Figure out yourself how much that is per capita for 1,000,000 members.

Last year the receipts from China amounted to $1,045. This is more than a majority of the states in this country gave. And Japan gave $394. The mission fields are doing their part in sounding out the Word of Life.

Remember that of the $130,925 received last year for Foreign Missions only $98,419 was contributed by the United States. The rest came from countries outside our own.



A preacher going to a new church to serve as pastor, writing of his experience with the church where he had just resigned, says: "While at ——— we did not give to missions becausee of the debt on the house and the poverty of the people. But experience has taught me a lesson; I will never do that again. Would have them give all they can for missions, if it is but little. The more a church does for missions the more it will do for home work."

Remember our old watchword: An offering from every church; a gift from every member.

Help us to carry out the new watchword coined at Chattanooga, $150,000 for Foreign Missions in this, the Jubilee Year.

Every church should make an offering every year to send the gospel to every creature.

How We Saved Our Church Property at Huntington.

The above picture is a correct likeness of our splendid church property at Hungington, W. Va., which the Board of Church Extension was called upon tc save from sale for debts.

On Nov. 28th, 1898, our board received word from the Central Christian Church at Huntington, W. Va., that its church, costing, lot and all, over $16,000, was to be sold at public sale on Dec. 12th. Letters came from other reliable sources in Northern Kentucky and Southern Ohio that confirmed the board in the belief that if the church were saved it must be by the aid of our board. The time was short. Whatever was done must be done quickly. The board met on Dec. 1st instead of the 6th, its regular time, and decided to send me to Huntington immediately. I canceled all Western appointments and started for Huntington with instructions to loan the church $5,000 provided that would save the property.

Upon arriving at Huntington, on Dec. 5th, I found a total indebtedness of $10,117, instead of $7,000, as had been reported. It seemed an almost impossible task to raise that amount of money, but by the blessing of God, the faith of the people and hard work, it was accomplished. The only hope of saving the property was in securing compromises, which we did, reducing the indebtedness to about $8,000. This left $3,000 in cash to be raised on the ground in orded to secure our loan of $5,000. At a full meeting of the church, an apportionment was read, placing this burden as equitably as possible upon the different members. The apportionment was almost universally accepted by those present on Wednesday night, Dec. 7th. By the following Monday, at noon, the money was all in bank and instead of the church going on sale at 1:30 on that day, at which the Catholics fully expected to buy it, the sale was postponed by the commissioners so that the attorney for the board at Huntington could settle up the business and make the proper releases. On Jan. 2nd the Board of Church Extension at Kansas City received all necessary legal documents showing that the loan had been satisfactorily closed with our $5,000 as the only lien on the property. The church worked most heroically in accomplishing this end. I never saw such sacrifice and earnestness and devotion to a cause since I have been secretary of the board. The church was worthy of the help they received. Most valuable services were rendered by A. E. Zeigler, their former pastor, who being sent for came on the ground and rendered invaluable service as he knew the people thoroughly. Another most valuable helper was G. M. Weimer, their present pastor. Meetings were held for seven days, during and after the saving of the church, with twenty-one additions and a happier and more united congregation could not be found anywhere.

In saving this church it should be mentioned that Dr. J. F. Davis, of Portsmouth, O., upon my writing him, sent $200; also Geo. Darsie, of Frankfort, Ky., secured a personal gift of $100. Judge Campbell, of New Cumberland, W.Va., also agreed to give $100 and the church at Paris, Ky., sent $100. The people of the church actually raised $2,500 cash in six days.

A brief statement is pertinent here as to why our board should come to the rescue of as expensive a church building as this.

In the first place, the National Convention at Nashville, Tenn., in 1892, recommended that our board should loan large sums at strategic points. Huntington, W. Va., is the second largest city in West Virginia, with a population of 18,000, with the great shops of the Chesapeake & Ohio R. R., and the heart or outlet of the coal region of West Virginia. If our building had been sold there it would have blotted our cause out of Southern West Virginia for a century. The cause had been built up at immense sacrifice and had to be saved. Had it not been for the panic, the membership could have paid for the building. It is true that the congregation overreached themselves, but the church is not too large for the city of Huntington, and now the people pay for it in the end by way of the Church Extension Fund. A. McLean said that this is the greatest piece of work that the Board of Church Extension ever did and of itself commends Church Extension to the brotherhood. In reading the articles which follow this from Bro. Zeigler and Bro. Weimer, our people will certainly agree that it will never do for our churches that are struggling to fall into the hands of the Building and Loan Associations.

A word in conclusion to the people in general. It was natural that the first thought of the society was to grant only small sums in aid of feeble congregations; that was the alphabet of the fund's work. But we could not be doing that kind of work always. Feebleness is only a relative term. It must be determined by the relation of ability to opportunity; a corporal's guard is a strong force for the arrest of a straggler, but it is decidedly feeble for taking a stronghold.

THE MARCH OFFERING

Pray and Give.

The heart's desire and prayer to God of every follower of Jesus should be for the speedy evangelization of the world. Nearly nineteen centuries ago Jesus taught his disciples to pray, "Thy kingdom come," yet much of the world is in darkness and sin. Pray that the Disciples may be given the Master's vision of fields white unto the harvest, and be moved by the constraining power of his love, to hasten with the message of the waiting Lord to the nations that have long awaited our coming.

Windsor, Mo. G. L. BUSCH.

Missionary Zeal.

Paul knew but one thing: "Christ and him crucified." His whole activity was permeated by this great thought. It led him through Asia Minor and into Macedonia. It compelled him to give himself as a living sacrifice. This thought led him to labor for souls while a prisoner as well as while free. He freely gave himself that he might give Christ to the men of his time. Our age has need of just such earnestness in Christian work, and it will be manifested in our lives only when we become as interested in Christ and him crucified as Paul was. E. JAY TEAGARDEN.

Danbury, Conn.

Present Duty.

"Present duty" in the light of the emphasis we give to our appeals to the "commission" stating the law of pardon for penitent believers, must constrain us to read and understand these last words of the Master as our reasons for world wide missions.

We can, we must, just now, lay our chidren, our possessions, our lives if need be on the altar of true sacrafice. We must now, right now, enter the many open doors, and give the perishing millions the pure, sweet gospel of Jesus.

"Enlargement," yes that is the word. It is now in the air. By his authority, love, life and purposes I beseech you, beloved, as one who has nothing too good for the dear Lord, that you "go forward" in contributions and giving even that which you think you cannot spare. Then you will taste of the sweetest joy this side of heaven. Pray for missions. Pray for the convention of 1899. And pray till it costs you something. A. P. FROST.

Thy Kingdom Come.

We pray, "Thy kingdom come." At no time since our Lord taught us the petition could it be uttered more hopefully. At no time has the duty both to pray and to labor for its coming been more imperative. The year 1898 has given the missionary unhindered access to many millions of people yet in the darkness of heathenism or the equally hopeless darkness of Romanism. The supremacy of England in Central Africa and of America in the Indies, West and East, is not an accident of international politics, but the act of God opening doors for the enlargement of the kingdon of his Son. The opening of the door is a command to enter. The year 1899 will see missionaries in these fields or will write "unfaithful" as the record of the church.

Boulder, Col. J. E. PICKETT.

Missions is the Cause of God.

"As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you." No greater obligation rests upon the church to-day than that of world wide evangelization. The cause of missions is the cause of humanity and the cause of humanity is the cause of God. "God sent forth his Son into the world, not to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." Jesus came to seek and to save men, and he prepares and sends forth his people on the same mission. The gospel of Christ is an universal gospel, hence it demands universal proclamation. If it is for all men, then all must have it. We dare not keep that which God has commanded us to give to the world. The mission of the church, therefore, is to the world. Our Lord says: "Go into all the world." Go, till the ends of the earth are reached. Go, till every soul is bathed in the glorious light of the gospel. Go, till the world is redeemed and Christ is enthroned as universal King. This is the Jubilee Year—the fiftieth year of our organized mission work. May every church and every preacher among us catch the spirit of enthusiasm which is increasing every day. May the song of the reapers fill the air with sweetest music. And when the hosts assemble in October, may we come ten thousand strong, bearing in our hands trophies of victory and on our hearts thanksgiving to God. M. D. CLUBB.

Chattanooga, Tenn.

Debtor to All.

The Scriptures continually surprise us by representing a state of religious life and a largeness of charity which we have as yet hardly thought of attempting to attain. Paul says, "I am DEBTOR to Jew and to Gentile." It is of the very essence of Christianity that the strong are in debt to the weak, the rich to the needy, the educated to the ignorant. This is all foolishness if the true philosophy of life is personal utilitarianism. It is the very nature of the Christian's God, though rich, to become poor for man's sake. Only he who partakes of this nature is a child of God.

CARLOS C. ROWLISON.

The Eternal Purpose.

The events of the past year have brought the American people to a realization of the fact that God has a hand in history. The eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus is the conversion of the world. Everything that tends to that end is in line with God's purpose. The recent war may have contributed indirectly toward that end by way of preparation in various respects.

The preaching of the gospel is the positive and direct means for the accomplishment of God's plan. It is attended by none of the horrors and iniquities of war and is the God-ordained and God-approved method. True soldiers of the Lord will fall in line. The day of victory is at hand. I. J. CAHILL.

Dayton, O.

This Must Be Our Greatest Year.

"Present duty" is measured by "as much as in me is." The constraining motive is love. That force in the church pushes out its ability, as tentacles, in every direction. More lands must be reached this last year of the century. The Disciples of Christ never had as much wealth, as many men, as strong a hold upon the people as now; therefore God will require greater gifts to missions. Not just fruit, but more fruit; the Husbandman asks. As far as as human limitations allow, love impels the church to do what Jesus would do were he here God's love poured out through the church in efforts to Christianize the heathen countries will make of them a new Eden, watered by its four heads, Pison, Havilah, Gihon and Euphrates; 1899 must be our greatest.

I. N. MCCASH.

University Place Church, Des Moines, Ia.

The Burden that Makes Strong.

When God would make a man great he burdens him, not infrequently to the point of pain and tears. When God would make an institution great he burdens it. No man—no institution—without a burden ever was or ever can be great. When Jesus told eleven men to take the world for him, he intended more than the enlightenment of the world; he intended the moral majesty and Godlike glory of his church. Wherever and whenever and in the degree that the church has bent her back to the burden her Lord appointed her, then and there and in that degree has she been strong and blessed. Neglect of the world's evangelization has always and everywhere, in the degree of it, made the church narrow and mean and miserable.

God offers a burden; it is the world. He offers strength: it is himself. Who accepts his burden may have God. H. D. SMITH.

Hopkinsville, Ky.

Larger Offerings Needed.

Larger pecuniary aid is at this moment imperatively called for. But whence is it to come? Oh! it is disheartening to think of the stinted, shriveled liberalities of those that yet profess to be disciples of him who for their sakes became poor, that they through his poverty might be made rich. There is abundance of pecuniary means in the land. It is not these that are deficient; it is the large Christian heart that is wanting. The poor find plenty to spend on noxious drugs that stupefy the mental faculties and brutalize the soul that is destined for immortality; and the great and the noble find plenty to waste on extravagant luxuries and superfluous refinements; and yet when we crave for a portion to be cast into the Christian treasury, they all, alas! too often, plead inability, and assure us that they have nothing to spare. When we reflect that all endowments of mind and body and personal estate are so many talents entrusted to men that shall be summoned at the bar of divine judgment to give an account of their stewardship, what does conduct like the preceding amount to but a reckless mockery of their God? Let us, then, awake from the slumber of indifference; let us become alive to the privilege and enjoyment of "being able to

DR. ALEXANDER DUFF.

"Go"—"Come."

God has opened the door of every nation to the gospel. There is not a spot on this earth where it may not be preached. Barrier after barrier of opposition has been broken down. To-day a Macedonian cry comes from every country of the earth and every island of the sea. How marvelous the ways of divine providence! Just as the church is getting able to enter, the gates of every nation swing wide open to it! Here is the Bible saying in every part, ''Go.'' Yonder is the great world open and ready and crying, ''Come.'' Does not the opportunity enforce the divinely ordained duty to preach the gospel to every creature? Dare we idle stand? GEORGE DARSIE, JR.

Connersville, Ind.

Missionary Power.

I hold a new ten-dollar bill in my hand. How much does it represent? It can provide so much pleasure or comfort—a trip to the city, a visit to the musical festival, a new chair or table, a ru or a picture. But the first of March is fast approaching and my mind turns in other directions, and I see still greater possibilities in my crisp bill. It now means better quarters and facilities for the missionaries, more tracts and Bibles, more heathen reached and greater good accomplished by my brethren who have gone to represent me among the benighted, and I say: ''This, with others like it, shall be a messenger to these brethren of mine to tell them of my interest in their work and to help them in it.'' M. COLLIS.

Lexington, Ky.

A Test of Our Faith.

The first Sunday in March brings the Church of Christ face to face with stupendous re ponsibilities. This day has become a crucial test of our faith in the great commission of our divine Lord. Even in my calmer moments it seems to me rankest impertinence for a church to claim the name of Christ and at the same time treat with indifference the cause of world-wide missions. Every motive that appeals to Christ should send the hot blood of endeavor through the veins of all his disciples. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars for a million people seems like child's play. Will the call be heard? Yes, for it is his call and I have confiden e that my brethren will not allow indifference to rob them of the joy of victory in our Year of Jubilee. M. E. HARLAN.

Topeka, Kan.

A Bright Outlook.

The importance of prompt, effective effort on our part for the cause of world-wide evangelization is made plain by the facts of history. W. E. Griffis, writing in the Outlook of ''America in the East,'' quotes some one as saying, ''If Christian missions (in China) advance in the next thirty-five years as rapidly as in the past thirty-five years there will be at the end of that time twenty-six millions of communicants, and a Christian community of one hundred million people''—one-fourth of the Chinese nation. The same might be said of other territory. This hopeful view, with the fact that the United States has appeared in the Far East as a world-power, and is pledged by her constitution and history to political and religious liberty, shows that the present must be a time for action on the part of all God's people, and especially an opportune time for the Disciples of Christ. Let us all do our best.

Liberty, Mo. J. M. VAWTER.

Three Types of Steward.

The early disciples furnish three types of Christian stewardship—Barnabas, who gave all he had, Ananias, who kept back part of the price and Judas, who stole all there was. Here is eulogy for every saint and philanthropist like Daniel Hand, the Barnabas of our time. Here is denunciation for every Christian plutocrat who has smuggled the spirit of Judas into this Christian age. Here, finally, is apology for Ananias He stands for all the Christian disciples whose record is that of keeping back part of the price. The benevolent schedule, in its mildest sense, is the damning indictment of Christianity. The immense disparity between abilities and activities is a startling sign of the times, and yet Ananias is not altogether blamable. He is, for the most part, living up to his light. The rank and file of our churches have been educated in what may be called the casuistries of benevolence. The first duty of Christians is to emphasize the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. Benevolence will never result from sentimental religious awakenings. In general this is the most religious age in the history of the church. Life is more abundant now than ever before. What it needs is arousal. It is time that we should raise up a generation of givers, for the world irreligious is laying the challenge of gifts at the threshold of the church. C. W. HIATT.

Last year out of 790 churches in Illinois 284 gave $4,012.03 for Foreign Missions. In Indiana out of 786 churches 284 gave something for Foreign Missions. Their gifts aggregate $4,751.27. These are the amounts that the churches as churches gave for this divine enterprise.

Out of the 430 churches in Kansas 166 gave for Foreign Missions. They gave in all as churches $1,276.95. Out of the 825 churches in Kentucky 210 gave $6,427.73 in all. Out of the 537 churches in Iowa 229 gave $2,-800.65. In Nebraska more than half the churches gave. Their offerings amount to $1.056.84.

In Ohio out 559 churche 285 gave someting. They gave in all as churches $4,804.17. In Pennsylvania considerably more than half are enrolled among the contributors. Out of 144 churches 85 churches gave $1,742 97. In Virginia out of 204 churches 97 gave for Foreign Missions. These gave $1,392 97.

The states that gave most from all sources are in the order of their gifts as follow: Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, Kentucky. The churches of Kentucky as churches gave more than the churches of any other state.

The Foreign Society is making strenuous efforts this year to enlist a far larger number of churches than ever before, and to prevail upon a larger proportion of the members in the churches to give.

"A CRISIS IN CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR"

THE MAN FOR THE PLACE.

J. Z. Tyler has wisely led our C. E. hosts thus far. I know, by the help of God, he will lead in this "crisis." Let us heartily sustain him. He is the man for the place.

S. D. DUTCHER.

Cincinnati.

WILL GLADLY MAKE A PLEDGE.

I have read J. Z. Tyler's article on the C. E. work in a recent issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Allow me to say that I fully agree with what is stated therein. I believe Bro. Tyler's deductions are reasonable. I also favor the matter of a national superintendent and with a definite salary. I believe we have no other man so well fitted for this as is J. Z. Tyler. I will gladly make a pledge covering two years on a salary for such a man.

C. J. TANNER.

Akron, O., Jan. 30.

WILL GLADLY CO-OPERATE.

In regard to the "crisis in Christian Endeavor" I would say, In my judgment the time has come for a "forward movement." I wish Bro. Tyler could give his whole time to the work. No better man for that place could be found. I am sure that our society here will gladly co-operate in any movement which aims at such result. Push the matter along. Let our Jubilee Year be the beginning of greater things in Christian Endeavor.

CHAS. B. NEWNAN.

Detroit, Mich, Jan., 30.

CORDIAL SUPPORT.

I am just recovering from an attack of "grip," hence the delay in answering your card with reference to Christian Endeavor matters. I am in favor of securing the services of Bro. J. Z. Tyler as secretary of our C. E. work. I think it better that his salary be provided in the way suggested than that the acting board should have provided for it and thus added another salaried office to what in view of the limited income of the society some may think already sufficiently officered. I will give any move undertaken in this direction my cordial support. A. B. PHILPUTT.

Indianapolis, Jan. 25, 1899.

SHOULD REPRESENT ALL THE BOARDS.

I desire to express a deep conviction that the superintendence of our Christian Endeavor work is of exceeding importance.

My personal feeling is that Bro. J. Z. Tyler is eminently qualified to render valuable service in this work. The Bethany Reading Courses have in them possibilities that call for the best we can do for them. They will richly repay it.

I feel that the Endeavor Societies would willingly yield a revenue sufficient to give a fair support to the work. The support should come from them. It is not sufficiently missionary in character to justify any of our boards in taking it up as a part of their work.

If, by wiser heads than mine, it should be deemed proper that it be supported as a missionary enterprise, surely its maintenance should come from all the boards and not from any one. There should be no appearance that our superintendent of Christirn Endeavor is the agent of any one missionary board to the detriment of others. Our young people should have a full rounded development and the very best we can give them. I. J. CAHILL.

CAN COUNT ON HIM.

Having been traveling constantly for some time past in the interests of our board, my eyes only recently fell upon Brother J. Z. Tyler's plan for saving our Christian Endeavor work.

I want to say that I most heartily approve his plan, and you can count on me for $20 each year for two years to help pay Brother Tyler's salary and expenses while he is testing this plan. I want to say that in my own mind I have no doubt of his success. Since Brother Tyler is going to relieve himself of pastoral work, I believe he will have the strength for this special Christian Endeavor work which my own experience among our Christian Endeavor Societies recently convinces me is a much needed thing. It is not possible, in my judgment, to make a school out of our Endeavor Societies unless there is some work assigned for their cultivated and outgoing powers to accomplish.

I sincerely hope that this plan may be set in operation early next fall. I believe every missionary society and every local church would be benefited immeasurably by Brother Tyler's active circulation among and contact with our various state organizations and local churches. G. W. MUCKLEY,

Cor. Sec. Church Extension.

NO BACKWARD STEP.

I believe that some action should be taken in regard to the matter to which the artice of Bro. J. Z. Tyler called attention in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. This is indeed a critical time with Christian Endeavor among us. I am not decided what ought to be done, except on two things: the first is that we cannot afford to take any backward steps in the Bethany work, etc., and second, we must in some way retain the services of Bro. Tyler. Personally I stand ready to give my financial support should it be asked. I do not believe that the "salary and the office would become the whole thing" soon in his hands

LESLIE W. MORGAN.

Atlanta, Ill., Jan. 20.

THE SIRDAR OF THE SITUATION.

When I see how magnificently and economically the Christian Woman's Board of Missions has marshaled the host of 40,000 of our women, I am heartily in favor of a systematic work being done for our young people. They had been climbing up like Longfellow's Excelsion, alone, and planting their banner of numbers on the heights more than anything else. Now we are called upon to assist in a permanent systematization of these forces, and I think we are ready and strong enough for it. Bro. J. Z. Tyler is undoubtedly the Sirdar of the situation, and I believe in a few years he will rescue the desert from the dervishes of no system and make it blossom like a rose for the Master. I think the financial plan will at least do for a beginning, until a more definite plan is made.

C. L. THURGOOD.

Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 18, 1899.

STATE SUPERINTENDENTS WILL ASSIST.

After reading Bro. J. Z. Tyler's letter under the caption "A Crisis in C. E." and your editorial pertaining to the same, I hasten to write a few lines. I know I voice the sentiments of a vast number of Endeavorers, especially the 800 among us in the old North State, when I say that Bro. Tyler is invaluable to the work of national superintendent.

With the magnificent scope of work that Endeavor is continually offering the Disciples, in fields unsurveyed by us as a religious people, to say nothing of its accomplishment in fields where we are fully known, I do not see how we can reach out and grasp these splendid opportunities without his ripe experience and able representation in gatherings of a denominational character, where his face is so familiar, and he a power for so much good.

I verily believe that the Endeavorers of the nation among us (Disciples of Christ) should support Bro. Tyler that his entire time could be concentrated to this important work of the young people. I believe the plan suggested by him is feasible and that many Endeavorers, as well as friends, would gladly embrace such an opportunity to testify their appreciation of his ardent labors. The several state superintendents would gladly assist the acting board in securing the necessary pledges to this end. And whilst I do not object to the pledges in excess being converted into the "Jubilee Fund" as Bro. Tyler intimates in his letter, yet I do think the excess, if any, should be applied to the work of our Juniors.

We want this Jubilee Year to be a model of spiritual activity. We want a "Jubilee Fund" sufficiently large to touch our Christian Endeavor work, causing a forward march, under the consecrated superintendency of our beloved national superintendent, J. Z. Tyler. "For Christ and the church" we stand, and to place Endeavor in the forefront we must take "a firmer grasp" and provide for this necessity. An opportunity to respond is all the friends of Endeavor would ask, is my conviction.

I believe it would be a sad mistake on our part not to sustain our national superintendent, particularly as we approach a crisis in this field of activity among our young people. Above all we should make no mistake this Jubilee Year.

I do sincerely hope that we will "take a firmer grasp" this Jubilee Year, and bring in a jubilee verdict that will bring joy to every heart of Christian Endeavor.

Down With the Liquor Traffic.

This warfare will never be ended,
Lor the cause of the righteous won,
Until all factions of reformation
Stand united together as one.

Then we'll move as a mighty army,
And with the hosts of sin compete;
With the help of Heaven and the work of man
The victory will be complete.

Then there will be loud rejoicing,
And laughter take the place of tears,
By thousands of heart-broken loved ones
Who have been under the bondage for years.

Then stand firm as the "Rock of Ages,"
Linked solidly hand in hand,
And we'll crush this monstrous traffic
And drive it from our land.

The Plea of an Honest (?) Rumseller.

A. CAMPBELL CHOWNING.

In asking your suffrage, the rumseller tacitly says:

Friends and Neighbors:—I desire to engage in a legalized business in your city, a business made honorable by the full sanction of the law. It is this: I desire to open an attractive, comfortable and elegantly furnished shop for the sale of liquid fire, and take advantage of this opportunity to inform you of the nature of this business. To begin, I will state that it is the nature of my business to make drunkards, multiply paupers and increase the great number of beggars, and in order to succeed I will want the constant patronage of your fathers, sons, brothers and husbands. My purpose and aim is and shall be to deal in familiar spirits, the influence of which will incite men and boys to shameful deeds—robbery and bloodshed. It will cause them to commit the most atrocious crimes, diminish home comforts, increase the expenses and greatly endanger the welfare of your peaceful and happy community.

For a small sum and on short notice and with expectations belonging to no other legalized business, I shall undertake to prepare victims for the poorhouse, the prison and the gallows! I shall sell an article which will cause the hopes of mothers, sisters, wives and daughters to be crushed and their aching hearts to bleed in solitude! That for the sale of which I desire to open a shop and ask your patronage will have a great tendency to increase the number of fatal accidents by depriving my patrons of reason. I also promise to greatly multiply the already distressingly large numbers of loathsome diseases, and to render those that are now harmless incurable. Yes, my proposed business is to deal in that diabolical class of infernal drugs which will make perfect fiends out of my patrons.

I shall do all in my power to obstruct and hinder the progress of the gospel of Jesus Christ and shall spare no pains to corrupt his ministers and defile the spotless purity of the church.

I shall be compelled to do these things in self-defense, in order to have a large and profitable patronage. My sole aim and object shall be to cause temporal, spiritual and eternal death! And if any one in his impertinence should presume to ask me why I am so audacious as to ask this town for for a license to bring incalculable misery upon it, my quaint reply is, "Money."

When you shall have granted me this requested license, be it understood that I shall then have a perfect legal right to to make absolute demolition of the character, to fully destroy the health, to greatly shorten the lives and to destroy the souls of all who honor my business with their hearty patronage.

Now, may I ask that you state your price? for I am perfectly willing to pay a goodly sum. For then I shall have your permission, backed up by legal authority, to bring upon you all the evils above mentioned. And remember that if I do not engage in this nefarious business and bring upon you these evils, somebody else will. I desire the emoluments arising therefrom, and certainly to be obtained by some one; and therefore I ask that you grant me said license.

In conclusion, please permit me to say that myself and senior partner (his Satanic Majesty, the Devil) greatly desire your liberal patronage; and especially do we desire, at the polls, in all elections, your hearty co-operation, for then we can demonstrate more fully to the community at large our high ideas of "personal liberty." And so, in order that you may assist us in the greatest debaucheries common to this business we hope to secure your very best efforts at the polls on all election days, for all which we promise you very liberal rewards. We also extend unusually warm receptions to all who will interest themselves in our behalf.

I am most respectfully,

AN HONEST RUMSELLER.

God in Nature.

BY JOHN S. MARTIN.

The poet has said:

"To him who in the love of Nature holds
Communion with her visible forms she speaks
A various language: for his gayer hours
She has a voice of gladness, and a smile
And eloquence of beauty; and she glides
Into his darker musings with a mild
And healing sympathy that steals away
Their sharpness ere he is aware."

But to him who plods along life's highway with his eyes and ears closed, the voice is silent. The sun is but an object of light and heat; the moon and stars but lessen the darkness of night; the hills and mountains are but rugged obstructions to the chance for gain; the rivers and lakes are but barriers to further progress without toil and care; flowers are but weeds that cumber the earth and vex the greed for gold; forests but hinder sunlight from reaching Mother Earth and her yield is shortened; songbirds are but pilferers, and everything that does not or cannot be made to minister to his material and selfish nature is but so much vexation.

Would you like to be thus, going through the world with your eyes and ears closed, shutting out the beauties and harmonies of nature? Or, would you not rather see the heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament show his handiwork? Then open your eyes and look about you. Open your ears and let the sweet melodies and harmonies of nature enter and make your soul glad. Whatever the season, listen to the voice of nature, and there is sure to be a lesson for good.

FREE TO MILLIONS OF SUFFERERS.

The New Cure for Kidney, Bladder and Uric Acid Troubles.

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of Swamp-Root.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of untiring scientific research by the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, Dr. Kilmer, and has truly wonderful powers in curing kidney, liver, bladder and uric acid diseases.

Kidney trouble is responsible for more sickness and sudden deaths than any other disease, and is so deceptive that thousands have it without knowning it.

Your kidneys filter your blood and keep it pure, that's what they are there for. You are well when your kidneys are well.

Thousands owe their health and even life to Swamp-Root and thousands more can be made well who to-day think themselves beyond help if they will take Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

Mother and Child.

I beg of you to think about your child before its birth—think the best thoughts of which you are capable—fix your mind steadily on a high destiny for the future man or woman, and shape its will to noble ends. Think about the baby while you nourish its life from your own—think lovingly, think deeply—pour into the slumbering soul all the vigor and vitality that is in you to give. Play with the children all through the symbolic age, the kindergarten age; enter as fully and as heartily as you can into their world, which is not at all your world. If you who read this fancy that it needs no expenditure of brain force to play with the baby, Froebel's "Mother-Play" book is a good one for you to begin with. Do not even allow yourself to put them to bed and hear them "say their prayers" with your own head full of something else; the bedtime is the hour that should be sacred to intimate confidences and close communion between mother and child.—Elaine Goodale Eastman, in the February Woman's Home Companion.

Opportunity.

Master of human destinies am I.
Fame, love and fortune on my footsteps wait.
Cities and fields I walk: I penetrate
Deserts and fields remote, and passing by
Hovel and mart and palace, soon or late,
I knock, unbidden, once on every gate.
If sleeping, wake; if feasting, rise before
I turn away: it is the hour of fate,
And they who follow me reach every state
Mortals desire, and conquer every foe
Save death. But those who doubt or hesitate,
Condemned to failure, penury and woe,
Seek me in vain and uselessly implore;
I answer not, and I return no more.

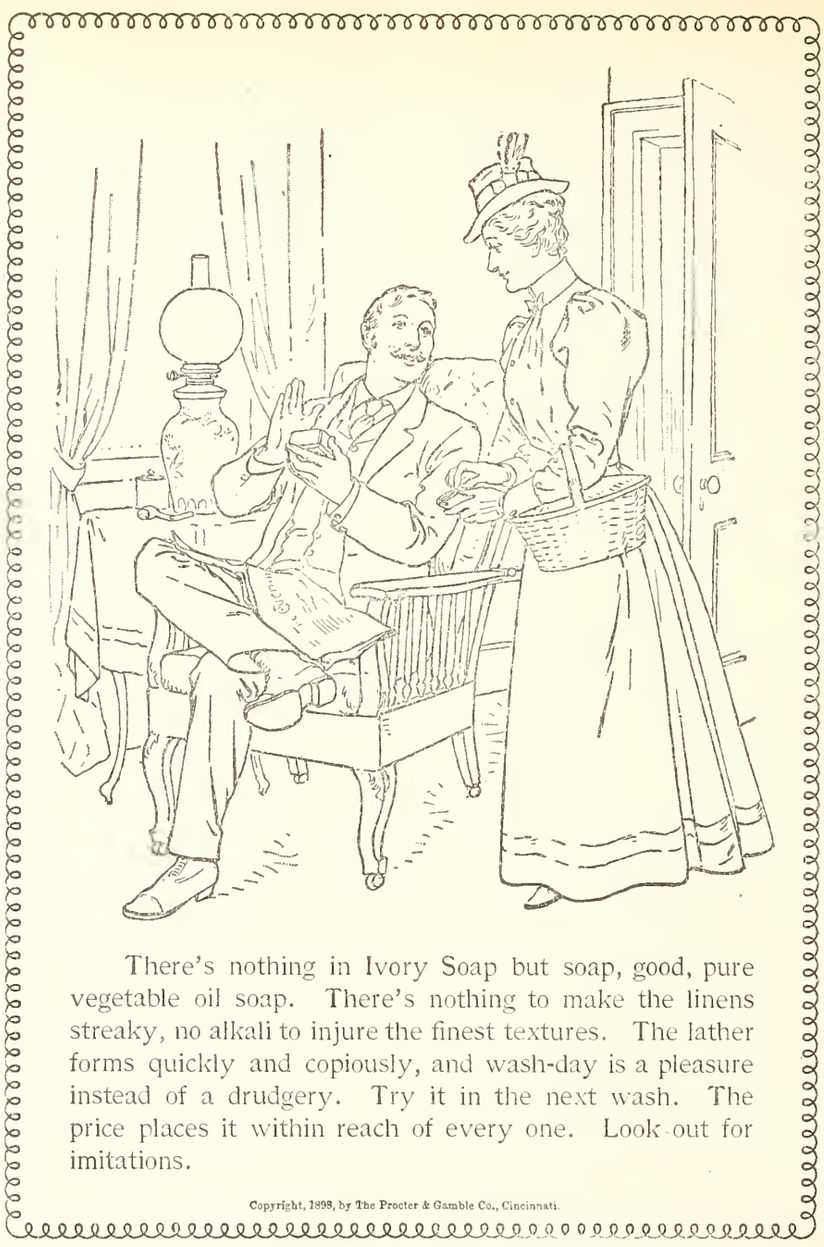
Fishing in Ingersoll Lake.

Did you ever fish in that lake? Well, if you never have had time to fish you ought to go once. The water is always muddy, and of course, the fish are not of the best quality. But then their mouths are all large and hence they can swallow almost any bait. In fact, there is but one bait the fish can't swallow, and that is not because of the size, but of the quality rather.

It is pretty generally contended that the brains of these fish are of coarse structure and of nearly the normal size. We think the food these fish feed upon has much to do with the structure of the brains and the habits of the fish. This will, no doubt, account for their general worthlessness.



There are a few good-sized fish in the lake; one quite large. And what a mouth! If the Lord could not make another large enough to swallow a Jonah, this one we feel assured would be equal to the task. Why, this fish has been known to swallow all manner of baits—save one. It seems to say, "Come on with your baits—I am ready for them." It has gulped down the moneron, protoplasm, the missing link, evolution and science (?), though it is pretty well established that this fish has never been known to digest the latter; but, as already stated, there is one bait this fish can't swallow.

Sometimes this fish gives a sort of entertainment—an exhibition of its size and powers. My! how it does make the waters foam! Then all the little fish gather around with wide-open mouths, to catch what it vomits forth; for, as above stated, this fish does not digest much that it swallows. In this way the little fish are enabled to live, and some of them may attain to considerable size, if the muddy water doesn't kill them.

It is interesting to study the growth and habits of this large fish. We are informed that it once lived in a clear and very beautiful stream, but it became dissatisfied with swimming against the current. This was partly because of strict parental training—insisting on keeping "heads up and tails down" the stream. But this fish seems to have been strongly inclined to reverse this attitude and go with the current. Perhaps its associates should have made it a leader in its upward struggle. Be this as it may, this fish decided to part company with parents and associates, who were seeking to reach the pure fountain of the life-giving waters, and turned its course for the muddy waters further down the stream. Swiming this way was easy and became popular, so that many other fish imitated this one's example. As many as eight hundred leaders in search for the living fountain, through inclination to live a life of ease and animal pleasure, have turned with the current and all have found a home in the muddy waters of this lake!

The fish in this lake have but little use for eyes and some very eminent piscatologists are already beginning to teach that erelong the eyes of these fish will be wholly closed to every ray of light. But, as before hinted, what they lack in vision they make up in mouth. And their eagerness to bite, together with their capacity to swallow the bait, make it interesting sport to fish in that lake. Only one thing needs to be observed: there is just one bait these fish can't swallow!

God's Promises.

BY DEWITT C. WING.

When are the promises of God especially helpful? The promises of God made in his Book are helpful at all times to those seeking help. They are helpful when we lose confidence in mankind and feel lost and as a ship without a rudder. It is then we can turn to his Book and read his promises which assure us of eternal life, happiness, ceaseless bliss. These promises fill the hopeless with hope, cheer the cheerless and raise to life, as it were, those weak in the spirit. God's promises are especially helpful when we are in trouble, when friends forsake us and when the world seems to despise us. We remember then God's great and precious promises, and console ourselves thereby. He has promised us eternal life—a life of endless joys beyond the grave. This is the greatest of the promises and means more to us than any other. The promises of God are not like those of men. We oftentimes make promises, but never redeem them; it is not so with God, for he will redeem every promise made. We should rest assured he will never break his promises. But all his promises are conditional; he has promised us eternal life if we will strive to please him. In other words, we must earn eternal life; our service in his kingdom must merit the redemption of his promises. I like the old hymn—

"When temptations almost win thee,
And thy trusted watchers fly,
Let this promise ring within thee:
'I will guide thee with mine eye.'

When thy secret hopes have perished
In the grave of years gone by,
Let this promise still be cherished,
'I will guide thee with mine eye.'"

An Answer to the Rudaiyat of Omar.

Live in To-day, thou say'st?—Shall we enthrall
Ourselves to Nothing? Nay, live in the All,
The Past and Future—these are infinite.
What is To-day? 'Tis infinitely small.

Between the two Eternities, To-day
Is but a pulse-beat; if thou e'er couldst say
Unto the moment: "Thou art fair—oh stay!"
Before thy charm were spoken, 'tis away.

But all the Past is ours—rich, wisdom-fraught
With all the seers have seen, the sages taught.
Live in the Past! and thou shalt think and feel
All that the noblest, best, have felt and thought.

The Future, too, is ours—our working-plot,
Our unexhausted heritage and lot.
And can it never be exhausted?—That
Is not our care. Trust God, work on, fear not.
"But," say'st thou, "soon I pass beneath the sod, Sans Wine, sans Song, sans End." Perhaps. The clod, Thy insignificant self—what matters that?
Our work lasts, God lasts. Then work on, trust God.

Gertrude's Choice.

BY ROSAMOND BELL.

Gertrude Altman was not a bad girl, far from it. She possessed a big, loving heart, but she had one little fault that deprived her of a great many friends, and that fault was selfishness. She did not realize to what an extent she yielded to this hard little master.

At school her books must be kept a little nicer than those of Rose, her desk mate. She thought, of course, it was only natural that she must come first in everything, yet she wondered why she had so few real friends.

One morning her mother had entered the sitting room, and found her standing by the window; her usually bright face wore a clouded look.

"What is the trouble, daughter?"

She looked up quickly, for she was very fond of her frail little mother, and came immediately and sank down on the little cushion at her mother's knee.

"I wish I could never enter that school again," she cried, "I do believe I hate it, mamma."

"Gertrude!"

"Well, mamma, I don't see why it is—I am certainly the richest girl in school. I have the nicest clothes, the nicest desk, the nicest books, and I stand at the head of all my classes, and yet—oh! I am just miserable, mamma;" and the golden head sank on her mother's lap. "And nobody really loves me, like they do that hateful Margaret, who isn't anything but a poor washerwoman's daughter!" and an indignant flash sparkled through the tear-drops as she looked up into her mother's face.

"I love Him because He first loved me," answered her mother.

"I don't see that that has anything to do with it at all, mamma, for I do love some of the girls, but I believe they envy me."

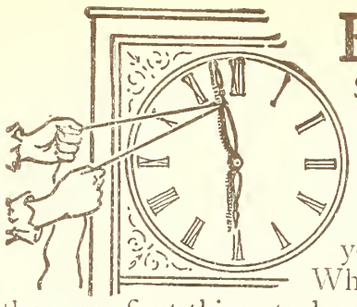
"Perhaps you try to make them, Gertie."

"No! indeed I do not, mamma; at least I don't think I do."

"Ah! that is better. Now, let me make a suggestion, my dear, and let's see how that works," and she stroked the bright curls caressingly, and then arose and going over to her desk she took up a bright card, all covered with tiny golden stars. "Suppose you take this with you, and every time you let some one else come first, stick a pin through one of the stars. What I mean by that is, little Margaret has no nice books; suppose you forget what you like, and to-morrow let her study out of your pretty new ones; or, suppose you forget you want your desk to look the prettiest, and you, who are 'the richest girl in the school,' spend some of your money to buy a lovely little desk for poor little crippled Ned; see, during the coming week, how much you can forget self and remember others, and we will meet here in this room again, one week from to-day, and note results."

"Why, mamma! do you want me to give up all I like for those who do not like me?"

"Suppose Jesus had not given up anything except for those who loved him, my dear. You do not realize what a strong hold "self" has over my little girl; and, until it is in a measure rooted out, you will not have very many friends, or be very happy. But it is in your power to have both friends and happiness. Are you willing to give it a trial?"



Gertrude was silent for some moments, then she said thoughtfully, "Mamma, I believe I will try your plan for one week, anyway."

"That's a brave girl!" and a happy smile overspread Mrs. Altman's face, for she knew well what the result would be, if Gertrude could only once gain the mastery over self.

One week has passed. Mrs. Altman was waiting for Gertrude's return from school, when a happy voice cried, "Oh! see, mamma, I tried to stick a pin through every golden star; and, mamma, I do wish you could have seen poor little Ned's face this morning when he saw his lovely desk. Why, he actually cried, he was so happy, and I think I must have been mistaken in the girls—for it's the nicest school in all the world—and I believe they all love me."

"Because you first loved them," mamma answered, as she kissed the radiant face bent down to hers.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

The Robber.

The man who confronted George Wilson in the threshold of the dining room door was dressed in a ragged suit of assorted colors. He had a great growth of whiskers that were running wild on his face and neck. His eyes were fierce and keen, his forhead low and heavy, and on his hands grew red hair. He held a dark lantern in his hand; this was what had thrown the light under the door. "What are you doing here?" growled the man, as he threw his light upon the boy. George might with more propriety have asked what the man was doing there; but in truth George was a very much alarmed young man. He made no answer.

"Are you alone?" demanded the other, coming toward him, and at the same time drawing a very ugly knife from some inside part of his clothes, certainly not from any pocket, or where any pocket had a right to exist.

"I am quite alone," returned George drawing back. "Nobody knows about my coming here."

"They never will know you come," said the man darkly, "if you make a screech. I seen that there well as I come in! Nobody wouldn't look for you in it, I judge. Now you make a screech and I'll plump you down in that there well!" George hastened to assure him that he would make no "screech."

"Well," said the man, feeling the edge of his knife. "Now you tell me double quick what you come here for, and you tell it straight. I have got eyes that can look right through a boy's heart. I can see what's aworkin' there, whether it is truth, or lies, or corpuscles! You deal with me honest Injun and I ain't agoin' to hurt you."

"I'll tell you everything," said George.

"Yes, you will," the man assured him. "And you'd better. I know you! You are the boy that druv by here with the man that owns this farm, and his hired hand. You went to Red Woods to camp out. What brung you back here alone?"

"Well, you see," began George, "I belong to the Advance Society—"

"Young feller," said the man, "don't you seek to waylay and ambush me by no devious statements. It's nothing to me if you are an Advance Society, or a C. W. B. M., nor yet a Knights of Pythy! What I ast of you is, why are you here? If you come to rob this house, let me tell you, I've got a monopoly on that business, what I may call a 'corner' on the boodle. Not but what I might give you a fork or so; I ain't stingy. So look alive, and sing out why you come."

"I don't want any fork," said George. "I—"

"Well, spoons, then. I ain't partic'lar," said the man. "What are you after?"

"I have to tell you about the Advance Society," persisted George, "because, that is what brought me here. You see, when a person joins it, he promises to read a verse of the Bible every day. If he keeps all the resolutions, he gets printed in the List of Honor. So I remembered I hadn't read a verse of the Bible to-day, and there wasn't any in our camp, and I thought I'd run here and get Uncle Tom's, and read a verse, and then run back, and not let them know I had been out of the hut. So that's why I came."

The robber stared at George and then began to laugh, and then put up his knife. "You come in the dining room," he said. "I ain't agoin' to hurt you. But I want your company!" George was obliged to go with the robber, who resumed his seat at the table, where he had been feasting. He had half of a ham before him, and a plate of cheese, and the fruit-cake which had been baked for Christmas, and a jar of pickles, and a crock of milk. The robber skimmed off the cream and ate it from the spoon without any formality. He offered to share his feast with the boy, but George was not in the least hungry. The man took huge bites, but never choked once; and occasionally he chuckled and looked at George, and stuck his tongue into his cheek; but he was too busy for conversation.

At last George, who had been looking at the clock, said timidly, "If you wouldn't mind, I would like to get the Bible and read that verse, because it will soon be twelve, and then it will be too late, and I will fail to keep my resolutions."

The robber looked at him sharply. "You want to git away, so you do!" he snarled.

"Indeed, I do not intend to try," returned George. "You can come with me, while I get it."

"That's very kind of you, I'm sure," said the robber politely. "Well, I'll come, since you might be lonesome all by yourself." So they went to the parlor, and George returned to the dining room with the big family Bible, while the man followed closely at his heels. The boy opened the volume on his lap and read the first verse that met his eye. "Well," said the man, who had resumed his eating, "What are you looking so funny about?"

"Was I looking funny?"

"Was you? Wasn't you! You read me that there verse you jest read. Sakes alive! If it hasn't been thirty year since I heerd the Scriptur!"

"I'd rather not read that verse," said George. "I'll hunt you up some others."

"No, I want that 'un that made you look so funny."

"I am afraid it will hurt your feelings," said the boy, hesitating.

"I ain't got no feelings," said the man gruffly. "I'm leather outside and iron inside. You do as I tell you!"

There was no alternative. George read: "But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."

"That was always one way about the Bible," said the robber in an aggrieved tone. "It never seemed to keer whether it made you mad, or made you glad. It jest out and called you what you was." He took a great bite of cake, but he didn't seem to enjoy it very well. "I wasn't always what I am now," he said. "When I was a kid like you, I was teached to be straight. My ma learned me the mullplication table, and Bible stories, all at the same time. Nine times eight, that there is seventy-two. Ain't it seventy-two?"

"Yes, it is," said George.

The robber threw back his head and laughed. "I knowed it was. Yes, sir, nine times eight air seventy-two. And it was Cain what killed Abel. Wasn't it Cain?"

"Yes, it was Cain."

"That's what I 'lowed. Well, he was worser'n me—I never killed nobody. Not yit! And he's in the Bible. Why, they's lots and piles of folks in the Bible worser'n me. That there chap they calls Peter, what crowed so much before his own roosters. What did he do? Why he went and denied that he had ever been there. He said that it was a rumor. I know lots about that there Bible; a heap more than I know what to do with!"

"You mentioned your mother," said George. "Is she alive?"

"Sakes alive!" said the robber. "I don't know, boy. I ain't heerd of her for twenty year. You see I took to drinking, and after that to tramping. I'm what you call a tramp—I calls myself a Gentleman of the Road. I ain't no regulation thief. All I generally steals is rides on freight trains. My ma? Why, I ain't even thought of her since last Christmas. Somehow every Christmas I thinks of my mother. Funny, ain't it? Don't know how come I to! And when I seen that Bible, I thunk of her."

"I'll tell you what let's do," said George, who was beginning to like the robber. "Let's write her a letter."

"No," said the man harshly.

"Think how long she has wanted to see you," said George. "Why, what a present it would be to her, just to know you are alive and well! If she's living, she must be an old lady; and old people get most of their pleasure out of their children. May be she is all alone in the world. She might be in the poorhouse, you know."

"'Twouldn't be no pleasure for her to see me as I am," said the man. "Let her think me dead—I ought to have been in my grave long ago."

"You don't understand mothers as well as I do, although you are so old," said George. "She has been thinking all these years that may be she would hear from you—that you would come back. Every day she hopes to hear a word. Every night she hopes to hear a word. Every night she is sad because she hasn't heard from you. You are no worse than when you deserted her. If she loved you then, think how her love has been growing all this time! I wish you would let me write a letter to her. You just tell me what to say, and I'll put it down."

"Sakes alive!" said the man. "Well, I don't keer. Git yore paper and pen! Wonder what the old lady will think! And, Texas Sim—he's my chum—he'll think I was crazy. I won't tell him though," he added, looking ashamed. George hastened to get the writing materials before the robber could change his mind.

Nell's Charity Dinner.

She rang the bell,
Did maiden Nell,
She rang the bell
For dinner!
Called in the tramps
From dews and damps—
The halt and blind,
Who lagged behind;
Called in the poor,
The weak and lame,
And all who were Invited came
When they heard the
Bell for dinner!

She rang the bell,
Did little Nell,
She rang the bell
For dinner!
Called in the boys
Who had no joys,
The famished girls
With tangled curls;
The young and old,
The short and tall,
And none declined
Among them all
When she rang the
Bell for dinner!

She rang the bell,
Did little Nell,
She rang the bell
For dinner!
As none were late
They ate and ate,
Each with a will;
They had their fill,
And then went out,
To bless the day
That brought a feast
With naught to pay
When they heard the
Bell for dinner!

She rang the bell,
Did little Nell,
The second bell
For dinner!
Then called the birds,
With sweetest words,
From lane and street,
The crumbs to eat;
She called the dogs,
She called the cats
(We're not so sure
About the rats),
With her second bell
For dinner!

Publishers' Notes.

The Sunday-school superintendent with large experience is certainly high authority on the best helps for use in Bible-school work. The writer of the following commendation is justly classed as an efficient Sunday school superintendent and is eminently capable of judging of the merits of the best helps for use by teachers and students:

"It affords me intense pleasure to express the lofty appreciation of Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899 and Our Young Folks. The Commentary is the most complete compilation for the Bible student and teacher I have ever examined and studied. It seems to me to have reached the perfection mark. The Primary Column in Our Young Folks is excellent, and is studied with the greatest interest. I wish them both the grandest success."—Dr. Julian C. Wasson, Supt. First Christian S. S., San Jose, Cal.

It is refreshing to find an author so well read in Jewish history as given in the Old Testament, and who has felt such an interest in it as to give to the public the volumes of "King Saul" and its predecessor, "In the Days of Jehu." The whole book of revealed religion, and especially that contained in the Old Testament, is well-nigh an "unknown land," more so than the arctic regions. There is no history as old as that of the Jews more heavily laden with inspiring and suggestive knowledge and none more reliable. The ability of the author is apparent, not only in the conception he has formed of his characters, but also in the terse style of his composition and the jets of wisdom which come in to enhance the interest of the narrative. We sincerely hope that these volumes may awaken some interest in matters which the world at large regard as dry; whereas, in fact, the Jewish Scriptures were held in high estimation by the apostles, speaking by the Holy Spirit, and should be, consequently, by every Christian.—H. C., in Octographic Review.

The subject of astronomy is always an interesting one. W. J. Russell has recently written a small volume entitled "Wonders of the Sky." It is a book of 82 pages, full of interesting information on "God's Glory Exhibited in the Heavens," and presented in such a manner as can be understood by the young. The following are some of the subjects treated in this book: History of Astronomy; The Depths of Space; The Stars and their Number; Celestial Distances; Are the Planets Inhabited? The Supreme Power. The Price of this book is 50 cents, postpaid.

We spent an hour or two over a recently published novel entitled "Mary Ardmore," by J. H. Stark. The general plan of the story, outside of the straw men who are put up to be demolished is good, and its personnel may help one to spend a pleasant hour, barring the pity he is obliged to feel for the simpletons who suffer the edge of Mary's keen wit and logic. —Baptist News.

Editors of educational magazines should be considered good authority on the merits of educational books. The editor of the Inland Educator, published at Terre Haute, Ind., recently reviewed Prof. B. A. Hinsdale's book, "Jesus as a Teacher," from which we give the following extract: "Among the many books now appearing upon the subject of teaching, it is both interesting and significant to find one devoted to the greatest teacher of all—'Jesus as a Teacher,' by B. A. Hinsdale. The author's broad knowledge of Jewish institutions and customs has enabled him to throw about his subject a charm and interest not usually found in books on teaching. The book is full of practical suggestions for the schoolroom of to-day.

"The chapter on Jesus' insight into mind and character deserves especial mention. The book is helpful and inspiring. If the principles of teaching set forth by Jesus were followed our schools would improve at a rate hitherto unknown." The price of "Jesus as a Teacher," by Prof. B. A. Hinsdale, is $1.25, postpaid.

John Shackleford, of Lexington, Ky., has carefully read "Organic Evolution Considered," Prof. A. Fairhurst's late work, and after its examination wrote a very critical review of the book. For lack of space, we are unable, in this issue, to give this review in full and can only give the following extract:

"'Organic Evolution Considered,' by Prof. Alfred Fairhurst, of Kentucky University, reveals profound reading and research. It contains an amount of interesting information which only an industrious and painstaking student could have collected. The logical power displayed in the work shows not only native strength of mind but severe mental discipline and training. The fairness of the author is manifest throughout the whole discussion. That man does a good work for his fellowmen who, in a skeptical age, confirms their faith in a living God, whom we would vainly see with our weak mortal eyes, but who is truly revealed only to the pure in heart. The benediction of heaven is breathed in the hallowed words of Christ, 'Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.'"

Christian Endeavor.

TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 26.

A PALM TREE CHRISTIAN.

(Psalms 92:1-15.)

The wicked sometimes flourish as the green bay tree, the Christian as the palm tree. One spreads himself proudly, the other extends his beneficent shade humbly. One shall decay and lose his exaltation, but the root of his strength remains.

The palm tree is the symbol of triumph. It waves with a dignity and strength in spite of appearance of delicacy. So should the Christian life, sensitive, delicate, gentle though it may be, stand strong and firm and courageous against winds and storms.

The palm tree has also been used as the symbol of peace. It served to carpet the path of the Prince of Peace as he entered the city of Jerusalem in his triumph. So should the Christian life be peaceful and calm and beatiful in its serenity.

There is a palm in some Southern countries called the traveler's palm. It is like a great fan in shape, the long, spreading stems of the leaves converging to the body of the tree, like the sticks of a fan. If a small hollow be cut on the upper side of one of these stems, the sap of the tree will rapidly fill the little cup, and a traveler can refresh himself with this water. So should a Christian be a source of refreshing to all who come under his benign influence. The water of life, whereof he has drunk, should be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life.

The cocoanut palm bears a rich, full fruit that is the food of many an island and many a tropic land. This should also be the character of Christian lives, tall, strong and fruitful.

The cocoa palms in the Hawaiian and other South Pacific Islands are turned all in one direction and have grown so, because of the trade-winds. Were it not well if all Christian lives were so directed by the breath of that Holy Spirit which breatheth where it listeth, that they should all be turned toward the Father of all life.

Expansion, flourish, widespreading and beneficent reach are the natural suggestions of the palm. Let the Christian life expand, let it reach far and see widely, let it grow farther and farther toward the sun and spread wider its grateful shade, never ceasing in its growth nor narrowing in its scope.

All in all, there are few trees so beautiful, so graceful, so hardy. The very word has a delicate strength, a wide-open and mellow resonance. It suggests Southern suns and soft moons, tropic and fertile warmth and glow. Such should be, should they not, the characteristics of the Christian life. No life should be so delicate and graceful, so strong and hardy, so rich and fruitful, so broad and beneficent as that of the Christian. His should be a life like the palm's.

THE HELPING HAND, by W. W. Dowling, is a manual of instruction for the Y. P. S. C. E., that great movement of the century that is putting new life into our churches, by interesting the young, causing them to flock to the Lord's house "as doves to the windows," and encouraging them earnestly in the Lord's work. It contains, in the most condensed form, full information concerning the Y. P. S. C. E. movement, with instructions and suggestions concerning every point. This work has had a more extensive circulation, and proved more helpful to Endeavor workers than any other hand-book published. 25 cents. Christian Pub. Co. St. Louis.

This column is set apart to the use of these directors.]

The Close of Jesus' Ministry.

By H. L. Willett, Director.

The reader of the Gospels is at first surprised to note how large a proportion of their material is devoted to the closing week of Jesus' early life, and especially to the events immediately connected with his death. The story of his birth and early life is so scantily presented, and the record of his ministry throughout its length is given in such brief notices that it seems surprising that so much has been recorded regarding those latest events of his career. And yet, herein lies the significance of the gospel story. It was the death of Christ which gave the true significance to all his work.

But it is not because the death of Christ stands alone that this is true. It is closely related to his entire ministry. That ministry was explained and illuminated by the death. The significance of Jesus' work as a sacrificial and self-devoted effort to teach men the life and character of God and to illustrate the highest type of human character could only be seen in the culmination of those efforts by a death to which he went straight onward from the moment of his baptism. He had clearly foreseen the issue of his work. He knew that to live the life which was the one he had set before him, was to encounter inevitably the opposition of the ruling classes, and at last to be overcome. Between the path of success as men counted it, and that of apparent failure and yet of truer success, Jesus deliberately chose the more difficult. The temptations that came to him throughout his entire career, in the wilderness, from enthusiastic followers, in cities and in country, and even from the disciples themselves, were all to induce him to turn aside from his ideal of a pure, devoted, sacrificial and divine life in the world, to that of a small, earthly ambition or of the avoidance of the more difficult problems he met.

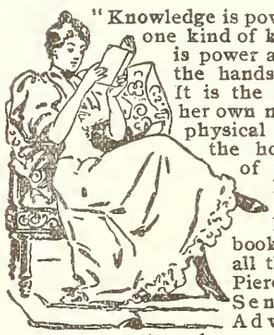
Seeing the whole vision of human life and its possibilities, Jesus deliberately chose to live that life which expressed in its fullness the highest level of human character. He was humble and unselfish, not because these were professional virtues which a religious teacher was supposed to possess, but because they were qualities necessary to the highest character and the deepest enjoyment of life. He submitted to death, because only in this way could he give attestation to his steadfast adherence to the deep qualities of his life, and at the same time meet the sins which were the causes of his death, in such a manner as to make them forever odious. He could have overcome his enemies by his power, but this would have defeated the purpose of his life and left his career with no other significance than that of an ordinary religious teacher with no great message for the world.

On the divine side, his death was the expression of that love which goes all lengths to satisfy itself in the saving of the object of love. That object was humanity. God's love to the world manifested itself in Christ. It is only a suffering love which can save. The death of Christ is, therefore, the expression both of the divine and human life in their truest aspects. The human life obedient and devoted to the universal good; the divine life reaching out to uplift and save. Into the mystery of the atonement no man has ever looked with clear vision. No doctrine has ever compassed its immeasurable extent, but such hints as the Scriptures afford, give to us glimpses of the human and the divine elements that entered into this majestic display of the divine purpose as manifested in the great redemption of our Lord.

Advance.

The time is opportune for an advance in Christian Endeavor. To fail now to enter in and possess the land is to become unworthy of our position.

Christian Endeavor has taken hold of our young people as nothing else ever has. Many students in our colleges, preachers in our pulpits, missionaries at home and abroad, Sunday-school teachers, prayer-meeting workers, deacons, elders and visitors of sick and needy are the direct product of the C. E. movement. The very life of the church has been quickened and her pulse made more firm and strong.



Thousands of young men and women brought face to face with the expression of their allegiance to Christ as outlined in the pledge have been led from worldly things and demoralizing amusement to a nobler type of Christianity in Christ Jesus.

As the national superintendent has said, to fail to go forward is to go backward. What must be done should be done quickly. By all means let us have the apostle of the C. E., J. Z. Tyler, in the field. Introduce and push the Bethany C. E. Rading Course everywhere. Arouse and interest the young men and women of our congregations and the question of missions, conversions, etc., is settled.

Ontario will do her part to help in this work. We want Bro. Tyler to visit us.

GEO. FOWLER.

St. Thomas, Ont.

"Knowledge is power." There is one kind of knowledge that is power and prestige in the hands of a woman. It is the knowledge of her own nature, her own physical make-up and the home-treatment of diseases peculiar to her sex. There is a great home medical book that teaches all this. It is Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. Over 1,200,000 American homes contain copies of this work. It used to cost $1.50; now it is free. For a paper covered copy send 21 one-cent stamps, to cover mailing only, to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.; French cloth binding, 31 stamps.

This great book tells all about a medicine that is an unfailing cure for all weakness and disease of the delicate organs distinctly feminine. That medicine is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. During the past thirty years many thousands of women have used it with marvelous results. It imparts health, vigor, virility, strength and elasticity to the organs that bear the burdens of maternity. It fits for wifehood and motherhood. Taken during the period of gestation, it makes the coming of baby easy and almost painless. It completely banishes the pain and misery that are the result of a woman's neglecting her womanly health. An honest medicine dealer will give you what you ask for, and not try to persuade you to take some inferior substitute for the little added profit he may make thereon.

Mrs. Jas. Schaffner, of Freemansburg, Northampton Co., Pa., writes: "It is with pleasure that I write to let you know the great good I have received from your medicines and the local self-treatment at home. I was troubled with female weakness, had pains in my back all the time, sometimes so severe that I could not lie in bed at night. I tried different doctors but they could not help me. Then my husband got Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, and induced me to try Dr. Pierce's medicines. After taking six bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' I feel like a new woman."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. Constipation is the cause of many diseases. Cure the cause and you cure the disease. One "Pellet" is a gentle laxative, and two a mild cathartic. Druggists sell them, and nothing is "just as good."

PRICE.

Ths death of Mrs. George Price, relict of Dr. George Price, deceased, occurred last Sunday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. A. J. Thomson, in New Albany, Ind., where she had made her home for several years. The remains arrived in this city [Abingdon, Ill.] Tuesday evening, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Thomson, and the funeral was held at the Christian Church Wednesday afternoon, C. G. Kindred officiating. Mrs. Price was born in Ohio, in 1808, and hence was 91 years of age. After the death of Dr. Price, in 1881, Mrs. Price made her home with her daughter. Mrs. Price was the mother of 11 children, only two of whom, survive her. She became a member of the Christian Church nearly 70 years ago and continued to be deeply interested in its work until the day of her death. She was among the charter members of the church in Abingdon. For the last 18 years of her life she was unable to attend any meetings of the church. These years were spent almost entirely in bed, but she never forgot the church nor allowed her interest in it to flag. On Sunday, the 22d of January, in the full consciousness of her mental faculties, she serenely closed her eyes and passed into her long awaited and longed-for rest. X.

SHARPE.

I was called to Watseka, Ill., on a sad mission, Sister Jennie Sharpe was dead, and her husband, O. E. Sharpe, wanted me there. Nov. 23, 1877, I baptized Bro. Sharpe. Some years later I conducted his ordination service. Soon after I married him to Miss Jennie Stiles, of Watseka, Ill. A year or more ago I spent a couple of weeks in their home and found it a Christian home of a high type. The children, Kenneth, Lucile, Orville, Wilfred and Clara, I loved. My heart bleeds for my dear brother and these children, robbed of so much in such a wife and mother. Sister Sharpe was 34 years old. While but a child she joined the Baptist Church. Afterward under Bro. Sharpe's ministry prior to their marriage she united with the Christian Church. She was a good and helpful wife for a preacher and a worker for the Master. At the time of her death she was president of the auxiliary at LeRoy, Ill. She died of an attack of la grippe, followed by fever. At Le Roy, Ill., where they lived and she died, Bro. W. W. Sniff preached a sermon to a crowded house, filled with brethren and citizens who knew her worth and came to sympathize with the stricken family. At Watseka, after my sermon and several selections of music by the Watseka quartette, led by the pastor, B. S. Ferrall, we laid the body away in the beautiful cemetery. Many hearts that have been comforted by Bro. Sharpe in their bereavements will give him and his dear children sweetest sympathy. She is absent from the body and present with the Lord. For her we will not mourn. E. L. FRAZIER.

SHELDON.

Elizabeth C. Rodgers was born in Hebron, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1833 and was married to Cyrus F. Sheldon in 1853. She departed this life in her home in Rupert, Vt., Jan. 24, 1899, aged 66 years and 10 days. Her husband and three sons are passing through deep waters, but God is with them in great mercy. Sister Sheldon obeyed the gospel when she was 16 years age and for 50 years advanced the gospel of Christ by a godly life and a pure conversation. We have lost one of our best members, but we know she sleeps well and we will be content.

W. W. WITMER.

West Rupert, Vt., Jan. 30, 1899.

STRANGE.

John H. Strange, minister of Carondelet Christian Church, St. Louis, Mo., passed away in the blessed hope Jan. 21, 1899, from the grip. He was born in Kentucky, July 1, 1836; married Nancy A. Gibler in Ohio, Feb. 25, 1861; joined the church when a boy. He has has done much good in the ministry and socially leaves a beautiful impression of right living where he has resided. I have known and loved him since 1893, when I was pastor at Anchor Hall. He moved to Lindenwood in 1896 and wrought most lovingly and faithfully in building the Lindenwood Church. The children cry for him in our homes and say, "Grandpa has gone to heaven to be with Jesus." Sister Strange, a son and daughter and their little ones sorrow over his unexpected departure.

SHE was a young wife, just married, from boarding school, and, although educated regardless of expense, didn't know beans from any other vegetable. Hence this dialogue with the cook:

"Now, Biddy, what are we to have for dinner?"

"There's two chickens to dress, mum."

"I'll dress them the first thing. Where are their clothes?"

"Why, mum, they're in their feathers yet."

"Oh, then, serve them that way. The ancient Romans always cooked their peacocks with their feathers on. It will be a surprise to hubby."

"It will that, mum. Shure, if you want to help, you could be parin' the turnips."

"Oh, how sweet! I'll pair them two and two in no time. Why, I had no idea cooking was so picturesque."

"I think, mum, that washing the celery do be more in your line."

"All right, Biddy. I'll take it up to the bath room, and I've some lovely Paris soap that will take off every speck."

"Thank you, mum. Would you mind telling me the name of the asylum where you were eddicated? I think I'll have to take some lessons there myself if we be going to work together."

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

CURRENT EVENTS.

President McKinley's speech at Boston last week, at the banquet of the Home Market Club, was eagerly looked forward to in the hope of a more definite declaration than has yet been made of the administration's plan regarding the Philippines. For those who expected a full and explicit statement of the kind of government which it is proposed to establish in those islands, how long it will be maintained and what military force will be needed to sustain it, the occasion must have been disappointing, for the speech dwelt upon none of these details. It was a justification of the policy which has been pursued up to date and a statement of the present situation and our present duty. The policy may be said to be controlled by these two factors: first, the conviction that it is our duty to give to the Philippines a free and stable government, which they cannot have without our aid; second, the conviction that the exact steps to be taken in fulfillment of that duty cannot be finally decided until we know more about the situation in the Philippines than we do at present. The President said: "No one can tell to-day what is best for them or for us. I know no one at this hour who is wise enough or sufficiently informed to determine what form of government will best subserve their interests, and our interests. If we knew everything by intuition—and I sometimes think there are those who believe that if we do not they do—we should not need information; but, unfortunately, most of us are not in that happy state." Those who are impatient to hear all the details of our proposed dealings with the Filipinos will do well to ponder these words and remember that neither they nor the President—nor any one else, in fact, except Senators Mason and Hoar—really knows all that is to be known about the Philippines.

The McEnery resolution was passed by the Senate early last week, contrary to our expectation, but much to our satisfaction. It cannot possibly do any harm, and if, non-committal as it is, it has the effect of comforting any troubled soul or removing any timid person's alarm, it will be so much good done at no expense. The temporary lathargy which overtook the Senate when it had ratified the treaty has now been shaken off. The fight with the Filipinos and the Army Bill have been fruitful of much talk on the same general topic. Senator Mason made a speech in which he declared that the recent fight was provoked by Americans with a view to influencing the vote on the treaty. This statement, taken by itself, we are not disposed to question, though we have no positive proof for it. It seems highly probable that the fight was provoked by Americans—but not by those in the field. There are some eminent (so-called) Americans in this country who have been giving aid and comfort to the Philippine emissary and who are not above the suspicion of having had a hand, through him, in bringing on the attack. But that is not what Mr. Mason means. He means that the American forces in the Philippines provoked the attack. We were not present when the attack was made; neither was the Senator from Illinois. We must, therefore, base our conclusions on testimony, and so must he. There are two sources of testimony. The official dispatches of Dewey and Otis state positively that the attack was begun by the Filipinos without provocation. The stories put in circulation by Agoncillo and the Philippine junta at Hong Kong state that the provocation came from the Americans. There seems scarcely room for a doubt as to which of these two sources Mr. Mason considers the more trustworty. We prefer to trust Dewey and Otis till they are contradicted by something more serious than Agoncillo's fables.

The Army Bill, which has passed the House after much modification, is having a harder time still in the Senate. The aim of its Republican supporters has been to keep it ahead of the Appropriation Bill, so that if it were delayed a special session would be necessary to vote the appropriations. It is becoming evident, however, that the Army Bill as reported by the Republican members of the committee will meet too much opposition among Republicans to leave it much of a chance to pass. It is generally conceded that a compromise will be necessary in order to avert total failure. The substitute bill proposed by the Democratic members of the military committee my be found an acceptable compromise. It provides for an increase of the army to about 62,000, for two years. In the House the Sunday Civil Bill has been passed, but without its two important riders. The ruling of Mr. Hopkins (chairman in committee of the whole), that the Nicaragua Canal Bill was out of order as an amendment to the Sunday Civil Bill, was sustained by the House in spite of Mr. Hepburn's opposition. This leaves the Canal Bill with comparatively little chance of passage in the House at this session. The ruling against the Canal Bill as an amendment involved also the rejection of the clause appropriating the twenty million dollars which Spain is to receive in compensation for the Philippines. This will have to be provided for in a special bill.

The mission of Lord Charles Beresford to this country is a matter of some significance in view of our new relations to the Orient. He is returning from a tour of investigation in China for the associated chambers of commerce of Great Britain. It has been his purpose to ascertain the present condition of trade in China with a view to formulating a policy for its encouragement. The theory advocated by Lord Charles is that the "open door" in China is the sine qua non of prosperity for that kingdom and profitable commercial intercourse for others. To secure this open door and the commercial success which will come with it, he believes that it will be necessary to employ military measures to ensure the maintenance of law and order. These measures should be the work, not of the various powers separately, but of a confederation of those powers which have the most important commercial interests at stake. The Untied States, Great Britain, Germany and Japan should unite for this purpose. Russia and France are left out of his plan on the ground that their interest in the Orient is, both primarily and ultimately, military. Lord Charles protests against the partition of the Chinese and against the "sphere-of-influence" policy, for which there is no logical outcome except in the partition of the empire among the several claimants. So far as the general principles of his plan are concered, Lord Charles seems to us to have the best of the argument. He says that, judging from the present American foreign policy as it appears to the world, America ought to be very willing to enter such a union as he defines, for the preservation of peace and the guarantee of equal commercial privileges in China. He has spoken before a number of chambers of commerce since he landed at San Francisco and has everywhere been well received.

The Canadian commissioners, who are representing British interests in the conference at Washington over the Alaska boundary, are holding rigidly to their original contention, just as if they thought they had a reasonable case. What they want is to secure one or more harbors on the Coast of Alaska and a right of way to the Klondike, without passing through our territory. In 1825, while Alaska still belonged to Russia, the boundary line between British Columbia and Alaska was defined as a treaty between Russia and Great Britain. By this treaty, the line was to start from the coast at the fifty-sixth parallel of latitude and should follow the peaks of the mountain chains nearest the coast, but the important proviso was that the line should never be nearer the coast than ten marine leagues. Where the line crosses the 141st meridian the boundary turns due north to the Arctic Ocean. Exploration has shown that instead of the supposed "chain" of mountains, there is only a confused jumble of isolated peaks, some of which are very near to the coast. The British claim now is that the line should follow the peaks, regardless of the important proviso mentioned above. Since the coast is much indented, and some of the peaks are on promontories, this arrangement would mean for us the surrender of nearly all the harbor. The American contention is that, in the absence of any chain of mountains, the "ten-league" proviso ought to determine the boundary. For seventy-three years our title to this strip of territory has been recognized by British official publications and official actions, as well as by the rest of the world. The discovery of gold in the Klondike Creek aroused the desire for British Harbors at the nearest point, and "the wish was father to the thought" that this old treaty could be re-interpreted to advantage. Perhaps the Canadian commissioners are only trying to establish a claim which they can surrender in exchange for tariff concessions. At any rate they are holding on so firmly that the joint commission is at a deadlock, so far as this point is concerned.

The proposed intercontinental railway to afford direct communication between New York and Buenos Ayres without change of cars is a railroad enterprise which in magnitude, daring and commercial importance is worthy to be classed with the Russo-Chinese railway and Cecil Rhodes' proposed line from Cairo to Cape Town. The survey for this great American trunk line was authorized by the Pan-American Congress in 1889 and the results have now been published. The total length of the line would be 10,221 miles, but roads now in existence in the United States and Mexico would cover over 3,000 miles of this distance, while Argentine has nearly a thousand miles of railroad extending north from Buenos Ayres, and there are a few hundred miles of track in between. The amount of new track required would be about 5,500 miles. It is not proposed that the road shall be constructed by the governments either severally or jointly. The purpose of the survey was to call attention to the project as a desirable commercial undertaking, to prove that it is a feasible scheme and to encourage private capital to take hold of it. The estimated cost is $175,000,000.

The death of M. Faure, President of France, was an event entirely unexpected even to his immediate family. An attack of apoplexy on last Thursday evening proved fatal after an illness of three hours. The death of the President at this critical time created not only profound grief, but also no little apprehension lest there might be an upheaval of the government. This anxiety, however, was short-lived. There was no disorder during the brief interval before the election of a successor, and the Ministry, with M. Dupuy at its head, maintained a firm grasp on the situation. At no time was there any real danger to the Republican party, though the occasion might have been used to advantage by a pretender if there had been one of any real force. M. Faure was a man of unquestioned integrity and excellent business sense, having risen from poverty to wealth by his own exertions and business sagacity, a man of distinguished presence and stately bearing, but in no sense a man of genius either as a statesman, a writer or an orator. His attitude in the Dreyfus case was conservative and non-committal. M. Loubet, president of the Senate, who has been elected to the Presidency of the republic as M. Faure's successor, is in this latter respect a true successor. It is said that no one knows whether he is in favor of revision or not. After all, the opinions of the French President are not the matter of greatest concern, for there are several men who will have more influeuce on the administration than he.

The President of the French Republic is elected for a term of seven years by a joint session of the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies, a method analogous to our mode of electing United States senators. On the removal of a President by death or resignation an election is held at once, and a successor chosen for a full term of seven years. The Presidency of France presents more points of contrast than of analogy to our highest executive office. The position more nearly corresponds to that of a constitutional monarch, whose power is further limited by the existence of a responsible Ministry. It is not the President's administration, but the administration of the Ministry. The fall of one political party and the rise of another into power means a change of Ministry, but does not involve a change of President. He is supposed to be the non-partisan head of the whole nation, and only the Ministry is responsible for a particular policy. On the election of a new President the resignation of the former Ministry is placed in his hands. In the present case, however, at the request of President Loubet, the Dupuy Cabinet will continue in office, and there will be no occasion for alteration in the previous policy of the government.

The island of Crete, now freed from her old oppressor and governed by her own chosen champion, Prince George, of Greece, is having a chance to prove to the world her fitness or unfitness for self-government. If she behaves herself moderately well, the nominal protectorate of the powers will amount to practical independence. So far the Cretan populace and especially the Christian part of it, has not exhibited great self-control, but has rather shown a deplorable tendency to quarrel within itself, murder people and plunder the disarmed Mohammedans. That the Mohammedans have been somewhat more orderly is due to the fact that at present they possess inferior facilities for raising a disturbance. It is related with manifest pride that not a man was killed on the day when Prince George assumed control of the government, the impression being conveyed that this is an extraordinary day's work. The Cretans have had a long training in violence under their Turkish masters, and it will not be at all surprising or greatly to their discredit if they cannot at once settle down to orderly government without external assistance. It may be necessary for the powers to make their protectorate more than a merely nominal affair to maintain peace. Prince George has, however, absolute authority and his task, while difficult, is not impossible. Crete's fortunes are now in her own hands. She can have just as much liberty and independence as she can use.

SOME REASONS FOR GIVING TO MISSIONS.

We have a few words we wish to say directly to churches and brethren who have hitherto been non-contributors to our missionary work abroad. It seems to us a reproach that so large a number of our churches belong to this class. Even in the churches where the offering for foreign missions is made there is a large proportion of members who give nothing. We would like to be able to make these churches and brethren see that they are not only injuring the work, but themselves, by this course. We feel absolutely sure that such is the case, and we believe that this can be made to appear even to those who have hitherto stood aloof from this work.

The fundamental condition of success in all church work is to work with Christ, and thus secure His presence and His strength. There can be no doubt but that the great desire and purpose of Christ is that His gospel should be preached among all nations, and that all men should have the opportunity of believing in Him and being saved by Him. He has laid this work upon His church; He has promised to be with it while so engaged, even unto the consummation of the age. Is it not plain, therefore, that if we desire the presence of Christ with us, and His blessing upon our work, that we must share in this great duty that He has laid upon his church?

The churches most likely to neglect the duty of making an offering are the weak churches. They are few in numbers, none of them rich in this world's goods, probably have not a suitable building, and are unable to employ a preacher for his whole time. Many of this class of churches are in the habit of making a sort of breastwork out of these excuses and conditions by which they protect themselves from the appeals in our papers and from our pulpits. But will these excuses stand in the light of the foregoing statements? How can a weak church become strong otherwise than by the blessing of God upon it and its work? How can it secure this blessing except by engaging, according to the measure of its ability, in doing the work for which the church exists? The church that is poor, that is in debt, that has no house of its own in which to meet, that is unable to secure a pastor for all his time, cannot make a better investment than by making a liberal offering, according to its means, to the work of missions.

The incredulous will ask, "How can this be?" It seems to them contrary to reason. However that may be, it is not contrary to faith nor to experience. The reflex influence upon the church of this unselfish act quickens the spiritual life, increases faith, intensifies zeal, makes Christianity more real, teaches the lesson of sacrifice for others, commends the church to those outside, and draws down upon it the blessing of God. Try the experiment and see if this be not true. Let the elder or preacher of such congregation say: "Brethren, we feel that we are poor, but we are rich in comparison with those who have never heard the gospel and have never learned the blessedness of Christ's promises. By so much as we prize our knowledge of Christ and of his salvation let us share this blessing with the pagan world that lies in darkness. Let us be faithful in the little that we have, and God will give us more." That would be a good sermon, and it would secure an offering that would bless the church.

There is strength in fellowship; in the feeling that we are a part of a great host, who are working together for the advancement of the kingdom of God. There will be a new interest and a new joy in reading the reports of success in foreign fields if we have contributed our share towards the work. The tide of spiritual life will flow in stronger currents through those churches that have a part in the great work of the world's evangelization. They will feel that they are not useless members of the body ecclesiastic, but an integral part of that advancing army seeking the conquest of the world for Christ.

There are hundreds and thousands of individual members in churches where strong appeals are made from the pulpit, and where the offering is made for missions, who have neither part nor lot in this matter. As a rule, these members do not read our religious journals and have not been brought into sympathy with the best life and thought among us and with these efforts for world-wide evangelism. Their horizons are narrow, their sympathies are contracted, their spiritual life is dwarfed, because their hearts and minds are not nourished and strengthened by spiritual food and spiritual activity. Not only is the missionary treasury deprived of their contributions, and the heathen world of their assistance, but the worst feature is, their own souls are impoverished, if not destroyed, by such inaction and neglect. It should be the earnest effort, therefore, of every congregation to enlist every member in this annual offering for his own sake as well as for the sake of the cause.

Jesus said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Do the non-contributing churches and brethren believe this? Very few of them are unwilling to receive assistance from the mission board, or from some generous preacher who donates his services. Why should they neglect the "more blessed" thing? There is a blessedness in unselfish giving which we can receive in no other way. Perhaps this is the "one thing" which thou "lackest," thou non-contributing church or brother.

If now we have made it clear that churches and individuals wrong themselves and impoverish their own lives by not giving to the cause of missions, we have accomplished our purpose. We are sure it would be the universal testimony of all the churches who contribute regularly to the cause of missions that they have been spiritually enlarged and helped in every way by so doing. We sincerely trust, therefore, that wherever the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST goes and is read, every church will make its offering, and every individual will see that his contribution forms a part of that offering.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE NATION.

The religion of Christ is indispensable to the progress and welfare of a nation. Religion is the basis of civilization, and no civilized state can exist and prosper that is not penetrated by religious and moral principles. The nation and the social compact, like the individual, must choose between religion and destruction. The unbelieving nation, like the unbelieving individual, will be damned. Statesmen and theologians are heartily agreed as to the indispensability of religion to the welfare of a people. We have often heard the opinions on this question, of George Washington, Thos. Jefferson, Andrew Jackson and Daniel Webster, and this list might be indefinitely extended. We have heard these great Americans say, in their own language, that religion, morality and knowledge are three indispensable elements of civilization, of all stable and acceptable government. Napoleon believed that this was so. Queen Victoria said that the Bible was the secret of England's greatness; and General Grant said in one of his inaugural addresses that the inspired volume was the sheet anchor of our liberties.

We are familiar with the story of the French statesman and philosopher who came to ascertain the secret of the prosperity and greatness of this American nation. The French monarchy and despotism had been overthrown by revolution and the French nation was looking round for something solid on which to rest the reorganization of its shattered government. One of its great men was sent to this country to study our institutions and to report on the secret of our success. In rendering his account to the French assembly, he said that he had climbed our mountains, navigated our rivers, compassed our valleys, walked the streets of our cities, read our constitution, conversed with our statesmen; but it was not till he entered our churches that he found the secret of our greatness. Ministers all over the land preaching the gospel of Christ to multitudes of people he found to be the explanation of the permanence and greatness of American civilization.

Why has the Anglo-Saxon race outstripped all other nations of the earth in the elements of material and moral power? Why has she been the only successful colonizer, educator and missionary of knowledge and progress among the inferior and undeveloped races of mankind? Is the Anglo-Saxon the master of the world because of his intellectual, physical and numerical superiority over the rest of the species? He is less numerous than the other great races, and his physical prowess is not greater than theirs. In point of intellectual brilliancy, literary genius and political experience, we are not the superiors of the Latin races. In the field of deep knowledge, scholarship, science and philosophy, the Teutons are in advance of us. Why have we outstripped the rest of humanity in all the fields of high achievement and civilization? Mr. Kidd, in his great book on "Social Evolution," says that this question is answered by the one word, religion. He demonstrates with overwhelming conclusiveness that the superior type of Christianity accepted and taught by our fathers, and wrought into the texture of all our race movements, solves the problem of the advanced moral, social and political evolution of the Anglo-Saxon nations. Without a single exception, those countries that fell in line with the Reformation of the sixteenth century have bounded forward in the path of a higher, broader and deeper civilization; while those that chose the alternative of abiding in the paganized Christianity of Romanism have steadily declined. Italy and Spain are as completely bankrupt in moral stamina as they are in money. England and Holland, the birthplaces of modern liberty, stand out as conspicuous types of living nations.

France from the first has been a barren soil for New Testament truth and reformation principles. A French priest has declared that light wines, light novels, light labor and light principles of morality are the stock in trade of French civilization. The murcurial land of the Revolution, the Commune and the Dreyfus case has worshiped the impure, has fashioned her god after the image of the unclean beast of the Apocalypse till the sanctity of the marriage vow and of the family has given way before the appalling fact that the nation is on the decrease. France has rejected God, and God has rejected France. Atheism pays dear for its whistle. Happy is the nation that makes the Lord its God. The Devil must go out of politics, and God must go in, or the United States will go the way of France. Every great book written on national politics, ethics, economics or the social compact is the expansion of the biblical statement, "Righteousness exalts a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

Democracy is the highest form of government, because it is self-government; but there can be no self-government without intelligence and morality; or, as Thos. Jefferson expressed it, without "Religion, Morality and Knowledge." The danger that threatens our country is that it is being filled up with people who possess none of these qualities, and there is little appreciation of the gravity of the situation on the part of some that do. We have just opened a letter between this sentence and the last, in which a prominent leader of thought and reform in the Baptist Church writes: "We want no squeamishness now about mixing religion and politics. The country is going to the bad because Christian men do not realize their duty to take religion into civil affairs." There are indications, however, of a hopeful change in this direction. We have heard recently of several ministers and leading citizens going to the bosses of the dominant parties in their communities, and saying to them emphatically: "If you dare to put up a dirty, disreputable character to represent you in this race, we will snow you under beyond the hope of resurrection. If you will put up a clean man, who will stand for decency and morality in legislation and the administration of our civil affairs, we will support you with our votes and influence." If the boss has reason to believe that this declaration is backed up by the balance of power, he will come to time. The only thing needed is that righteousness and decency shall assert themselves. The next great reform in this country is the purification of politics, and the retirement into "innocuous disuetude" of the uncleangang, who have been at once the curse and the menace of our civilization.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The attack on our American forces at Manila by the Filipinos, pending the ratification of the Paris treaty, has stirred up a good deal of feeling among the friends of the treaty in this country, and has caused some extreme statements concerning the opponents of the treaty that are to be regretted. Differing as we have done totally from the positions of Senators Hoar, Hale, Gorman and others, we have never believed them to be traitors to their country and conspirators against its honor and welfare. We have found fault with these men chiefly, not because of their opposition to expansion or to the treaty, but because they have so utterly misrepresented the spirit and purpose of the American people in the late war and in the treaty. The have represented it as the purpose of the government in the ratification of the treaty to "exploit" the Philippine Islands for its own use and to hold the people of these islands in a state of vassalage to the American people. There can be no question but that these statements have been believed by leading Filipinos and that they have had much to do in shaping their course of hostility. It is hardly credible, that if the Filipinos understood the real aim and desire of the United States Government concerning them, they would make war against it. One reason why they have not understood our purpose is this misrepresentation to which we have referred.

Against the sentiments of those pessimists who see nothing but rapine and plunder and slaughter in the Philppines, and all for selfish purposes, we put a few extracts from the President's speech last week at Home Market Club banquet at Boston. He said:

"Our concern was not for territory, or trade, or empire, but for the people whose interests and destiny, without our willing it, had been put into our hands. It was with this feeling that from the first day to the last not one word or line went from the executive in Washington to our military and naval commanders at Manila or to our peace commissioners at Paris that did not put as the sole purpose to be kept in mind first after the success of our arms and the maintenance of our own honor, the welfare and happiness and the rights of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands. The future of the Philippine Islands is now in the hands of the American people. . . That treaty now commits the free and enfranchised Filipinos to the guiding hand and the liberalizing influences, the generous sympathies, the uplifting education, not of their American masters, but of their emancipators. . . The whole subject is now with Congress, and Congress is the voice, the conscience and the judgment of the American people. Upon their judgment and conscience can we not rely? I believe in them; I trust them. I know of no better or safer human tribunal than the people."

It is refreshing to know that our Chief Executive has not lost faith in the honor and integrity of the people of this nation, nor in their capacity for self-government.

Speaking further of the spirit and purpose of the American people in their occupation of these islands, the President further says:

"That the inhabitants of the Philippines will be benefited by this republic is my unshaken belief; that they will have a kindlier government under our guidance, and that they will be aided in every possible way to be self-respecting and self-governing people is as true as that the American people love liberty and have an abiding faith in their own government and their own institutions. No imperial designs lurk in the American mind. They are alien to American sentiment, thought and purpose. Our priceless principles undergo no change under a tropical sun. They are wrought in every one of its sacred folds and are inextinguishable in their shining stars. They go with the fiat:

'Why read ye not the changeless truth,
The free can conquer but to save?'

"If we can benefit these remote peoples, who will object? If in the years of the future they are established in government under law and liberty, who will regret our perils and sacrifices; who will not rejoice in our heroism and humanity? We always have perils and always pass them safely. Always darkness and clouds, but always shining through them the light and the sunshine, always cost and sacrifice, but always after them the fruition of liberty, education and civilization."

In that splendid statement the President reflects the real and true American aim and spirit.

The President closes his speech, which in all probability will be recited by future patriotic Filipinos in their orations and printed in their schoolbooks, with the following eloquent peroration:

"I have no light or knowledge not common to my countrymen. I do not prophesy. The present is all-absorbing to me, but I cannot bind my vision by the blood-stained trenches around Manila, where every red drop, whether from the veins of an American soldier or a misguided Filipino, is an anguish to my heart; but by the broad range of future years, when that group of islands under the impulse of the year just past shall have become the gems and glories of those tropical seas, a land of plenty and of increasing possibilities, a people redeemed from savage indolence and habits, devoted to the arts of peace, in touch with the commerce and trade of all nations, enjoying the blessings of freedom, of civil and religious liberty, of education and of homes, and whose children and children's children shall for ages hence bless the American Republic because it emancipated and redeemed their fatherland and set them in the pathway of the world's best civilization."

The Easy Chair makes no apology for occupying its space this week with the treatment of this question, now so prominent in the thought of the American people, by one whose utterances carry with them more weight than those of any other man in the United States. We believe the President on this question represents the American people fairly. We are not aggressive; we are not imperialists. No slave can ever crouch and tremble beneath our flag. We love liberty and self-government, and we desire that others shall share its blessings. We are liberators, not oppressors. Blind as the Filipinos seem to be at present to their own interests, they are yet to understand us better and to be a free and independent people under the guiding and fostering hand of the great Republic of the West.

Hour of Prayer.

MISSIONS THE HEART OF CHURCH LIFE.

(Matt. 28:16-20; Rom. 10:11-15).

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, March 1st.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The supreme business of the Church is to make known the Gospel to all nations, make disciples of the people, and afterwards instruct them in the things of the Kingdom of God.

The first passage cited above takes us to the mountain top in Galilee, where Jesus had an appointment to meet his disciples after his resurrection. Standing in the midst of the eleven, this Carpenter of Galilee, who had conquered death and the grave, claimed that all authority had been given unto him in heaven and on earth. In view of this supreme authority He commanded to "make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Wonderful scene! Wonderful words! Let us study them.

1. All authority. Nothing short of this would have been adequate for such a world-wide Commission. Back of the missionary effort, then, let us remember, is "all authority in heaven and in earth." Surely, that ought to be sufficient authority for missionary effort. This enthrones Christ where he has no rival; He is "Lord over all."

2. All the nations. Jesus' mission was not to the Jews alone, but ultimately to all the nations of the earth. He taught and established a universal religion; that is, one adapted to our universal needs. His religion alone can satisfy the demands of the human soul. This is why the obligation rests upon the Church to send it to all the kindreds and tribes and peoples of earth. [Let a number of persons be called on here to state some things which Christ gives to men that no other religion can give.]

3. All things whatsoever I have commanded you. Those who are discipled are then to be taught to "observe" all things commanded by Christ. Obedience is required, not in one thing only, but in "all things." We cannot atone for disobedience in one part of Christ's teaching by obedience to another part. We must observe "all things" which Christ has commanded.

4. Alway. Jesus Christ thus promises to be with his disciples "alway, even unto the end of the world," or the consummation of the age. This is a most precious promise. It is made to those who are seeking to evangelize the world and to instruct disciples in the way of Christian life and duty. This is what the Church is for, and in proportion as it engages in this work may it claim Christ's presence and help.

The second passage referred to above again emphasizes the universality of the Gospel, there being "no distinction between Jew and Greek: for the same Lord is Lord of all, and is rich unto all that call upon Him; for whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." This note of universality makes the Gospel good news for all men, and all men should hear of it.

But the apostle raises some questions with a view to emphasize the responsibility of those who have the Gospel to send it to them who have it not. Here are the questions:

1. "How, then, shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed?"—the connection between faith and prayer (Heb. 11:6).

2. "How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard?"—the connection between hearing and believing (Rom. 10:17).

3. "And how shall they hear without a preacher?"—the connection between the duty of hearing and the duty of preaching.

4. "How shall they preach except they be sent?"—the connection between the duty of preaching and the duty of the Church in sending and sustaining the preachers.

This is the chain of reasoning that binds the obligation upon the Church to send preachers of good tidings into all the world. Our prayers should be at this meeting that the Church may recognize this responsibility which Christ has laid upon it; that each individual member may realize his responsibility, which cannot be evaded by his relation to the Church as a collective body.

PRAYER.

O, Thou who art the God of missions, and who didst send Thy Son into the world to bring glad tidings of good things to a lost race, wilt Thou be pleased to open the ears of the Church that it may hear the word of command from our ascended Master, bidding us make disciples of all the nations. May we realize anew, and as never before, our obligation to share with others the blessings of Thy salvation. Put it into the hearts of many of Thy loyal servants to go forth into the wide field of missions with the message of salvation, and put it into the hearts of Thy people to support them while they are engaged in this work. In Christ's name. Amen!

THE PROGRAM OF MISSIONS.

There are four items in a missionary program. The first is, Go. Christianity is nothing if not aggressive. Its Author charged his disciples to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. They were to testify concerning him in Jerusalem, and in Judea, and Samaria, and to the uttermost part of the earth. Our Lord was perpetually in motion. He sent "the twelve" and "the seventy" before his face to let the people know that he was coming. His apostles went out and preached everywhere. The gospel must be carried to all the ends of the earth,or the nations will not be reached and won.

The second item is, Send. Some cannot go; they do not have the required qualifications. Or if they are perfectly qualified they are so situated that they are not free to go. These can send. One woman in poor health gave half her income to support a substitute. Two sisters combined to send a third to Africa. A business man assumed the expense of forty-one missionaries. Because one cannot go out he ought not to think that no obligation rests upon him. He can serve the Lord most effectively in his business at home while his representative carries on the work.

The third item is, Give. We are stewards of God's manifold grace. The silver and gold belong to him. What we have in our hands we hold in trust for the advancement of his cause. He requires of us that we give as he has prospered us. As we abound in everything, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in love, we should see to it that we abound in the grace of giving also. We should know the grace of the Lord Jesus, that, though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be rich.

The last item is, Pray. We are told to pray the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth laborers into his harvest. We are told that we can help this cause by prayer. No petition comes from the field so frequently as this: "Pray for us." This duty lies within the reach of every redeemed soul. One may say that he is unable to go out as a missionary, he may plead that he is unable to do much toward sending, that he is unable to give anything, but he can at the mercy-seat ask God to guide and bless and prosper the work and the workers.

The time for the one annual offering in the churches for Foreign Missions is at hand. The gifts this year should be on a scale of unprecedented liberality. Those who have gone out should be amply supported. Others who are ready should be sent to reinforce them. With the whole body of believers enlisted the gospel will be carried in a short time to every kindred and tongue and tribe and people on the globe.

Questions and Answers.

Why is it that "water" precedes "Spirit" in John 3:5, "Born of the water and of the Spirit," when all religious teachers, except those who practice infant baptism, teach that the work of the Spirit precedes baptism? Discipulus.

Perhaps the reason for this order, if we are to attach any special importance to it, is to be found in the fact that the baptism of John was at the time this language was spoken the only baptism in existence, and John himself described his baptism as a baptism "in water," whereas Christ would baptize in the Spirit. Nicodemus knew probably of John's baptism, and Christ's purpose may have been to impress upon him the fact that there was a spiritual element to be added to that in order to entrance into his kingdom, which was to be a spiritual kingdom. In whatever way we may account for it, however, one thing is certain, and that is that without faith in Christ, working a change of heart and purpose, no baptism in water avails anything. It is to be said, however, that there is a "gift of the Holy Spirit" as an indwelling guest promised to the baptized believer (Acts 2:38) which conforms to the order in the passage referred to.

Are not the elders to rule the church? Have they not the authority to dismiss members, dismiss and elect deacons, dismiss and hire a pastor without asking for the voice of the congregation upon such questions? An Elder.

This would be presbyterianism, but not congregationalism. According to the congregational theory the elders are the organs through which the church acts and carries out its purposes. It is true, there is a sense in which they are to rule, but this is by their character, their moral influence, their superior ability and the official responsibility laid upon them; but not by arbitrary authority. When they transcend the limits of the work they have been appointed to do, it is in the power of the congregation which elected them to call them to account. Otherwise we have the seeds of popery in the eldership, and, as a matter of fact, the Pope himself is only an overgrown elder. In the matter of dismissing members or removing and electing deacons or employing and dismissing pastors, their power is only advisory, and should have the sanction of the congregation before it is effective. A great deal of confusion and trouble arises by the exercise of arbitrary authority on the part of the preacher or of the elders. Those churches get on most smoothly and successfully whose eldership, including the pastor, regard themselves as servants of the congregation, teaching, admonishing and advising them and submitting their recommendations in all administrative affairs to the approval of the church.

How can we expect the bulk of our church members to grow spiritually when they are not in the Sunday-school, nor do they read our religious journals? C.

The question is a very vital one and touches the weak spot in our methods of church work and service. The church is seldom regarded as a school in which the members are to study the science and art of Christian living, and seek to become acquainted with the deeper things of the kingdom of God. The teaching function of the church is now largely discharged through the Sunday or Bible-school, which only a small per cent. of the older members attend. The others have no systematic study of the Bible,and only a minority of them, as our querist indicates, even read any of our religious journals. Under these circumstances it is not to be wondered at that the rank and file of our membership make such slow progress in religious growth. A remedy was recently suggested in these columns which brought out a number of expressions of approval, looking toward making the Sundaymorning service more ofthe character of a school in which the Word of God is to be taught to the people. One of our correspondents tells of his experience in this kind of work, and it would be well for other churches to see what can be done toward bringing their membership under some sort of systematic instruction. A greater effort should be made, too, than is made in most churches to secure the more general reading of, at least, one of our best religious papers among the membership.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

INTRODUCTORY PERIOD.

IV. The Union Principle Applied—Union with the "Christian" Reformers.

BY CHARLES LOUIS LOOS.

(Concluded.)

Wherever in our earlier days the "Christians" came into close acquaintance with the "Disciples," the name by which those in sympathy with the Bethany movement were generally called, for reasons already stated, a sympathy at once grew up between them. The effect was that in Eastern Ohio and in Pennsylvania, without any formal action, many of the former, not only individuals, but entire congregations, led by the preachers, coalesced with the latter, and the two became permanently one.

I am familiar with this territory and its religious history, and can speak advisedly; hardly a congregation was left out of the union in Eastern Ohio.

In Central Ohio it was otherwise. The Bethany reformers had not yet reached this region, except in a sporadic way, as in Clinton county; indeed, our cause has never been strong as elsewhere in that territory. The consequence was that the "Bible Christians" maintained there their original distinct identity. In the state generally, however, this people were greatly weakened by the extensive absorption by our reformation of their membership, the preachers often included, in the eastern portion and in some other localities.

UNION WITH THE CHRISTIANS IN KENTUCKY.

In Kentucky, in the Bluegrass region, where the two reformatory currents, the one led by B. W. Stone, the other by A. Campbell, had already gained considerable force, a strong fellowship had grown up between their public advocates and their private adherents. An earnest disposition to unite was manifested. Finally, formal conferences were held at Georgetown for four days, and afterwards at Lexington, in which the ablest men in that region on both sides were active; and after full and friendly discussion of the points of agreement and difference, it was decided to enter into full fraternization. The two streams henceforth flowed on in one channel.

THE BASIS OF UNION.

The two sides did not come to an entire agreement on certain points that had hitherto divided them. A. Campbell and those with him who had come from the Baptists were very decided in their views on the divinity of Christ, the three persons in the Godhead, and the atonement. B. W. Stone had held a position on these important subjects that, in the judgment of the religious community, savored of Unitarianism. It was found, however, on a full exchange of views, that the Stone men had a much sounder conception of the divinity of Christ and the atonement than had been attributed to them. They had been, as was quite natural, the object of intense prejudice and consequent misrepresentation by the denominations, especially the one from which they had gone forth. They had experienced the common lot of reformers. It is not unlikely that A. Campbell himself had been influenced to some extent by this general tide of hostile sentiment that assailed these reformers. At a later day he freely expressed his better appreciation of them and their doctrinal position.

"In Kentucky and the Southwest generally," he wrote, "this [i. e., speculating about the modus of the divine existence,] is getting out of fashion, and many of the congregations called 'Christians' are just as sound in the faith of Jesus as the only begotten Son of God, in the plain import of these words, as any congregations with which I am acquainted."

It was agreed, indeed earnestly insisted on by all at the conferences held, that all speculations on the great subjects above named—as in all other matters of Christian doctrine—should be discouraged, and that only the evident, positive teaching of the Holy Scriptures should be taught in all fidelity, and "not the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but in the words which the Holy Spirit teacheth." It was urged that this method would more and more bring about correct conceptions and a correct teaching of the doctrine of Christ in all things, and complete harmony. Misconceptions on these vital subjects, it was justly argued, were largely the fruit of the passion of theological speculation that had so long and so injuriously prevailed in Christendom.

While A. Campbell and others on his side were not altogether satisfied with the explanations given by Stone and his brethren, yet they wisely yielded and accepted the full fellowship and co-operation of these brethren. Some twenty-five years after this act of union I received the account of it and of its result from the mouth of A. Campbell himself. It was not an easy matter for him to consent to any fellowship with even the mildest form of Arianism, but he had the wisdom and the charity to allow the judgment of such men as J. T. Johnson to prevail. He had, moreover, a strong confidence in the salutary operation of the great principles of union which he had himself so strongly advocated, and therefore in the fraternal alliance here consummated with such men as Stone and the noble men associated with him. In this confidence he was not deceived.

What decided the reformers who stood with A. Campbell to enter into this union with the "Christians?" This is certainly a question of deep interest to us.

Let me give the answer briefly, based on careful study of the case.

1. As already stated, these "Christians" were earnest biblical reformers, resolved to stand on the Bible alone. They had rejected all creeds; had adopted the immersion of penitent believers as the only scriptural baptism. They were most reverent of Jesus Christ as the Lord of life and glory and as the Savior and Redeemer of men by his death on the cross.

2. They were ready and zealous to learn the way of life more perfectly; there was with them no "hitherto and no further," in Bible knowledge, as with men bound by creeds.

3. Like the brethren of the other side, they were resolved to keep aloof from all speculations on matters of faith and duty, and to teach only the Word, in the thoughts and language of Christ and the apostles.

4. Finally—and this was a capital matter—Stone and his brethren were noted for their noble manliness of character, their piety and religious zeal. They were men worthy of the highest confidence. A. Campbell repeatedly bore strong witness to this.

On these grounds this union was effected. Of course, these intelligent men on both sides knew very well that it was altogether possible, and no uncommon thing, to use scriptural speech and give it a meaning quite foreign to that intended by the sacred writers. This was indeed urged. The confidence in this union, however, was strong because of the eminent character for intelligence, sincerity, piety and supreme devotion to the Word of God of B. W. Stone and the men who were with him.

It is also well known that these "Christian" reformers for years did not occupy precisely the same ground with A. Campbell and his brethren on the subject of the operation of the Spirit and the object of baptism. Unity on these points, however, was soon reached.

And now as to the result of this union.

This is a very instructive history and of the greatest moment to the proper appreciation of the principles of Christian union proposed by this reformation.

First of all and most evident, is the fact that by means of this alliance an immense force, in the numbers and the character of the people brought into the union, was added to the army of New Testament reformers. It is not easy to calculate with any sort of accuracy the additional strength thus acquired. There must be taken into the account not only the "Christian" Churches, but eminently also the not inconsiderable company of preachers, not a few of them strong men, that was united with the other body of able ministers of the Word advocating a return to primitive Christianity, together now constituting a mighty host of valiant reformers. This new increase of strength extended especially over the important territory of Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, and later of Missouri, a vast field especially favorable to religious reform. That this accession gave our reformation a mighty impulse is beyond all question. Who acquainted with our history does not know what was gained by winning to our cause such men as Samuel and John Rogers, J. A. Gano, T. M. Allen, Henry D. and Francis R. Palmer and others that might be named, besides B. W. Stone himself. A long list of younger men, who became great preachers, might be named, who were brought to us by this union. Much of the marvelous advance our plea has made in the states above named and in the great West, generally, is beyond a doubt largely owing to the union of the "Christians" with the "Disciples."

But that which is most instructive to us in this important page of our history, is the demonstration it affords of the justness and safety of the principle of union advocated by us, and vindicated in this instance.

Let the reader bear carefully in mind the basis of the union effected, and also—and this is very essential to a proper judgment in this case—what the real doctrinal position of this body of "Christians" was, and the character of their preachers, all of which has been stated above. All these conditions made the proposal of union wise and safe. For, let me repeat it, the principle of union the Campbells advocated did notjustify a coalescence of elements that have doctrinally no affinity with each other. No fraternal incorporation with us of a people fundamentally at variance with us in the essential elements of the doctrine of Christ could have been proposed or accepted. But the condition of things being as above described, what was the result?

It was this:

In the churches of Eastern Ohio where an alliance was effected, the supreme power of A. Campbell and of the doctrinal position he occupied relative to the points of divergence between the Disciples and the "Christians" soon revealed itself. The penumbra of Unitarianistic ideas gradually passed away before the powerful arguments of the Campbells, Scott, and their compeers, and gave place to the full light of truth on the most momentous facts revealed in the New Testament, the divinity of Jesus Christ, and the atonement based upon it. Those only who have lived in the very heart of this remarkable transformation can have a just notion of what it was.

I believe I am justified in saying that, as a general fact, so far as the case demanded it, the same result followed relative to the "Christians" in Kentucky and in the South and West, and for the same reasons.

These excellent, truly Christian people on both sides, by this union became truly brethren; they were no longer two parties, but had now become one. They "loved one another;" were not only willing, but desirous to "see eye to eye." This is a capital point in the matter. They were ready and eager to learn, and they knew and felt that there was no hindrance to this. What more natural, then, than that the truth, wherever it was among them, and which is always the stronger, especially in very strong hands, should prevail.

This trace of Arianism, faint and evanescent as it certainly was, had been begotten by the scholastic speculations of an extreme orthodoxy, in fellowship with a rigid Calvinism that shocked men, and now happily passing away. When these godly, sincere seekers after truth were in fraternal association with men who, by the blessing of God, were utterly free from these mischievous and repulsive ideas and habits, the truth concerning Jesus Christ and the mystery of his death on the cross appeared to them in a new and better light. The causes that had led them to the position to which they had been driven, were taken away.

But there was a particular, powerful force that operated in behalf of a correct acceptation of Christ's nature and office. It was this: In our preaching of the gospel we put in the front and lifted up to the loftiest eminence, as the one supreme object of faith, Jesus Christ as the Son of the living God. What other effect could follow with a people who so preached, than that all attention should be fixed upon the exaltation of Jesus Christ, that he might be preached as really worthy of this highest place in the faith, confidence and hope of men. And this all preached, and the inevitable effect irresistibly followed. To-day we are everywhere one in our faith and preaching in this regard.

Now and then, as might be expected, sporadic instances have occurred of prurient, aberrant spirits attempting to raise their voices in our churches to speculate on these awful, divine mysteries; to essay to utter Unitarian ideas. But such men with us would stand apart as Ishmaelites, and their history among us as preachers was always very brief.

Another very instructive fact may be noted here.

While this process to a unity in the true faith as it is in Christ Jesus was going on among us, the very opposite was the history largely of the "Christians" in the East. They have been gradually following Unitarianism in its tendency downwards to a balder and emptier Arianism. Some of their churches have had Unitarian Pedobaptist pastors.

It will be remembered by the readers of the Harbinger that a proposition was made to us for a union with the "Old Christians" in New England and Eastern Pennsylvania, through Elder J. J. Harvey, one of their preachers, in April, 1845. Mr. Harvey, whom I knew personally, was a most estimable man, all whose family, father, mother, brothers and sisters, were Disciples. A. Campbell, to whom this proposal was sent, repudiated it with great earnestness and force, because these "Old Christians" were Unitarian, and sought a union also with the Unitarians of New England.

One fact further deserves notice here: In our history thus far it has been demonstrated that, while private liberty of opinion is tolerated, there is a strong, vital energy in the faith, the intelligence and spiritual life of our churches, capable and prompt to repel any serious errors and errorists that seek to fix themselves among us.

Our principles of union in faith and action have been victoriously vindicated. What trials the future may have in store for us in this regard, no one can venture to predict.

The American Bible Society recently sent its agent for China, the Rev. John R. Hykes, D. D., to Manila to ascertain and report on the religious and social state of the people of that city and of the Philippine Islands. This Rev. Hykes did and his somewhat lengthy report appears in the Bible Society Record for Dec., 1898. In this report are some appalling revelations, "The exactions and iniquities of the friars," "the fees demanded for marriage," "burial fees" and other exactions are cruelly severe. He states that the fees of a church near the hotel where he stopped amounted to $100,000 per annum. We wish that we had the space to publish this report in full as a missionary document. We feel that even the Roman Catholics of this country would not approve of such religious burdens and will be glad that such a system of superstition, slavery and oppression is to be brought to an end in those islands.

CAN THE BARRIER WHICH INFANT BAPTISM PRESENTS TO CHRISTIAN UNION BE SURMOUNTED?

BY REV. JAMES M. CAMPBELL.

The natural and logical terminus of infant baptism is infant membership; the natural and logical terminus of infant membership is infant communion. But the church in general has never taken kindly to infant communion. It has felt it to be incongruous. The custom broke out in the third century and for a time was well-nigh universal; but as some one has said, it was like Jonah's gourd, which sprang up in a day and perished in a night.

The superstitious feeling with which this custom was regarded is illustrated by a story told by Cyprian. An infant refused the cup and when the deacon forced some of the wine down her throat she was seized with vomiting. The explanation given was that the child, unknown to her parents, had previously, while under the care of her nurse, eaten bread soaked in wine which had been passed out at an idolatrous ceremony.

The practice of giving the communion to infants gradually fell into disfavor in the West, and the Council of Trent let the church out easily by declaring that "little children are not by any necessity obliged to take the sacrament." The Greek and Arminian churches, however, still keep up the practice, using only the wine, and giving it either with a spoon or by the finger.

The early American Congregationalists held by the principle that "a church should be composed of persons who gave credible evidence of regeneration by the Holy Spirit." They looked upon the Lord's Supper as "the feast of the faithful," to be partaken of in a worthy manner by those alone who discerned in the outward emblems the Lord's body. Afterwards when the children of Christian parents were, as in the Episcopal Church, recognized as members, and as such entitled to baptism, the leaven was introduced which worked with amazing speed, through the Halfway Covenant to the Unitarian defection.

When Dr. Horace Bushnell wrote his suggestive book on Christian Nurture, he pleaded for the restoration of a modified form of infant membership; but he stopped short of infant communion. Why he did so we cannot see; for the one logically leads to the other. His plea awakened no responsive echo in the Protestant heart. The church was ready to hear what he had to say on the subject of Christian nurtnre, but it was not prepared to adopt infant membership. Even if the theory of infant membership should in the future receive theoretic acceptance it is safe to say that the folly of infant communion will never be repeated. Nor ought any rite to be adopted that lends it countenance. It is subversive of the fundamental principle of church fellowship. The rock upon which Christ has built his church is open confession of him as the Son of God. Children are in the kingdom and are to be trained for membership in the church. While saying this we repudiate the idea that Christian parents have not the right to choose the religion of their children. God himself settles that when he commands Christian parents to pre-empt their children for him by bringing them up in his nurture and admonition. Of course, nothing is to be done to crush out the sense of personality, or to weaken the sense of personal responsibility. The child is to be left free to make his own personal choice when he reaches the years of discretion. Jewish parents were sponsors for the child up to his thirteenth year, when he became "a son of assent." Christian parents are to be sponsors for their children as far as they can without robbing them of their right to give their own assent to the leadership of Christ, or to act for themselves in publicly confessing his name, and uniting with his church.

(6) The testimonies which have been adduced from early church history in favor of infant baptism are for the most part in favor of infant consecration. That is all that many of the testimonies imply.

The term "neophyte," which means "newly planted," has reference to children, but not necessarily to baptized children. All that can legitimately be drawn from the common use of that word is that the children of believing parents are planted in the soil of a holy nurture, and are to grow up in the bosom of the church until they blossom out into acknowledged discipleship; when they are to be baptized, and taken into the church. From the inscriptions found in the Catacombs, let two examples be cited: "Flavia Jovina, who lived three years and thirty days a neophyte—in peace." "To Romanus, a neophyte, who died at eight years and fifteen days old." The latter inscription bears the date 376; the former evidently belongs to the same period. These inscriptions present a clear witness to Christian nurture, but in the name of common honesty, what have they to do with infant baptism? They simply declare that these children were planted in the nurture of Christ; that they were tender shoots of the true vine; that their spiritual natures were nourished by the sweet influences of Christian homes; but regarding infant baptism or infant communion they have nothing whatever to say.

Of similar import are the words of the early fathers concerning the piety of childhood. Justin Martyr speaks of "many, both men and women, who had been Christ's disciples [or more literally, 'discipled to Christ'] from childhood and who remained pure at sixty and seventy years." Discipled to Christ by baptism? Possibly. But is it not more probable that they are discipled to Christ for baptism? Baptism is not the door into discipleship, but it is the door into acknowledged discipleship. It is an act of voluntary enrollment as a subject of Christ. With the adult believer it is an initiatory, preliminary act which is to be followed by teaching; with the child who has been brought up in the holy nurture of the church it is a mode of confession which has been preceded and is to be followed by teaching. To put the words "discipled to Christ" upon the rack and extort from them an unequivocal testimony in favor of infant baptism only shows to what shifts good men will sometimes resort to support a cherished theory. Of more doubtful application are the well-known words of Irenæus, in which he speaks of the Lord as sanctifying every age by the period corresponding to it which belonged to himself, "for he came to save all through means of himself—all, I say, who by him are regenerated unto God—infants and children and boys and young men and old men. He, therefore, passed through every age, became an infant for infants, thus sanctifying those of this age, becoming at the same time to them an example of purity, righteousness and submission." The difficulty with this quotation lies in the expression," regenerated unto God." Irenæus himself speaks of baptism as "regeneration to God." Evidently he looked upon all these classes as born again by the water of baptism; but what is of more concern to us at present is that even infants were looked upon as sanctified and set apart to God. We may question the propriety of the way in which their sanctification to God took place; that it did take place is the thing of prime importance.

THE "LOGIA" OF PAPIAS.

W. J. BURNER.

Papias was Bishop of Hierapolis in the first half of the second century. He is described by Irenæus as "an ancient man," a contemporary and friend of Polycarp, who was a disciple of John. He also knew John the Presbyter, who had lived at Ephesus during the residence of the Apostle John in that city. He seems to have made it his business to gather up all he could hear of what the disciples of Jesus had reported of him. His witness concerning the gospel as preserved by Eusebius is as follows: "And John the Presbyter said this: 'Mark, being the interpreter of Peter, wrote accurately whatever he remembered, though indeed not [setting down] in order what was said or done by Christ, for he did not hear the Lord, nor did he follow him; but afterwards, as I said, [he followed] Peter, who adapted his discourses to the necessities of the occasion, but not so as to furnish a systematic account of the oracles (logia) of the Lord; so that Mark committed no fault when he wrote some things as he recollected them. For of one thing he took care, to pass by nothing which he heard and not to falsify in anything.'" "Such," adds Eusebius, "is the testimony of Papias concerning Mark." But of Matthew this is said: "Matthew wrote the oracles (logia) in the Hebrew tongue and every one interpreted them as he was able." Many critics understand the statement concerning Matthew to mean that Matthew wrote a book of our Lord's sayings in the Hebrew tongue, and that this book is the foundation of the Gospel of Matthew. Others believe that the word "logia" does not exclude narrative, that the reference is to our present Gospel of Matthew, which was first written in Hebrew, then translated into Greek, and the Hebrew original lost. This must have taken place before the time of Papias, for he is describing a state of affairs that had ceased to exist long before his description was written. The meaning of the word used by him to describe the work written by Matthew is thus a matter of importance in determining when the Gospel of Matthew assumed its present form.

The usage of Papias does not restrict the term to sayings or discourses. Mark's systematic account of the logia included said and done by Christ—narrative as well as discourse. These were derived from the discourses of Peter, and if the discourses of Peter reported in Acts can be taken as examples, they contained a narrative of the deeds of Christ. As we cannot imagine a change of circumstances that would make the narrative portion needless, we must believe that the discourses to which Mark listened were not limited to a repetition of the sayings of Jesus, but that they set forth the chief events of his life. It is true that these words are quoted from John the Presbyter, while the words concerning Matthew are by Papias himself. The presumption is that they were used in the same sense, and the burden of proof is upon him who questions this use. If Papias had used the word with a restricted meaning it would have been necessary for him to explain the more extended meaning of the word as used by John.

"Logia" and its kinsfolk were not averse to spreading themselves over more than reports of sayings. One learned in history was logios. Histories and chronicles were sometimes called logoi. The substantive logios was used to designate a writer of annals, a chronicler. I suspect that this usage dates back to the time when history, or rather annals, was recited instead of being circulated in writing. At any rate the usage was established. Ephraim Syrus calls the Gospels the "logia" of God. In Romans 3:2 Paul says that unto the Jews were committed the "logia" of God. No one would think of excluding the narrative portions of the Old Testament from these "logia." Paul quotes the historical books a number of times in this epistle. In Heb. 5:12 the word is applied to the whole Christian revelation. In Luke 1:4 the word (logos) is used to express that wherein Theophilus had been instructed, and in which Luke expected to give him greater certainty. For these reasons the restriction of "logia" to sayings of the Lord is impossible. The transmission of the narrative by word of mouth made it "logia" as the rest. If Luke's Gospel was composed of logoi and Mark's Gospel, constructed out of Peter's sermons, was "logia," there is no reason why Papias may not have meant our present Gospel of Matthew by "logia."

We have good grounds for saying that our Greek Gospel of Matthew was in use in the days of Papias. Eusebius knew nothing of any work of Matthew save the entire canonical Gospel which bears his name. Irenæus, separated by only one generation from the Apostle John, was equally ignorant. The same is true of the other writers of the second century. If there had been any difference, save that of language, between the work which in the first half of the second century bore the name of Matthew and the earlier work described by Papias, the difference would have been known. Papias would have noted the difference. We may, therefore, assert with confidence that the Gospel of Matthew was first written in the mother-tongue of the Lord.

"THINK ON THESE THINGS."

R. H. LAMPKIN.

There is much for which to be thankful. This goodly land, its wonderful productiveness, its beauties of land and sky and its breadth of common union as a nation are things for which we should be devoutly thankful. The leading of a divine providence is in no way hid from our eyes. And he who sees not the dawning of the most glorious era that has ever been granted to man is dull indeed. The privileges and possibilities for this people are beyond comparison. But the richest treasures lie not open before all. Not the worldly-minded man, nor he of sectarian spirit, can apprehend them. This is not the time for "mote-seeing," or "casting out of beams;" and would we stand ready to enter with the bridegroom of a new hope, that season must have passed, and our vessels as well as our lamps have in them the oil to feed the flames that are lighting the world.

They that are in the vanguard are wasting neither time nor munition casting bombs into the denominational camps, nor yet are they quarreling with those who furnish the music. Sin is being routed and its wounded and starving victims are being tenderly cared for and fed. And mighty is the host that follows the Captain of salvation in this glorious war. Their enlistment is for life. Mighty is the conflict, for mighty is the foe. But victory will yet perch upon the banners of the faithful.

Our great rejoicing, however, should be with trembling, for, brethren, we be not yet glorified. While we have made an advance that is the wonder of this century, certainly we are not and cannot be blind to our shortcomings. More and more we are coming together and opening our hearts and our pocketbooks to all missionary enterprises. The Endeavor movement is infusing new hope and zeal into our church life, and taking hold of questions long ago laid upon the table. And for all these and much more we certainly should rejoice, and again I say rejoice.

"Oh that men would praise the Lord for his wonderful works to the children of men."

But there are some things that need our attention. It may not be a fault generally prevalent, and I have faith enough and confidence in my brethren to hope and believe it is not, and yet it will come cropping out here and there.

I have reference to the lack of unity sometimes found in our local congregations. Many are losing sight of greater issues and quibbling and quarreling over some lesser ones. Especially is this so in the matter of calling and dismissing a minister. In this the grace of spiritual self-examination is too often wanting, and by its want many are the blunders made. The ease with which a few influential busybodies can disturb the peace of a congregation and oust a good man is astonishing, and in many cases were the matter sifted thoroughly it indeed would be a revelation.

A minister in a fervor of missionary zeal speaks as do the Scriptures, and says Christian and missionary are synonymous; that to come short of this is not to have the Spirit of Christ, consequently none of his. Perhaps this doesn't set well upon the conscience of some penurious one, and the leaven begins to work. He may express an opinion upon some political issue, or may be, as did one brother during the last political campaign, take for his theme the "Single Standard," and while he in no way touched upon the money question, that sermon led to his looking for another field of labor. One man agitates the scripturalness of ordination of officers, but because none of ihe board had been ordained he is now in the same boat waiting for a Macedonian call. But why specify further?

Now, in nearly every such instance the majority may be in perfect unity with themselves and their minister, even the officers as a majority being one, but yet the rupture comes, and for lack of only a little timely interference and investigation. Rarely but what they are aware of the little schism, still they heed it not until the breach is so wide they feel unable to bridge it. If only these matters would be considered in time and a thorough investigation made and proper action taken, the usefulness of many a congregation would be greatly enhanced and its influence upon the community more profoundly felt.

Again, it is unjust to allow the innocent to suffer. These quiet, subtle workers of iniquity ought to be sought out and properly dealt with. No good can come when these insidious usurpers of authority are permitted to carry out their nefarious schemes.

And by this unsettling of things, this want of spiritual unity by reason of a few contentious spirits "spying out our liberty," the work is made to greatly suffer. By the time things are beginning to adjust themselves nicely, everything is thrown out of gear by the appearance of this factious monster. It destroys the powers of a minister's influence. It takes from him that peace and contentment so necessary for one whose labors at best are a drain upon his vital nerve force. Instead of being allowed to so arrange his affairs that he may unreservedly give himself to the work, he soon begins to feel that things are somewhat shaky; that his dream of settling down to stay awhile and order the details of his work so as to make everything count, are built upon somewhat insecure foundations. His heart grows heavy. Before him lies he knows not what. He sees the necessity of looking abroad, and naturally his interest in these people is somewhat checked. A distrust of the human heart creeps in and he is made to pass unjust judgment upon the innocent. Sometimes he is tempted to compromise with evil, thinking a greater good may result. If he goes he feels that much time has been lost. Again, a new home, a new field and a new people demand his attention, and a year or two is to be spent in getting acquainted. Much of this work is left to him entirely, a tax upon his observation, intuition and ingenuity. And so it is, but who ever knows the cost of the struggle?

If he stays it is because the importunities of many friends are brought to bear, but rarely is the trouble really settled, and it not infrequently occurs that a worse thing happens, sometimes ending in a divided church.

These things ought not so to be, and can be averted. There is too much at stake to permit it. A little forethought is necessary, a care upon the part of the faithful to give little heed to tale-bearers, except it be to put a quietus upon what is said, "proving all things, holding fast that which is good."

Know your minister and give him your loyal support. Remember, he is only human, and even if he be "overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such a one in a spirit of meekness, looking to thyself lest thou also be tempted." Make him the object of your prayers. Instead of little criticisms and judgments coupled to a preceding praiseworthy sentence by the little insinuating conjunction "but," rather lose sight of his frailties and make your words a fortification built about him. Do this for the sake of our common cause.

To feed upon fault-finding is to nurse in our bosoms a passion that will eat the very vitals out of our heart. "Love thinketh no evil." If in these things we prove loyal we shall become known of others and shall know ourselves as never before. "Think on these things."

Lexington, Ky., Nov. 26, 1898.

The Religious World.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church contemplates the raising of one million dollars within the next ten years for educational purposes.

The Southern Presbyterian Church has lost a strong man by the death of Dr. Moses D. Hoge, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church in Richmond, Va., at the age of eighty. He had been prominently connected with Presbyterian affairs for half a century, and was almost as well known in the North as in the South. He was an eloquent preacher and has been repeatedly appointed to Presbyterian councils.

Methodism came into this century few in numbers, poor in worldly possessions and meager in scholarship, having only 288 ministers, 64,894 members, but little church property and only the ashes of one college. She goes out of the century in sixteen great bands or denominations, having 38,352 traveling ministers, 6,213,425 members, with scores of universities, theological seminaries and colleges, and over $250,000,000 of church property.—Bishop Fowler.

The Religious Telescope concludes a caustic rebuttal to Mrs. Eddy's recent challenge to the world in defense of Christian Science as follows:

Let Mrs. Eddy, instead of challenging the world to disprove that she has healed consumption, diphtheria, cancer, etc., come forward and prove that she has done it, and convince the people, as Christ and his disciples did, and she will caputre the multitudes openly and publicly as did the Man of Nazareth. The fact is, Mrs. Eddy's challenge is only another instance of her specious, evasave, deceptive way of putting things, so manifest in all her writings. She has a way of saying things so that at a casual reading it seems as if she were metaphysical, philosophical, profound, devout and fair; but when her terms and sentences are put to the test of a rigid analysis, her deliverances turn out to be nothing but a mass of vagaries and deceptive pretentions that are only well calculated to mislead superficial thinkers who mistake the muddiness of the water for depth.

Our Budget.

—The March offering is still before us.

—Allow nothing to interfere with this offering on which our foreign work depends.

—See that the congregation is thoroughly canvassed either before or after the first Lord's day in March.

—Do not consider the offering complete until every member of the church has had an opportunity and an invitation to contribute.

—Much will depend upon the sermon; let it be warm, tender, loaded with facts and directed to the conscience.

—More, perhaps, will depend upon the canvass. An Endeavor committee is generally the best committee for doing this work. The canvass should be kindly but persistently pushed until all have been solicited to participate in this great work.

—There should be a special effort this year to enroll a large number of non-contributing churches in the list of those that contribute. See our editorial elsewhere addressed especially to that class of churches. Nor is the non-contributing individual overlooked in the editorial.

—Missouri and Kentucky have especially a large work to do in reducing the black space and enlarging the white, according to the cuts representing the proportion of contributing and non-contributing churches. The latter state especially has a large number of new churches that have not yet been trained in the duty of giving to Foreign Missions.

—Remember that poverty, or fewness in members, or a church indebtedness, or being without a house, may be a reason why a church cannot give as large a sum as older, wealthier and better equipped churches, but these facts do not cancel the obligation to give something. Here is a distinction too often overlooked by churches and individuals.

—If a church in view of all its surroundings can only give a penny, let that penny be given with prayer. If this is done we would be willing to guarantee that at the next annual offering it would be able to increase the amount 500 per cent. What a gain that would be! Besides, it would put the church in the list of contiributing churches.

—Some of the cuts or illustrations intended for last week's issue were delayed in reaching us and will be found in this issue. Study them and see the moral in them. A picture is sometimes worth more than an editorial—especially if the picture be a good one and the editorial a poor one.

—Speaking of pictures, our first page series of pictures of distinguished men is attracting wide interest among our readers and is one of the most popular features of the paper. We have such a large list of distinguished men, past and present, that we are not likely to lack for material for a long while.

—The new church building at Elwood, Ind., will be dedicated on the 26th of the present month. The dedicatory exercises will be conducted by F. M. Rains, of Cincinnati, Ohio. A cordial invitation is extended by the church to all who can attend.

—The Orphan's Cry for February contains an Easter concert exercise which will be sent free to any school or society that will render it for the benefit of the Orphans' Home. The exercise was prepared by J. H. Fillmore, and is donated to the cause of the Christian Orphans' Home. Schools ought, therefore, to take great interest in making it yield as large results as possible for the Home. It is the wish of the Orphans' Home Board to raise $5,000 for the Home this year, and if possible to raise that by a special Easter offering. This is not an unreasonable request, and we trust that every school will have some part in this offering this year. Send to Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, 5018 Cabanne Ave., this city, for as many copies of the Orphan's Cry, containing their new and beautiful Easter exercise as you can use with profit.

—The church a Springfield, Ill., of which J. E. Lynn is pastor, did not hold a meeting in January as was previously announced, but will begin an evangelistic campaign the 5th of March. Evangelist C. R. Scoville, of Ohio, and F. C. Huston, singer, will assist the pastor.

—Some church unable to pay a large salary for a pastor can be put into correspondence with an energetic young man who will make a good all-round pastor, if communication be made at once to W. W. Sniff, Gibson City, Ill.

—W. T. Allen, who recently went from Salem to Silverton, Oregon, now preaches for two churches, two miles apart, that had been without a preacher for some time. He says that an infidel paper published at Silverton is one of the great hindrances to Christianity in that place and thinks that it represents the spirit of a secular school or college located midway between the churches for which he preaches. We hope, if these things be so, that they will soon not be so. It is no credit to any school to harbor disbelief in God and inculcate the spirit of enmity toward Christianity in the minds of young men and young women.

—The movement among the Endeavorers to secure Bro. J. Z. Tyler's whole time as national superintendent goes on deepening and widening. We may not be able to print all the responses that are coming in for awhile in view of the demands upon our spacs for the Foreign and Home missionary offerings. There is not the slightest conflict, however, between these interests, and what the Endeavorers do will not interfere with the offerings for our missionary work at home and abroad.

—Our papers are all giving much space just now to the March collection for Foreign Missions. The last number of the Christian Standard was especially devoted to that interest, with a large illustration on the first page of its cover, containing a map of the world and the location of our missionaries, and on the opposite side of the cover was a portrait of the foreign secretary, A. McLean, which measures the full length of the globe on the other side. This is right, as Bro. McLean is tall enough to see all around the earth, including the United States.

—The severe winter weather has given place at this writing, to weather that is almost spring-like. There is prospect of an early spring, This fine weather gives opportunity for more active work both along evangelistic lines and in gathering up the offering for Foreign Missions. It should be understood, however, that the offering must not depend on the weather, on the fifth of March. It is not a matter of observing a day, but of making an offering.

—A Texas reader writes to the editor: "I am quite anxious to know whether or not you are going to 'Muse' over at Macatawa during the coming summer." He adds: "There is not enough of meditation in the effort at developing higher spirituality, and 'when thou hast shut thy door'—listen to your Father 'in secret.' What if the door is but the drapery of the deep, dark woods, far from the busy haunts of men—is it not all the better?" We should say it was; but we do not intend to be hurried off to Macatawa Park before the ice and snow get out of the canons, and the wrens are building their nests in the verandas of Edgewood-on-the-Lake.

—In a recent statement in the Budget referring to the Hiram House it was said that Cleveland has 135,204 adults, 46,313 children, 205 schools, 13 churches, 941 saloons and 541.56 acres of parks. The numbers are 377,392 population, 277,509 adults, 99,883 children, 1,635 saloons, 225 churches and 1,222.90 acres of parks. In making these corrections Bro. Geo. A. Bellamy, who is at the head of this social settlement, asks our opinion of the advisability of opening billiard rooms and card rooms in the "settlement" to compete with the saloon. "Do you think it advisable," he asks, "when such effort seems to be the only point of contact, to employ it as a means of healthfu recreation." He adds: "This seems to me to be a great problem that comes to men who are seeking to uplift the degraded classes in our cities." We have no doubt this is a very different problem, looked at from the the point of view of one who is working in the slums and seeking to win the people from the saloon to another and purer social center, than it seems to a Christian worker differently located. We believe the men on the ground with a knowledge of all the facts before them are better qualified to decide this question than those outside who have had no practical experience in dealing with the same class of people. If other kinds of entertainment could be devised that would be equally interesting and without the evil associations connected with cards and billiards it would seem to us preferable, but if it is a question between billiards and cards with the saloon attachment or without, then we should certainly take the latter alternative.

—On Feb. 12th W. H. Bagby preached a ringing sermon aagingt polygamy. Bro. Bagby is pastor of the Church of Christ at Salt Lake City, the Mecca of Mormondom, and the sermon was published in the Herald, of that city, on the next day. The headquarters of Mormonism is being subjected anew to the fire of heavy guns at both long and short range, with prospect of severe losses to their power and ranks.

—We are glad to learn that a bill has been introduced in the Senate and House of the Missouri Assembly, looking toward an amendment to the constitution permitting the adoption of the Initiative and Referendum system by the people of this state. Direct legislation is in strict harmony with the oft-repeated statement, "A government of the people, by the people and for the people," and also in full accord with the spirit of our national constitution. Direct legislation may not be a cure-all for all of the evils emanating from partisan legislation or full protection from the influence of those who would pervert legislation to their personal benefits, but it would certainly make it more difficult for such persons to thus tamper with our laws, and also prevent the enactment of laws clearly detrimental to the commonwealth of Missouri. And as to the privilege of adopting such a law, of this the citizens of Missouri should certainly not be deprived. We hope, therefore, that the bill granting their expression on this subject at the regular election in November, 1900, will be granted by the present Assembly.

—The artitle entitled "A Voice From Cuba," which we print elsewhere, being a part of a sermon preached on the steamship "Senaca," en route to Porto Rico, will bear reading more than once. It is highly creditable to Admiral Schley, that he commended its sentiments. It is not difficult to discern from this extract, if we had printed nothing else from Chaplain Carlisle, where he rightfully belongs. It gives us pleasure to announce that on his discharge from the United States Army soon, he expects to accept the pastorate of one of our churches. We shall account that congregation very fortunate that secures his services.

—In a recent Budget paragraph referring to the time of the meeting of the Congress of the Christian Churches in this city we gave the date as April 18th. This was a mistake, as the time agreed upon is April 25-27. We are gratified to see the increasing interest throughout the country in this meeting. A committee of arrangements has been appointed and will make its announcements in our papers next week. Already the Congress is taking on national dimentions.

—We take pleasure in introducing to our readers this week Bro. J. W. Lhamon, pastor of the church at Allegheny City, Pa., whose picture we present on our first page. We have not received, at this writing, the data for any biographical sketch, which we hope to furnish later. Let it suffice now to say that Mr. Lhamon is one of our younger class of ministers whose ability, force of character and devotion to the cause have made them widely known to the brotherhood. The Allegheny pastor has the distinction of being both an able preacher and a successful author. His "Studies in Acts," deserves to rank among the best works on that earliest book of church history. It is thoroughly up to date and shows a mind at once capable of independent thought and open to all available light. Mr. Lhamon is yet a young man and has not reached the zenith of his power or fame. We predict a bright and useful career for him.

—The Agitator is the name of a new paper launched at Clarendon, Texas, with J. R. Henson, editor. Church affairs seem to come in for a large part of the editor's stirring-stick. All right. There is a purifying tendency in agitated waters.

—The Rev. Frank T. Lee, pastor Douglas Park Congregational Church, Chicago, Ill., recently read a paper before our preachers of Chicago on "Abuses of the Bible." The paper points out the prevailing errors in both pew and pulpit as to the Bible and deals with them after a pungent fashion. We are sure that the paper was unobjectionable and delightfully pleasing to our Chicago pastors and preachers. The paper was published in full in the Inter-Ocean for Feb. 12. The paper would make an excellent tract for general use.

—The meeting at the Central Christian Church, this city, in which the pastor, F. G. Tyrrell, was asisted by A. M. Harvout, of Cincinnati, closed Feb. 12th on account of the severity of the cold wave that prevailed in this city during the previous week. The meeting, however, was fairly well attended notwithstanding the cold wave. There were but few additions to the church under the circumstances, but Bro. Harvout's preaching was greatly enjoyed and very profitable to those who had the pleasure of hearing him. Bro. Tyrrell is to return the kindness of Bro. Harvout by assisting him in a protracted meeting at Cincinnati, to be held in March. On the 22nd of the present month J. Z. Tyler, of Cleveland, O., is to join the pastor of the First Christian Church of this city, Frank O. Fannon, in a protracted meeting. It is something unusual to hear of a protracted meeting at the First Church, but inasmuch as they have practically been in a protracted meeting ever since Bro. Fannon has been preaching for them, the experiment will not be so new to them, after all.

—The Standard, Chicago (Baptist), has fallen in line with the newspaper trend toward the book form and now appears with 32 pages of the size of this paper. The change adds to its appearance and convenience.

—Prof. W. Max Muller's letter to Prof. H. V. Hilprecht, editor of the Oriental Research department of the Sunday Times, contains this statement:

The alleged mummy of the sun diskworshiper, Amenhotep IV., from Bibanelmuluk, has now been examined by several scholars, and a supposition ventured lately by Mr. Groff has shown it to be an indisputable fact. It is not Amenhotep IV., whose mummy must, besides, have been destroyed during the revolution following soon after his death, but King Me(r)neptah of the nineteenth dynasty, who was until quite recently considered the Pharaoh of the exodus. His absence from the great mummy find of Derel Bahri, made several years ago, had confirmed many in the belief that his body must rest on the ground of the Red Sea. In general, the old theory, which connects Merneptah with the exodus, seems to have become untenable.

This conclusion will spoil an argument often used by some preachers to prove the divine inspiration of the Old Testament, but fortunately the divine inspiration of the Old Testament does not rest upon the identity of the mummy of that particular Pharaoh.

—The editor of the Sunday-School Times recently put the question of being born again in the following very strong and wise way. We are glad to hear men who are leaders of thought beginning to talk after this sensible, scriptural fashion. Here is what he said: "We cannot regenerate ourselves, but we can turn to God in order to be his loving subjects. Turning to God is our part. Regeneration is God's part. If we do our duty, God can be depended on to do his part."

—Your series of historical articles are excellent. I have organized a class in the study of our history as a people and the articles appearing in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from time to time on that subject are made the basis of our study. We meet on Thursday evenings.

[A good suggestion, that.—EDITOR.]

—My heart leaped for joy and in eager anticipation when I read your editorial in the last CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, on The Fullness of the Gospel. I have been waiting for some one to speak the word to indicate that the time had arrived to know the truth in regard to these things, and learning the truth to assert our right to all that the Lord Jesus has secured for us. We are the people, not only to ascertain this truth, but also to proclaim and use it. I hope you will persue the subject farther, and that soon. MARION STEVENSON.

—Ira Billman, the late pastor of the church at Saginaw, Mich., having accepted a call to Evansville, Ind., the church there is in need of a worthy successor. The church can pay $600. Address S. W. Pearcy.

—The church at Nelsonville, O., desires some pastor or evangelist to hold a protracted meeting for them as soon as possible. Address W. W. Gibson.

—A subscriber from far-away Idaho writes:

In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Budget of Jan. 12, S. says he has read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST reaching back to the old Echo. I can "go you one better," Bro. S., I was a reader of the old Bible Advocate, which was the beginning of what is now the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, published at Carrollton, Ill., by E. L. Craig. I was personally acquainted with "Old Father" Sweeney and his sons, Wm. G. and John S., who lived and preached in that vicinity at the same time and were contributors to the paper. My first sight of a baptism was performed by Wm. G , while John S. stood on the shore of the creek and made the timber roar with song for a mile around. The after great evangelist and pastor, "Zack," was then one of the most mischievous "kids" in the county.

We can readily believe this last statement!

—By all means the Disciples of Christ in America ought to sustain J. Z. Tyler or some other good man, while he gives his whole time and strength to the Christian Endeavor interests. I will see that the C. E. Societies of the First Church in Philadelphia contribute to his salary. Not only this, but I am in favor of having a capable man to do a like work for our Sunday-schools. Their power can be increased manifold. J. S. MYERS.
Philadelphia, Pa.

—The church at Davenport, Ia., has published a directory of its officers and members in a neatly bound booklet with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST platform on one page at the front, and a notice of the historic articles now running in our columns, covering two pages at the back of the booklet. We appreciate this honor and commend the enterprise and good taste of the church at Davenport, Ia.

—At a meeting of the Y. P. S. C. E., of the First Christian Church, of Atlanta, Ga., Sunday evening, January 29th, the society voted unanimously in favor of employing a national superintendent of Christian Endeavor. As a society, we are willing to pledge two dollars ($2), possibly more, annually for the support of such an officer; and we all favor the selection of Dr. J. Z. Tyler for the place.
B. S. MCCASH,
Pres. Y. P. S. C. E.

—Concerning the matter of raising funds for the employment of a national superintendent, we believe our suggestion of last week is a wise one under the circumstances, that the matter be referred to an informal meeting of the representative brethren who will be gathered here in our congress, April 25-28, who have an interest in the subject of Christian Endeavor, and let them decide at that time what is the best course to pursue for accomplishing the end in view. The fear expressed by some of our correspondents that the discussion of this subject will interfere with our missionary offerings may be dismissed. So far as the CHRISTIAN-EVAGELIST is concerned, it proposes no discussion or controversy. We felt it our duty to vindicate our right and the right of the brethren who have spoken through the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to take any action that we may deem wise for carrying out the wish of the Chattanooga Convention in this matter. Having done this, we are content to leave the matter, as was stated last week, in the hands of the brethren.

—Some of our readers may not have understood the "New College" announced by Bro. McGarvey under the direction of J. H. Garrison and J. J. Haley was an allegory, so to speak, but here is a reader that grasps its true meaning:

I am interested in the new college of which you are to be the dean. The college that you represent may be a college on paper, but that is no reason why it should not elicit interest. If it is on paper it can be a college extention, for a paper carries intelligence without much expense. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a college that comes to our homes once a week. This college is to have an annex in what is called a quarterly. This will give the pictures or faces of those who have made your college possible and of those who have contributed to its success or those who have taken courses of studies in it. Your college is doing excellent work. W. O. MOORE.

Health, Voice, Appetite and Strength Failed—Completely Restored by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Last year my health failed entirely. My limbs were so weak that I could scarcely walk. I had no appetite and suffered with constipation. My voice failed me in the pulpit. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and very soon I saw a great improvement. In the winter I was attacked with the grip which left me weak and prostrated. I went back to my old friend, Hood's Sarsaparilla, which seems to be the thing for me." REV. C. S. BEAULIEU, pastor Christian church, Lowellville, Ohio. Remember.

—In a letter from Dr. E. E. Montgomery, of Philadelphia, he speaks thus of the work of J. S. Myers:

He entered upon the work in September and was at first very much disheartened at the smallness of our audiences. The number of our attendants, however, began to increase, the interest of the old members reawakened and the middle of January a protracted meeting was entered upon, with P. P. Bilhorn and wife, of Chicago, to conduct the music. While the number of additions—35—was not large, they represent an excelleut class of people, and people who will be instrumental in excercising a good influence in the neighborhood; a much greater interest in the work has been awakened and it is evident that large results will be reaped in the future from this work. Altogether 50 additions have been made to the church by confession and letter since Bro. Myers entered upon the pastorate. The meetings just closed were conducted with great earnestness, and yet with the absence of anything of a sensational character, and it was the verdict of a number of our older members that it had been more successful than any protracted meeting conducted in the last forty years.

—That there is urgent need that the past enthusiasm of the Endeavor movement be kept from dissipation is patent to every one really in touch with our work. In no way can this be done to so good purpose as by giving practical direction to the energies of our young people in the direction of enlightenment and cooperative effort. I see no other effective way of reaching such result save by the path outlined at Chattanooga. It would be little short of criminal to utterly ignore the recommendation of the convention. That this letter may have some weight I will stand for the payment of $5.00 for the support of the superintendent as recommended. Of course there is no one for the present to be thought of in this connection but Bro. J. Z. Tyler. He is by past activity, by temperament and by abiding interest in this work, pre-eminently the man for the place.

—Recently we stated that our Church Extension Fund was nearing the $100,000 mark. We intended to say $200,000 instead of what appeared. There is now over $175,000 in the fund. The quarter-million mark ought to be reached by the first year of the new century.

PERSONAL MENTION.

A. L. Fillmore was elected superintendent of the First Christian Church Sunday-school, Pittsburg, Pa., for the year 1899.

J. M. Gibson, of Humboldt, Neb., has a number of popular lectures which have received pub ic applause wherever given.

Garry L. Cook, singing evangelist of Oberlin, O., has accepted a call to locate at Hartford, Mich., and is already on the ground at work.

The official board of the church at Knoxville, Iowa, highly commends Lawrence Wright as an able preacher of the gospel. He recently held them a successful meeting.

W. N. Briney is doing a good work at Paris, Mo. Improvement in every department and preparation for the March offering for Foreign Missions is reported by Jacob Hugley.

C. H. Hilton, late pastor at Larned, Kas., has accepted work for the church at Olathe, Kan. This is Mrs. Hilton's birthplace and childhood home. The work at Larned prospered under the labors of Bro. Hilton.

S. D. Dutcher, passing through this city on ast Wednesday, en route from Cincinnati, O., to Mexico, Mo., kindly remembered this office in his calls. Bro. Dutcher will receive a nearty welcome back to Missouri and a fine church and field for work at Mexico.

The Walnut Hills Christian Church, Cincinnati, O., on Feb. 12, adopted resolutions expressing their high appreciation of the services of S. D. Dutcher as a strong preacher and a thoroughly consecrated pastor and their regrets at his departure at his own request to another field of labor, whither their prayers will follow him and his family.

J. C. Hay, who has been at Clarksville, Tenn., for six months passed through this city on his way back to Pueblo, Col. He reports the church at Clarksville in a prosperous condition. Bro. Hay has devised a plan of Church Register that is unique and meritorious. Its peculiarity is the knowledge of the state, working ability and wants of the congregation that it reveals if put into use.

E. O. Sharpe, of Leroy, Ill., has accepted a call from the church at Girard, Ill., and begins his labors there March 15th.

M. R. Waters, of Minneapolis, Minn., former treasurer of M. C. M. S., has resigned, after five years of faithful service. A. T. Galburg, of No. 411 Selby Ave., St. Paul, Minn., has been chosen by the board to fill the unexpired term.

Victor W. Dorris, of Georgetown, Ky., is holding a meeting for Bro. Davis in the Paris Christian Church, Ill. H. A. Easton, of Danville, Ill., the great bass singer and chorus director, is the leader of song.

Little Casey Downing, only child of Samuel C. Downing and Annie Downing, died at the home of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. C. Hays, in New London, Mo., Feb. 5, 1899; age nine years, seven months and one day. He was the only child of his widowed mother.

A. M. Hootman, of Union City, Ind., has handed in his resignation to the church there to take place May 10th next, the end of his fourth year. During his ministry there have been 319 additions to the church, and over $8,000 raised for all purposes. He has just closed an excellent meeting there. He wfil be ready for engagements elsewhere after the 10th of May.

S. M. Martin, of Oakland, Cal., is now assistihg Geo. F. Hall in a protracted meetlng at the Tabernacle Christian Christian Church, Decatur, Ill. Great preparations were made for his coming and a great meeting is anticipated. Music will be made one of the special attractions of the meeting. This with two preachers, each of a strong personality, will probably turn Decatur upside down.

J. H. Fuller, of Burlington, Ia., was recently surprised by the presence of the church in his private house, and by what remained after its departure. A birthday, the 43rd. seems to have caused the trouble. The Washburn church, his former pastorate, supplied the Sunday-school at Burlington with songbooks. Brother and Sister Brickert are now assisting Bro. Fuller in a meeting at Burlington.

Alfred Brunk, pastor of the church at Gethsemane, Va., tried to resign recently, but the effort was a failure. The church would not have it so. He reports having recently heard an excellent sermon fram Z. T. Sweeney, at Richmond, Va., on "The Gospel and Lawyers," for the law class of Richmond College, who were present in a body. A state senator who was present, he says, pronounced it the finest presentation of any subject he had ever heard in his life.

W. H. Bagby, the pastor of the church at Salt Lake City, Utah, assisted by C. E. Millard, singer, of Marysville, Mo., recently closed a meeting at Salt Lake City that was most highly appreciated and of far-reaching results. A writer calls it "the most precious meeting in our history." Resolutions expressing the confidence of the Central Christian Church, of Salt Lake City, Utah, in Brother W. H. Bagby were adopted by the congregation on the occasion of the church calling him as their pastor for the second year.

S. T. Willis, our New York correspondent, is doing a splendid work in making known to the world, by the use of his pen, the splendid progress of the Disciples of Christ in the United States. Articles from his pen on the nature of our plea, our missionary and educational activities, and our growth in grace and in numerical strength, frequently appear in some of the leading journals and magazines of the day. In the Christian Herald for Feb. 1st is an excellent article on our "Bible Chairs in Our Great Universities," of which we now have six. The article is accompanied with excellent cuts of Prof. Coler, Dr. Willett, Mrs. H. E. Moses and Miss Lois A. White, all so well known to our readers for their interest in our Bible Chair work.

M. C. Tiers, the veteran Disciple of 913 Forrest Ave., New York, writes that he has completed the fac-simile two copies of the portrait of Alexander Campbell with the print that was in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and his own early studies of his face as the basis. They are in the best style of oil painting on canvas 20x24 inches. He says: "If any admirer of the venerable bishop would like one of them he can have it by sending me $5." Of course this is small remuneration for his work, but it has been with a labor of love, and some of our readers may wish to avail themselves of this offer.

R. M. Messick now preaches for the churches at Gridley, Orville and Biggs, in California. He gives one-half time to the church at Gridley. There are 60 members at Gridley, 26 at Orville and 12 at Biggs. Gridley is 160 miles from San Francisco and 560 south of Salem, the home of Bro. Messick. He was called into this field in California by the state evangelist, J. A. Brown. Bro. Messick has written an interesting letter which we hope to publish soon.

A Case of Morals.

CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis, Mo.:

DEAR BRETHREN—I have distributed the samples which you sent and have hopes of being able to send you a good list of subscribers; but I cannot do it at your published price of one dollar and fifty cents, because another paper is being offered for one dollar, although its published price is the same as yours. If you will allow me to take subscriptions at one dollar I can secure a large list. Of this I am confident, because the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST is preferred.

Please let me know by return mail if I may do so. Fraternally,

W. A. HEGER.

The superintendent of our subscription department has received several letters similar to the foregoing recently, and has called our attention to them. It seems to us to warrant editorial treatment, as it is a case of morals, as well as business. What is it Bro. Heger asks us to do? Is it not to publish one rate in our paper, and exact it when we can get it, and accept a lower one where it seems to be necessary in order to secure subscriptions, thus discriminating between our readers, making some pay more than others? Is this good ethics? Does Bro. H. believe it to be a sound method of business? Perhaps he has not stopped to consider the question closely. We are sure if he and others will think about it they will approve our policy of having one price for our paper and for our supplies in all the states, and treating all subscribers alike. We are aware that this may cost us some subscriptions for the present, but we have an abiding faith in the sense of fairness and honest dealing among the brethren, and believe that in the long run they will stand by the company that deals with all alike, whether it be in reference to the paper or Sunday-school supplies.

Correspondence.

New Year's Sentiments in the French Capital.

The French journalists have reviewed the year 1898 in regard to their own country, and have found it "void of every benevolent result." Le Temps called it "the melancholy year," and branded it as the most critical in the history of the third republic, which seems to have endured so long, not by virtue of its organization so much as for the lack of any royalistic leader with the profile and intelligence of Napoleon. But this fatal year has not been entirely without fruit. It requires a great deal of blindness not to find good in the magnificent popular protestations, which have occurred since the suicide of Colonel Henry, preceded by his scandalous confessions of forgery "in the interests of the state and the army." Such manifestations of the popular instinct of justice are all that remain to redeem the year 1898 in France; but that is a good deal, "for the love of justice is the noblest and most essential sign of civilization." These excellent words of M. Gaston Pares are, alas! not a universal creed. When five ministers of war, one after another, assert the guilt of an accused person, in spite of the most positive evidence of his possible innocence (we do not say his actual innocence), when they seek to impose their personal conviction as sufficient reason for not revising a verdict universally in doubt, when these convictions rest on certain hidden, mysterious "necessities" that cannot be revealed even to the Supreme Court of France except under the most rigorous reservations, it is in place to question the sincerity of those in whose hands has been committed the destiny of a free people. Love for the army covers a multitude of sins in the eyes of some very distinguished Frenchmen of to-day. "The end justifies the means" seems to have become an accepted principle of conduct. There is every reason to believe that the forgery of Colonel Henry has been decidedly winked at and looked over by some very good people, who find nothing immoral in his conduct. The son of this deceased forger recently received a sword from an anonymous person who regards Colonel Henry as a hero, and as one who died for the fatherland. Madame Henry (no one can have anything but pity and respect for this unfortunate widow) recently took offence at a newspaper article. La Libre Parole, organ of the "Anti-Semites," at once opened a public subscription in order to raise money to defend Madame Henry. In a few days something like 160,000 francs were subscribed, a sum absolutely needless for the defense of the honor of this unfortunate woman, a sum which revealed only too plainly the prejudices of a party which took this means of testifying its esteem for a confessed forger; that is, of the anti-Dreyfus party. By every means possible the civilized world had already been advised of the invulnerable position of the French army in the hearts of the people.

The first of January was to add a most brilliant manifestation of the national affection for the military idea. A new league was to be born for the protection of the honor and integrity of the military power—"la Ligue de la Patrie francaise." Whether this new movement persists or, as some predict, passes rapidly into oblivion, it cannot fail to discourage those who love "fair play" and republican government. According to the leaders of this more than significant association, "the traditions of France" must be preserved at all hazard, a vague "solidarity of generations" must be insisted on. In fact, the terms of the "appeal" published are so indefinite that it will be necessary to wait for a more detailed statement of the purposes which inspired its organization. That which is certain is the character of the individuals at the head of the new league. Of the forty immortals of the French Academy, more than half have signed the manifesto published January 1st. Other leaders are members of the "Institute;" others are professors at the University of Paris. In a word, the "Intellectuels" have spoken, and they have spoken in favor of the army, almost in favor of royalism, if one considers results rather than intentions. The French Academy has never been free from political influences. It is to-day filled with members of the nobility; it has its "party of dukes." That which was obscure in the "appeal" of the league has been made somewhat plainer by an interview in which the editor of the Revue des deux Mondes explains to a reporter of the Temps the general outlines of the new organizaiion. M. Brunetiere deplored the premature announcement of the existence of the new league, and said it had been intended to get the signatures of 200 distinguished men first. It was the purpose to make this league an overwhelming denial that the "Intel ectuels" were in favor of the Dreyfus party and opposed to the army. It was necessary to reconcile the factions into which good citizens had allowed themselves to be seduced. The public mind must be set at rest concerning the honor and respect of the army. He admitted, however, that such men as Professors Lavisse and Hauet, of the University of Paris, were as good friends of the army as any one; yet Lavisse, Hauet and Buisson, all equally distinguished and sincere, have been, since last August, at the head of the popular manifestations in which the gospel of justice was preached as the highest concern of a civilized people. He accused M. Jaures of wanting to revive the doctrine that the army was a danger to the republic, and of wishing to substitute a national guard in its place. He proclaimed that "in the country which has no longer either king or emperor, the army is the only bond of unity, the only safeguard against the enemy." He denied any desire to revive the odious persecutions of the Jews, while admitting that the "Anti-Semites," the most deadly enemies of Dreyfus and of Colonel Picquart, would not be excluded from the new league. However, in most express terms, every person who has taken part in the agitations in favor of Dreyfus are by that fact rigidly excluded. They are "unclean" because they have signed manifestos in favor of justice and humanity. The ridiculousness of this new league appears all the more plainly in that it heralds itself as a party of reconciliation, and begins with exclusivism.

A number of leaders have been seen by reporters and have given very contradictory answers, showing that they are not agreed among themselves. M. Francois Coppee, for instance, openly says that while the new league is non-political, no fault will be found with members refusing in advance their submission to the pending decision of the supreme court; "for, no matter how it ends, the good sense of the people will never respect an acquittal obtained by millions (bribes understood) as the triumph of justice and verity." Soft words for a man who has heralded his return to God and Catholicism the past year by the publication of a volume called "La Bonne Souffrance." It is only just to say here that other members of the league have expressed their intention to accept the decisoon of the highest court, which must not be confounded with the Supreme Court of the United States, as this latter court possesses more extensive authority than the same body of judges in France, and by virtue of that fact, enjoys a greater respect. Precisely that which lends such intense interest to the famous Dreyfus case.

The supreme court is itself on trial. Its authority is not yet established. The new league of "Intellectuels" proclaim in high-sounding terms that "the glorious deposit of the vital interests of the nation is in the hands of the army." This utterance comes with all the more weight inasmuch as the highest court of France, nor even the sentiment of justice, is not mentioned in the "appeal" intended to unite all good patriots of France in a common union. It would be false to conclude that the "Intellectuels" are opposed to justice and humanity, but in such an hour as this, when there is but one question uppermost in the minds of progressive Frenchmen, the omission of any reference to the Supreme Court and the virtue of its decisions is an unpardonable affront. We have learned only by the aid of "interviews" that they are friends of the Supreme Court in general; not passionately, however, for such utterances as those of M. Francois Coppee, newly born into the kingdom of Romanism and abject servant of the "Soutanes," the clerical party, have received no rebuke. The enemies of the the highest tribunal of justice are members of the organizing executive committee of the "Ligue de la Patrie francaise." We are also justified in believing that many members are at least utterly and criminally indifferent to the sentiment of justice. This seems like an unpardonable accusation, but it is nevertheless true. Sincethe first lines of this letter were written, an astonishing rush has been made to get into the new "army" league.

Le Temps and Le Journal des Dibats, the most trustworthy journals published in Paris, both devoted to the new revision of the Dreyfus case, have given the list of members of the new league. Two columns of names, distinguished nearly every one, in the contemporaneous intellectual life of France! All the professions are represented. It is a glorious array. Certainly the clergy ought to be satisfied, certainly the military authorities have a right to rojoice. They have gained a most magnificant victory. They know to-day that the vast majority of the "Intellectuels" of the nation are their friends unconditionally. And if there is a general in the French army competent to overturn the republic, now is his time or never.

Le Temps has not only given us the list of members of the new league, but it publishes as well to-day (Jan. 5) a letter of M. Pierre Lafitte, former leader of positivism, now professor at the College of France and member of the "Institute." This gray-haired, distinguished professor has not only the courage but the audacity of his convictions. His New Year's sentiments, it is to be hoped, are not those of many others. If so it is time to quit hoping for the betterment of France. We quote his own words:

"In joining 'la Ligue de la Patrie francaise' I wanted to affirm purely and simply the idea of the fatherland. Are there any hidden undercurrents in the league? I don't know and didn't inquire."

"But the Dreyfus affair?" asked the reporter.

"Oh!" cried M. Laffitte, "the Dreyfus affair don't interest me in the least. I don't read what the papers say on that subject. That's all one and the same to me. I know some good-hearted people, friends of mine, who are for Dreyfus; my own brother is one of them. But my sakes! he is perhaps guilty, and suppose that he is innocent, what of it? It would be very unfortunate, to be sure, but then there have been, in the history of the world, a great many judicial errors committed, for example, to commence with the error of which Jesus Christ was the victim, and yet there wasn't a great deal of noise made about it. Men are not infallible; they make mistakes, but it is not necessary to overturn everything each time that somebody or some judge makes a mistake." (Forgeries were mistakes!)

"And what do you think of 'Anti-Semitism' and 'Boulangism?' You know certain members of the new league are of that stripe."

"Not I, for one; I am not the enemy of the Jews. In the times of Gambetta I knew Joseph Reinach and counted him a good citizen; but they are too noisy and they had little part in the Revolution. On the other hand, the Protestants—there's your good republicans. They are a great deal superior to the Jews.

"As to Boulangism, I have no faith in it. I should regard a military government as bad if it could exist, but I don't think it is possible. Since the days of my compatriot saint, Arnand, who was a scoundrel, there has not been a "militaire" capable of assuming power. If they did, they would only have nominal authority; they would not be capable of governing. Have no fears, the 'militaire' are full of prejudices, they have been reared by Jesuits, they believe in God! They are not strong enough to be dangerous. But they are necessary; we have need of them. War and the idea of possible war is useful in order to reawaken and strengthen the idea of the nation to which I come back. I consider the idea of the fatherland indispensable to human life. I repeat that I had no other motive in becoming a member of the league."

Justice to M. Laffitte demanded that we should quote his opinion of the army as well as of justice. We wished simply to display a sentiment, which the abominable Esterhazy had expressed as soldier, but which makes the flesh creep when it falls from the lips of a gray-haired professor, who has the audacity to say to the youth of France that the guilt or innocence of that Jew Dreyfus is altogether trivial. "He isn't the first innocent to be unjustly condemned!" The devil used the same argument to console Faust. Can it be possible that the audacious professor has expressed a sentiment shared by others equally distinguished who have neither the frankness nor the courage to define their p sition. Certainly their "appeal" is couched in cowardly general terms, unworthy of such a host of "Intellectuels," unworthy of the French language, justly celebrated for its clearness of expression. Will the clerical "Intellectuels" dare to define their terms? Possible. They have dared to assert their allegiance to the military idea as the only bond of unity for the French people. This is the New Year's greeting which the academies and universities of France have sent to the army. WM. H. MATLOCK.

A Voice from Cuba.

The mail which arrived in camp to-day brought me two copies of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST—a double bridge of print, connecting me with the homeland across the sea and keeping me in touch with the best religious spirit of this day. I use the discriminating term in that sentence after nearly two decades of practical work as a man and a minister. That which brings me by the shortest, the least hindered and the most practicable route of faith or belief or trust into a daily companionship with Christ as my personal Savior is the best religion for me. Best for every man. As long as I can recognize the simple Word of Christ, and find the fulfillment of that Word in my daily life, that for me is the Christian religion—the best kind of religion.

I realize it because I know that if you take Christ out of an actual, personal transaction, and clothe him in your thought with some mere abstraction; I do not care what you call it—creed, doctrine, church, ritual, confession, emotionalism, all the best and most helpful influences of his life, teachings and Saviorhood will be lost. This is logically true, because the ten thousand shades of thought and feeling and conduct and character; even what you may term his idiosyncrasies, manifested in his years among men, are the things which give him individuality and personality; really make him God's Word in the flesh; manifested to us in this realizable, this get-holdable, this understandable sense.

These shades of thought and feeling, wrought out in the character and conduct of Christ, interpret for us the disposition of heart, not only of Christ, but as well the disposition of the the heart of God the Father. That is another way of saying that we have a right to carry every word, act and motive of Christ, in his life among men, back to the heart of God the Father, where it finds justification, reflection, wholeness of harmony, and say this act, this speech, this motive in Christ tells me of God's disposition toward humanity.

And the companion truth that you and I want is this: that men and women; just ordinary men and women like us, in ordinary life; men and women with all the pathos of the tangled web of life about us; with eyes that are often wet with tears, and with hearts that are so often chiseled with the keen-edged tools of pain, we can turn to this Christ and find, not only a sheltered sanctuary in his presence, but a fellowship like that fellowship he himself had with the Father. Not only that, but in and through that Christ find the very same strength in which he accomplished his works, and lay hold of it as he did. No truth can be finer than that; no truth can be richer, more uplifting, helpful, inspirational; more stimulative toward Christian possibilities.

I am aware that this is not conventionally theological, but it is New Testamentism; Christ's own teaching, and that is enough for me. A personal Christ is my Master in the architecture of righteousness; not any old-while theologian.

Paul winged this truth and shaped it into the familiar phrase, "We all may be changed into Christ's image." This modern gospel is a providential evolution. The age has struck out obstructive conservatism. We are facing east and have the courage to sunder methods and abstractions which have outlived their usefulness, and should hail with great joy that which adapts itself to the modern conditions of men. Christian faith isn't any dogma. It is a personal belief in a personal Christ. A man may outgrow dogma; I somehow imagine that I dropped quite a chunk of it along my Christian journey, but a man cannot outgrow his sense of need of a personal Christ. That Christ makes religion a perpetual thing for my soul here and hereafter. My soul is going beyond this life. Christ is beyond this life. Dogma isn't. Dogma drops out at the coffin scene. For the life of me, I can't religiously love an idea. I must have a person as the object of my heart-love. It is a characteristic of human nature that it loves to personify its ideas. It is the plain statement of a simple fact, that personal feelings belong to persons, not to abstract things. Gratitude, affection, love are feelings proper to persons; persons to persons. Well, gratitude, affection, love, are things Christ asks for, as foundational in our religion. Such elements cannot be expended on dogmas, creeds, statements; I don't care how theological they may be. I believe that God is ready to accept and save a man however small he may be theologically, if only he is large religiously in Christ. The difference between a personal Christ and an idea is just the difference between Christianity and churchianity. Churchianity is the other name for sectarianism; the pernicious malaria of religion. The sectarian is always exploiting the figures of his church membership, and when you analyze him he means, "Come and join our church if you would be saved." Christ says, "Abide in me." Let us take Christ.

Danger In Soda.

Serious Results Sometimes Follow Its Excessive Use.

Common soda is all right in its place and indispensable in the kitchen and for cooking and washing purposes, but it was never intended for a medicine, and people who use it as such will some day regret it.

We refer to the common use of soda to relieve heartburn or sour stomach, a habit which thousands of people practice almost daily, and one which is fraught with danger; moreover the soda only gives temporary relief and in the end the stomach trouble gets worse and worse.

The soda acts as a mechanical irritant to the walls of the stomach and bowels and cases are on record where it accumulated in the intestines, causing death by inflammation or peritonitis.

Dr. Harlandson recommends as the safest and surest cure for sour stomach (acid dyspepsia) an excellent preparation sold by druggists under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. These tablets are large 20 grain lozenges, very pleasant to taste and contain the natural acids, peptones and digestive elements essential to good digestion, and when taken after meals they digest the food perfectly and promptly before it has time to ferment, sour and poison the blood and nervous system.

Dr. Wuerth states that he invariably uses Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in all cases of stomach derangements, and finds them a certain cure, not only for sour stomach, but by promptly digesting the food, they create a healthy appetite, increase flesh and strengthen the action of the heart and liver. They are not a cathartic, but intended only for stomach diseases and weakness and will be found reliable in any stomach trouble, except cancer of the stomach. All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50 cents per package.

Bro. J. S. Myers, pastor of the First Church, Philadelphia, recently closed an 18 days' evangelistic effort in his home church with Mr. Bilhorn, of Chicago, as singer, 38 additions being the immediat result. Bro. Myers says at least 50 will be brought into the church as the result of these special meetings. Considering the field, this is certainly a splendid fruitage. Bro. Myers says Mr. Bilhorn's help was fairly good, but a good singer of the Christian Church would have been much better. With the principle underlying this statement we heartily agree, for a singing evangelist should know how to tell the plain way of salvation as well as sing hymns. There is a large and blessed sphere for the evangelism of song if it can be backed by a full knowledge of the simple and beautiful gospel of Christ. It is reported also that Bro. Rutledge, of the Third Church, Philadelphia, is having a nubmer of additions to the church. We rejoice in these evidences of prosperity in the city of brotherly love and hope they are but a foretaste of better things to come.

Yesterday, the 12th, was the occasion of the utterance of many wise and many unwise things in our metropolitan pulpits, concerning Abraham Lincoln, whose life and character is a source of much inspiration to the youth of the land. Mr. Lincoln was a great man and a noble President, and is a fine product of American Christian civilization; moreover, he was a man distinctly religious, but not a member of the church. He once said whenever he found a church requiring as its only condition of membership, love to God and love to man, with all the mind, strength and soul, with that church he would unite. Now this is a beautiful thing to say, but as every well-informed student of the New Testament knows, it is not in accord with the conditions of entrance into the Church of Christ. Let us give Mr. Lincoln and every other great man all due honor, but let us be careful lest our exhuberant patriotism run away with our better judgment. This seems to be the case with some, especially certain Congregationalists of this city, who have proposed to establish a "Lincoln Memorial Day for Missions." The suggestion is absurd any way you look at it. Mr. Lincoln was not a professed Christian and not a church member. Certainly, Christian people who depend upon a "Lincoln Memorial Day" as the inspiring cause of liberality toward Christian missions, have missed the true motive of evangelism. The love of Christ should constrain us, if it does not.

Just now we are in the midst of Free Public Lecture season in the public schools of New York. And as I am on the staff of lecturers, and have been for the last three years past, having spoken on four topics before about seventy-five audiences in every section of the city, from the Battery to Inwood and Wakefield, I feel that I am justified in the expression of an opinion on the value of this particular work and of the methods employed. Experience and observation alike have led me to believe that this is one of the very best methods of extending the benefits of popular education to the working classes. The lectures covers many lines, as history, biography, literature, science, travel, etc., etc., and are usually illustrated by stereopticon or experiments. The lecturers and the topics are selected with a view to instruct and entertain, and that the work is a success is evinced by the large and attentive audiences that greet the lecturers continually. The marvelous success of this work is due in large measure to the supervisor of lectures, Dr. Henry M. Leipziger. Of the inspiring history of this popular educational movement and Dr. Leipziger's fitness as its leader I shall speak in a future letter, perhaps about the close of the present season; but at this point allow me to suggest that much good may be done by a proper use of the stereopticon in the pulpit and religious work in general. If these methods have proven helpful in the school, why would they not be equally so in the church?

The Rev. Dr. J. M. Taylor, the popular president of Vassar College at Poukeepsie-on-the Hudson, has just been tendered the presidency of Brown University at Providence, R. I., by the trustees of that institution. Dr. Taylor is a minister of the Baptist faith, a fine scholar and a most excellent educator. He has done excellent work at Vassar. This famous college for women will no doubt add no little to the renowned university to which he has been called. At this time, however, strong reasons are urged upon him by the faculty, the alumneæ and the student body of Vassar to retain him at Poukeepsie. This is but another evidence that strong men are ever in demand to fill positions of responsibility and honor. The presidency of Vassar and Brown carry great opportunities for good.

Texas Letter.

Huntsville is one of the most important places in Texas. The State Normal School is located there. It has almost 500 students. Our state board is trying to build up a church. John Logan, one of our strong, prudent men, assisted by Prof. Douthit, as singer, is in a meeting there now, and has had sixteen additions. In a private letter he says: "The importance of Huntsville would be hard to overestimate. The Normal—nearly 500 students mostly from middle-class homes, in the most receptive time of life, open to new truth, and away from the ties of their old-time environment. On the top of all a good leaven of our people in the school. A good church and strong preacher would send out a convinced and converted lot of teachers every year."

W. H. Wright and family have the sympathy of all in the tragic death of their daughter, Miss Lonnie Joe, a girl of fifteen years. She was a member of the Central Church of this city, and all her members deeply regret this sad misfortune.

Dallas is a great talking town. As proof of this we have a new, spacious and elegant telephone building, one of the best in the country. And it is claimed by the general superintendent that the business here is larger than that of St. Louis, and that we have almost as many long-distance lines as Chicago. There are now thirty-three lines radiating from Dallas, and they reach every city and town of importance in the state. We can now talk to our neighbors in St. Louis and Memphis, and in a short time we will be connected with New York and Boston. And perhaps it will not be a great while until we will connect with London, Paris, Rome and Manila. The end of world is a long way off, for we are just beginning to live.

Our brave little band at Brenham is enjoying deserved success. At last they have a new house costing $3,500, with a seating capacity of 400, and a good meeting in progress. B. B. Sanders, our corresponding secretary, is preaching and the pastor, George Van Pelt, is directing things. Sanders says of them, "Their success is wonderful, and the church will soon stand at the front in this city."

M. S. Dunning leaves Hico and becomes pastor at Belton, succeeding Philip S. King.

James N. Crutcher changes from Honey Grove to Paris, as the successor of J. W. Holsapple.

G. B. Hadfield is supplying for the Central Church of Colorado. If he is the man who figured here lately, wearing that name, he is totally unfit for the position. Abundant evidence to this effect can be furnished if desired. Besides, when he left here he was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

The March offering should be the largest in our history. Disciples possessing the spirit of the great Missionary from the skies will make it so if their teachers will furnish them with the necessary facts. A weighty and sacred responsibility rests on the shoulders of the preachers. May every man of us do his whole duty.

President A. Clark announces his intention of resigning the presidency of Add-Ran Christian University, Waco, at the close of the present session. He says he believes his work, that of a pioneer, for the school has been done and adds, "I believe the college needs and is now able to employ a man better fitted for this great work. . . . While I am only 56 years old, I am a little 'sot in my ways,' and have not the vigor and pliancy of my youth. Yes, my calm, cool judgment is that these reins should be placed in younger and more skilled hands." This decision will carry sorrow to many hearts, for the Clarks—Addison and Randolph—have been associated with our school work in Texas so long and so successfully that it is almost impossible to entertain the idea of their feeling that the "reins should be placed in younger and more skilled hands." But this does not mean that Bro. Clark will desert the school. His hard work and sacrifices for it justify him in saying, "My willingness to stand by the school through all its trials and troubles needs no further proof." For 33 years he has been constantly in the schoolroom, either as student or teacher, and it will be a little awkward to make a change; but, if need be, he is the man that can make it.

Texas is a part of the "Sunny South," where flowers are supposed to bloom every month in the year, and the birds never to stop singing. This is the "Sunny South" we dream about and sing about. The real thing is very different. Since early in the fall we've had short intervals of cold weather, and these intervals had already injured our reputation as a land of flowers and sunshine. But during the last sixteen days the weather has been cold enough for an average Missouri winter; and last night the mercury took a tumble, and never stopped till it reached six below zero. And that is not all: at this writing (Feb. 12) it continues cold. What the end will be, and when it will come, I dare not predict, for only two classes prophesy about Texas weather, the newcomer and the fool, of which I am neither. There is great loss of cattle. M. Preachers and Impressions—III.

It is a difficult matter to get men developed just right, so that they shall be just stern and strong enough, and just kind and tender enough. The Master had exactly that delicate poise. He could be at once as wise as a serpent and as harmless as a dove; the priest at the altar and the burning sacrifice, a bleeding lamb and the triumphant lion of the tribe of Judah.

Men will get out of poise and in their sternness and strength become harsh and forbidding; rouse animosities and drive the people from them and their cause. Or they may become so kind and tender as to lose that power which is necessary to accomplish.

In the struggles of this life, if a man cannot attain that exact poise, it will be seen that the lamb-hearted has his place and mission, although the lion-hearted must win the victories of the battlefields.

Of the preachers who came through our place in the fifties there were many lions and but very few lambs.

In about the summer of '57 we were visited by that genial-hearted Christian gentleman, Prof. A. S. Hayden. He was about five feet and ten inches in height, blue-eyed, with a high forehead crowned with standing hair tinged with gray, which might indicate sternness; but his delicately formed face and heart would not permit it. To see him was to love him. He was well-poised, finely educated, self-reliant, well-grounded in the truth, modest, companionable and a real gentleman of "ye olden times." When I was a barefooted boy he sat down in my father's house and talked with me as if I were a man. If he had talked to me as a country urchin the scene would long since have been packed away with the dim and unpleasing. There was no attempt to flatter my pride or impress upon me the fact that I was enjoying a high privilege in hearing the professor talk; he went straight to my boyhood spirit which quickly responded, and I am on his side yet. I may not be capable of judging, but as I have met many Hiram students in the business and professions of life, have felt that his sweet, genteel and courteous spirit must have fallen upon that school as his final benediction. While Hiram students are strong, cultured and fearless they courteously recognize the fact that there are other people. It may be that the spirit of Prof. Hayden has brooded far wider than we know and influences many of the things which are purest and noblest among our people to-day. Farewell, dear heart and face! May God be as gentle and as kind to you as you have been to his wandering children!

If you sit down by the side of a Bethany student, the first thing you know he is trying to jut himself out over you. He has caught the genius of Bethany and the spirit of its mighty, polemic and aggressive founder. Walking the street one day with a Bethany student, we were talking about the effect on the boys of such long courses of studies in the languages in colleges, and in my blunt way I remarked that it made fools of a good many of them; he turned to me with all the grace of a Chesterfield, saying he thought too much of such studies would obtund the intellect. I picked myself up and trotted on after him, fully resolved that the Bethany man should not obtund me, if I was a country fellow!

Probably it was in the year '56 when Benjamin Franklin, of Cincinnati, O., visited our place. The church had been holding its meetings in a country schoolhouse, about five miles southwest of the village of Paw Paw. It was decided that Bro. Franklin should, on Lord's day, preach in the county courthouse in the village. The springday came, clear, fresh and growing. At an early hour the brethren with their carriages and wagons came hurrying in from their country homes. The citizens of the village were crowding the courthouse doors to hear the renowned stranger. When the hour of meeting arrived the house was packed to its utmost. The writer was jammed into a small corner in the gallery, but commanding a clear view of the place where the speaker would stand. When the hour for the sermon came the lion-hearted Franklin rose in his place and announced as his subject, "The Setting up of the Kingdom." There was a peculiar fitness in the subject, for kings and lions walked together. As recalled, he was tall, not graceful, cleanly shaven, had prominent nose, wide mouth, firmly pressed lips, the expression of his face was strong, deep, pure, and in his eyes there gleamed a spirit of high daring and matyrdom. His perception was quick, reading broad, reasoning clear, and his pugnacity made him a natural born combatant. Two peculiarties of his mind, which quickly impressed the hearer, were its wide sweep and strong grasp. He began with the dim light which twinkled in the promise to Eve, and broke forth with stronger power as it was repeated to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob under the numberless stars of heaven. He took us far up on the mountain side where a small stone was being mysteriously cut out without hands, and followed its rolling and expanding course through falling kingdoms until a startling voice cried out, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand!" Like lightning flashes came the life, death, burial, resurrection, ascension and coronation of Christ and giving to him of all power in heaven and on earth. The power of the Spirit seemed to glow in the orator as he described the flame-crowned Peter standing up with the eleven on the day of Pentecost, to make known to the people the crowning of him whom they had crucified and the terms of admission into his glorious kingdom. Against the propositions that the kingdom had been established with Abraham or John the Baptist his arguments were hurled with the vehemence of a Son of Thunder. Peculiar was his delivery; when laying down his propositions he talked in a conversational tone, and as he advanced in their discussion increased in enthusiasm and force until his voice was carried to its utmost power and his form trembled as if in the grasp of a giant force. His delivery rose and fell like the billows of a sea. During the delivery of the sermon the writer sat as if the blood was frozen in his veins, for it was the first time he had felt the thralldom of a great orator. Upon his sturdy life the curtain has fallen and it is a great pleasure to pay this humble tribute to his exalted character and services and his unflinching integrity to and undying love for the "old plea."

The Great Hiram Jubilee Endowment.

The Disciples as a people are very independent. Our churches cling to the idea of independence. We repudiate all unscriptural ecclesiasticism. Shall we therefore be unable to concentrate our forces in a given direction when the interests of the cause of Christ demand it? Shall the boast of our enemies that we are an unorganiced mob be made good? Will we not show that while we have large independence we can voluntarily unite when occasion demands it, for the accomplishment of a worthy object when it can only be accomplishment through extensive co-operation of the churches?

Our colleges are inadequately endowed, in fact we have merely made beginnings in the direction of our college endowment. Our great educational work, which is a fundamental work, stands in jeopardy every hour. Will not the churches of the Disciples throughout the United States from this time forward unite in one solid phalanx for the endowment of its colleges? Hiram is approaching its jubilee. Fifty years of honorable history that commands the respect and confidence of the leading brethren everywhere, pleads for recognition at the hands of this great brotherhood. Will not the churches voluntarily unite in one supreme effort to give Hiram the needed endowment on the occasion of its fiftieth anniversary? We ought to have 100,000 names come in response to our call. There are thousands who expect to assist us in this movement, and yet their names have not yet come in. You are putting it off for a more convenient season. Give our endowment the inspiration of a quick response. The Hiram army is growing; it ought to grow more rapidly if large results are to be achieved.

Mr. Jackson's Twenty Reasons.

Sixteenth—The uninterrupted argument of antiquity, both in sculpture and painting, as they have been handed down the ages, represent John the Baptist and the apostles as baptizing by effusion.

According to the opinion of experts the foregoing statement is contrary to the truth. Concerning the oldest of the pictures Dr. Schaff (Presbyterian) says: "The oldest of these pictures represents the baptized as coming up (after immersion) from the river, which reaches over his knees, and joining hands with the baptizer, who is dressed in a tunic, and assists him in ascending the shore." Again he says: "In a later fresco picture of the baptism of Christ in the catacomb of San Ponziano, outside of Rome, Christ stands undressed in the Jordan with water up to the waist, and John the Baptist from a projecting rock places his hand upon the head of Christ to immerse him, while the dove descends directly from the open heaven." Dr. Schaff has the misfortune to disagree with Mr. Jackson as to the meaning of the pictures; but he bases his opinion upon the works of the best archæologists, such as Rossi, Garrucci, Roller, Northcote and Brownlow, Kraus, Schultze, Cote, etc. The reader can choose between these distinguished men on the one side, and Mr. Jackson on the other.

Seventeenth—The fact that the gospel is intended to be universal is an argument against immersion. God would not have made obligatory a mode circumscribed by climatic conditions. Neither Greenland's icy mountains nor Sahara's burning sands should interpose a barrier. These extremes exclude immersion.

Immersion can be as universally practiced as the earth is universally inhabited. There is no climate beneath the skies where people can permanently live, where immersion cannot be practiced with ease. Dr. Wall (Episcopalian), in his work on infant baptism, says: "And as for the danger of the infants catching cold by dipping, Sir John Floyer in a late book endeavored to show, by reasons taken from the nature of our bodies, from the rules of medicine, from modern experiences, and from ancient history, that washing or dipping infants in cold water is, generally speaking, not only safe, but very useful." Dr. Wall also says that people inhabiting the coldest climats constantly practice bathing by immersion, "even the Samoieds, who live in the coldest climate that is inhabited." Every one knows that the Greek Church practices immersion without difficulty or inconvenience. Dr. Wall again says: "We have no reason to think that the Muscovites do submit to this as to a hardship put upon them by the Christian religion; for they commonly, when they come sweating out of a hot stove, do suddenly throw themselves into cold water, and think it medicinal so to do, as the said Dr. relates." But why array further facts against a childish whim?

Eighteenth—A mode cannot be God-given that is necessarily frequently circumscribed by physical conditions. The infant of tender days and the hoary-headed but repentant sinner, in life's eleventh hour, with fevered brow and almost fleshless frame, are bodily conditions forbidding immersion, but met easily by effusion.

We have already seen that infancy put no difficulty in the way of immersion. But infant baptism is a mere tradition supported by no Scripture authority whatever; and the attempt to put aside immersion with infant sprinkling, forcibly reminds one of the Savior's rebuke: "Ye make void the commandment of God with your tradition." Any old man who ought to be baptized can be immersed.

Nineteenth—It is all-sufficient to know that Jesus used the word baptize to designate a "pouring out" and a "shedding forth."

Jesus did not use the word baptize to designate a "pouring out" and a "shedding forth." He used it to designate the effect of what is figuratively called a "pouring out." Mr. Jackson knows very well that nothing was literally poured out. The Savior used baptize to indicate the overwhelming effect of the Holy Spirit upon those who received him. They did not receive a mere sprinkle of the Spirit, but in overwhelming power.

Twentieth—In administering water baptism by effusion we bring the subject and the element together, just as Jesus did at Pentecost. I accept God's way. All of the elements of bread are found in one crumb, all of wine in one sup, and all of water in one drop; and if the first two of these emblemize the body and blood of Jesus, then one drop of water will emblemize the baptism of the Spirit, or purity.

In reply to the above it is only necessary to say that the idea that baptism "emblemizes the baptism of the Spirit or purity" is utterly without Scripture warrant. The Word of God makes baptism symbolize the burial and resurrection of Christ.

Conclusion—Now, be it remembered that classic Greek is not competent evidence in this cause at issue. Hellenistic Greek, that idiom of the Greek in which the New Testament was written, is; and in that the word "baptizo" is never used in the sense of immerse.

This is but a repetition of former assertions, and has no foundation in fact or reason. No one argues thus except a partisan advocate who is trying to bolster up a tottering cause. Real, broad-minded scholars do not resort to such a subterfuge. Both Philo and Josephus use Hellenistic Greek, and both use baptize in the sense of immerse, as every intelligent person knows. Dr. Meyer, that prince among German scholars and critics, says that baptize means immerse "everywhere in the New Testament."

Now, a word as to organic union of the churches. It would not be for the best, and was never contemplated by our Lord. "The unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace" is all that was ever contemplated. The Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit have that unity, and yet it is not identity.

No ecclesiasticism holding an iron-bound creed with the "historic episcopate" or "exclusive immersion" plank in it can ever do ought but indefinitely postpone the accomplishment of this desire.

It is difficult to determine what Mr. Jackson means by "organic union." If he means a consolidation of all churches into a vast ecclesiasticism, such a thing is not desirable. But he surely does not think that the present divided condition of Christendom is in harmony Scripture teaching. Sectarianism (dvision) is fostered and promoted by unscriptural practices, and such practices will have to be abandoned before a scriptural union can be accomplished. Infant sprinkling, and sprinkling for baptism, both of which are mere human traditions, will have to give place to the scriptural practice of immersing believers. When this is done union will be at the door.

Unity of the People of God.

I have been reading the articles of Mr. Campbell on the possibility of Congregationalists and Disciples becoming one with a great deal of pleasure. I do not agree with the writer in all his premises and conclusions. But he is so fair and free from religious rodomont, and withal so thoughtful that his articles are very refreshing to me. The world is looking to the fraternity in the family of God for the peace for which all civilized men sigh. And whatever assists in an effort of that kind delights those who feel that the Savior's prayer ought to be heeded by all his followers. Once we really heed the wish of the Master, we will pray for unity and work for it as we have never done before. I do not see as does the brother, that the institutions of the Old Testament were laid aside at will by the apostles. I understand them to teach that they belonged to an institution which came to its appointed end; it was a pedagogue to lead that people to the Christ, that we might be justified by faith, but since the faith came, they were no longer under the pedagogue.

As to the consecration of infants by prayer, it is certainly right. But that is not baptism nor any akin to it. But so far as a public setting apart our offspring to the service of the Lord by prayer is concerned, who can object? Indeed, the faithful parent does this every day.

I find much pleasure in working with the Congregationalists; they are comparatively free from the bigotry that troubles most of us. In many things we are one. In all practical service we are just the same; in government we are a unit, practically. And yet it is not apparent to me how we are to get along with the baptismal question. Were it a matter of of our own, we would set it aside in a moment, but it is a command of the Christ, and we feel unwilling to change it in any respect.

But I can see nothing in the way of co-operative unity. Our interests in benevolence, education and missions are just the same. Neither their schools nor ours are what they ought to be. By unity of effort in this respect, they could be made a great power for good. I am thinking just now of the State of Missouri. A union in this respect would give us both a life and power we have never had before. That arranged, and we would have plenty of time to develop the other points of unity, which may not have in them the difficulty which now seems apparent.

Notes and News.

The new house of the First Christian Church, Elwood, Ind., will be dedicated the fourth Sunday in February. F. M. Rains will preach the dedicatory sermon. All near-by churches, ministers and friends are cordially invited to be present. Choir music arranged for the occasion. Come and we will generously care for you. Truly, J. C. HOWE.

A Preachers' Meeting.

The preachers of Southwest Missouri will meet at Bolivar, Mo., May 23-25. The object of the meeting is to help each other and the cause of Christ. Every Christian preacher in the Southwest part of the state is cordially invited to come. Papers will be read by Bros. Oldham, Williams, Hacker, Moore, Abbott, Clay, Davis and others. These names insure an intellectual and spiritual feast. The church here will give free entertainment and request a large number of preachers and brethren to attend. Look out for the program soon.

ATTENTION, COUNTY AND DISTRICT BOARDS.

Last year we failed to publish a schedule of county and district convention dates and many of the counties which had deferred to us were at a loss. In passing over the territory last year careful note was taken of dates for 1899 and we now publish a list of dates, bringing each as near as possible to the date which they themselves selected. Of course, some radical changes had to be made, but it was a matter of compulsion every time. 1. The convenience of the dates for the territory entered. 2. The holding of county conventions just prior to the district, thus making the county convention the feeder of the district gathering. 3. The avoidance of unnecessary travel and hence increased expense on the part of the secretaries.

We disclaim anything authoritative in these dates, yet it will be to the best interest of the service in the state at large, if the counties and districts will accept them. Certainly it is absolutely impossible for us to attend all the conventions, which we would be glad indeed to do if two or three, or, as has been the case, four occur at the very same time. If it be at all possible, then, we believe you will help us by accepting these dates.

Yours in his name,

T. A. ABBOTT,
H. F. DAVIS.

Dedication and Meeting.

Dedicated Bethany Christian Church, Evansville, Ind., Sunday, Feb. 5th, and continued with a meeting. Have had 15 added the first week and 26 to date. Nine last night, and five others were buried with Christ in baptism. This congregation was composed of only 33 members, but they have shown themselves heroes of faith. A Sunday-school was established about five years ago in a private residence, and finally a lot was bought and a home was changed to accommodate the little band, and through their own efforts and the help of other brethren here and the Church Extension —that blessed mission of the people—they are now in a neat and comfortable little chapel. The Sunday-school already taxes the capacity of the new building. The First Church here is also very weak, and we are in a very sinful city, with 363 saloons and no city laws as to Sunday violations, and it does not need a prophet to tell the outcome of such affairs. Bro. Ira Billman, a deep, spiritual, consecrated pastor, of Saginaw, Mich., has just located with the First Church, and has worked very hard for the success of the "faith" here. We are now planning to make a heroic effort to bring primitive Christianity before the entire city, uniting both churches in a ten days' meeting at Evans' Hall (seating capacity, 2,500). Our house has been crowded inspite of the terrible weather. This work is of God (Acts 5:38, 39) and must succeed.

Alabama Notes.

I hear good reports from the churches at Montgomery and Birmingham, and the cause of the Master in general is slowly yet surely progressing in the state. With better educational facilities in view in the South and the consequent greater enlightenment of the masses, the Disciples have much to hope and work for in this section.

Where ignorance in general abounds "our plea" in particular makes little headway. It takes intelligence to be a Disciple. We represent intelligence in religion to a greater extent than any other body. Religious intelligence should keep step with general intelligence. We stand for this and we are strong (or the principles for which we stand are strong, professed ofttimes by people of other bodies) where the schoolmaster has been abroad in the land most. An educated and paid ministry is the crying need of the churches in the South. It is truly pitiful to hear the average sermon, (outside of the large centers of population and there are few of these), which is dished up to the people. Sickly sentiment, pious platitude, senseless superstition, glittering generality, superfluous sound, are its chief constituents. It takes the average expounder longer to say nothing than can be conceived. Last Sunday I heard a preacher hold forth for three hours. He truly labored and brought forth a mouse, like the proverbial mountain. There was no point to the whole thing; it was flat and flabby, and yet was regarded as a "great effort" (as no doubt it was) by his audience, half of which slept most of the time and the other half walked in and out at intervals to keep from sleep. But he had to keep on, as in these parts length is the measure of a sermon, and of course "sound."

The sectarian spirit is rampant, even among those who claim to be "no sect," and the smallest divergence from some established custom or notion is regarded as a woeful departure from the faith once delivered to the saints. I have heard the Endeavor Society denounced as an "immoral institution" by one of the leading evangelists of "the Church of Christ." I have heard C. C. Smith bitterly abused by the same man for his work in the interests of Negro Education and Evangelization. I had one member refuse to shake my hand because she could tell from the way in which I sung that I had been raised where they used an organ! In the same congregation I was offered some tobacco by a sister as payment for my "preachment," and I thanked her for her kindness, but said I didn't use it. She pressed it on me, begging me to take it, knowing that my "woman" would be glad to use it if didn't.

I know of one church which has a standing rule not to allow a preacher to occupy its pulpit who hails from a Northern state, because such are said to believe in "organs and niggers!"

Nothing but the schoolmaster can remove such conditions, and it will take many of them and generations of teaching to slightly modify them. In a new country this can be done on short notice, but in an old country like this, it can only be done in ages, if at all. Yet we must work and pray, educate and agitate and keep whistling to keep our courage up. The greatest hope of the Disciples is in the emigrant from the North; and in the industrial centers, where he is most likely to go, flourishing congregations can be built up. More anon.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

Camden Point is a school town well situated in the heart of a most magnificent farming country and circle of citizens well to do financially and who delight in literary pursuits. Its two schools are under "our folks" with Prof. W. N. Stagner in charge of the Military Institute and Bro. A. O. Riall over the Orphan School. These men also lead in the Bible-school work. Bro. Stagner is superintendent and A. O. a teacher. A. P. Terrell takes no greater interest in any department of the church than in the Bible-school and I have never had heartier co-operation by any minister in the state than that given me by A. P. The school here had been giving us $25 a year for the work, but felt sorely pressed in some respects last year and so made their pledge $20. But the brethren gave me over $26, better than they have ever done, owing to the kindness of the Perrins, Middletons, Hardestys and others in numbers. Half the school is from the Orphan School, whose leaders and teachers were among the first in giving me ready co-operation. While the morning was not so favorable, every teacher but one was present and ready for work and of those on hand, five taught with nothing in their hands except Bibles, and Teachers' Bibles are so cheap that this ought to be true in the case of ALL teachers of the Word of God, and I was especially glad to see Camden Point leading in this good work.

J. E. Dunn has finally accepted the superintendency of the Richmond Bible-school and the report is that he is making the work and the workers move. As a secular school teacher Bro. Dunn has been a standing success in his home for lo these many years, and the same methods will make him a successful superintendent in the Bible-school.

The last few weeks have been so bold that all our field force have lost much valuable time, but it could not be helped and we hope to soon be pushing the work again. Many appointments were cancelled by the schools, for they felt the time and occasion so inopportune that the visit was useless, yet we field men had to keep trying to get in and once in to do the very best possible, and glad that the weather clerk promises something better from now on.

Through the kindness of my fellowworker, A. O. Riall, I crossed over to Newmarket, where we had a fine welcome from preacher and people, though they had just received their new chairs and were then pushing the membership for help in paying for the same. N. C. Thompson is their preacher, T. J. Singleton their superintendent and the Bryants the burden-bearers. The school more than raised the apportionment and gave me kind invitation to return. Another night at the Orphan School, then in a blinding snowstorm, conveyed by Bro. Riall again to my place of departure, thanks to him and his in whose success I always rejoice.

The Platte City parsonage at a cost of nearly $2,500 is one of the ways they have of doing things, and then to install the minister with no charges for rent will be just like the Platte City people to do, for in the items of liberality and open-heartedness they are not surpassed in the state. Oscar and Campbell Wells, with the bank burdens and the latter a member of the board of university curators, are yet just as active in the school as ever and always remindful of the Missouri Bible-school work. E. B. Redd continues for another year, of course.

The bad weather only makes the home department that much better and the more appreciated on the part of older and delicate persons espeially, and your school should be one with us. Send to this office for any information or samples or for any help and we will gladly do aught possible to assist you in the organization, and you will find what cheerful and ready co-operation will do.

Are You Ready for the March Offering?

The time has come when the last word should be spoken in order to secure the desired results in our effort to send the gospel to the lost. The churches will not be asked for another offering this year to save the heathen, so that what we do for that work must be done at once. And what we do should be thoroughly done. A failure now cannot be repaired in the next twelve months. We cannot, therefore, afford to fail in taking this offering. We trust that every one has done his best for this cause. It is God's cause, as well as the cause of humanity. God has an interest in every soul that lives upon the earth to-day. They are his by creation, but doubly so now that Jesus has died to redeem them. What we are to God all others may be, if only we shall win them to love and serve him. The very joy that we shall have in heaven will be in proportion to the souls saved. And if we have been instrumental in saving some soul, what rejoicing there shall be when we come before God's throne and there behold the results of our labor in the souls saved! For this reason, therefore, we feel that it is an important thing to be ready for the March offering.

This thought suggests another. And that is, that our preparation should be upon the principle of doing our best for God and humanity. It will not do for us to simply take the offering. It should be our aim to get our people to make the very best offering that they can at this time. The time will come when they will be glad that they have given to this work, and when that time does come their joy should be as great as possible. If only our people could and would give with cheerfulness and devotion to God they would all the sooner come into the full enjoyment of their spiritual privileges. But as long as men give dimes when they are able to give dollars, or dollars when they should give ten dollars—just so long will we fail to enjoy giving. Sometimes when a man has with singular earnestness poured out his whole soul in prayer he feels that it was the happiest moment in his life. So is it when in the same spirit we give to support our Lord's great cause, and earnestly seek the salvation of souls. Could you stand idly by and see another drown, making no effort to save him, and ever afterwards be happy? We do not believe you could. On the contrary, that struggling soul would forever be before you, and it would rob you of happiness. In like manner when we shall have become spiritually conscious of the great loss of souls in this world, and shall know that we never made an effort to save them as we might have done, we shall then be very unhappy. This being true, how very necessary for us to do our best on the first Lord's day in March to secure the best offering to support the gospel in foreign lands.

A final word to our preachers. Make no mistake in your sermon or methods this year. Not long since we visited a church where the pastor is reported to have said a year ago "that no man or church was honest who would not raise the amount they were apportioned to raise." This was a serious mistake. That congregation is composed of honest men and women; but they cannot be driven, and none of us has the right to assume that our brethren are not just as faithful to God as we are. If we see matters in a different light from that in which they appear to them, it may be because we are better instructed in the things of the kingdom. It is then our duty to lovingly teach them about the interests of the kingdom. Brethren, do not be satisfied to preach your sermon this year on missions and this offering until you have, with tenderness and love, thought of every one of your brethren before you, your brethren who have gone to the mission fields, and the poor heathen who are in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity simply because they do not know of God's love and Jesus' death for them. Before you go into the pulpit on that day, while you are in private, bring all this work before God in prayer. Ask him to help you, and to make you a blessing that day in presenting his claims for the offerings of his people.

Truly yours, B. F. Clay,
Western Field Secretary.

Have You Ever Thought

That one thousand millions of the human race are yet without the gospel and could not be saved if they wanted to, because they have no means of knowing of Jesus?

That every day one hundred thousand human souls are dying without the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, just as really as if every morning you were to read in your paper that a city of one hundred thousand souls had been buried in some earthquake or awful calamity?

That religious selfishness is supplying one Christian worker for every fifty people in this

Dr. C. C. Drummond, Miss Mildred Franklin, land, and that on an average there is about one for every two hundred thousand in heathen lands, and we are spending five hundred times as much for our own religious privileges as we give for the salvation of the world?

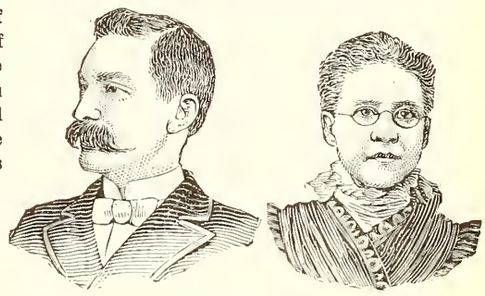
That there are whole nations yet unevangelized, including such lands as Arabia, Thibet, Nepaul, the Soudan, some of the South African republics and many hundreds of tribes in the interior of Africa, as well as many aboriginal tribes on the borders of China?

That while you are enjoying the light of civilization, the joys of a Christian home, the privileges of the gospel, the hopes that light the deathbeds of your dear ones and the future of your existence, millions in Africa every year are crushed by the slave trade, thousands of the little baby-girls of China are thrown to the birds and beasts of prey, innumerable child-widows in India are suffering a bondage worse than death and hundreds of millions of the women of the East are dragging out their lives in wretched bondage and degradation, and for eternity the brightest hope they have is that after their transmigration into beasts and reptiles they may at last have the happiness to be born again on earth as man?



Lift up your eyes and look on the fields. The harvest is great, but the laborers are few.

That God is speaking to you and calling you, and that in this great work the Lord hath need of thee?

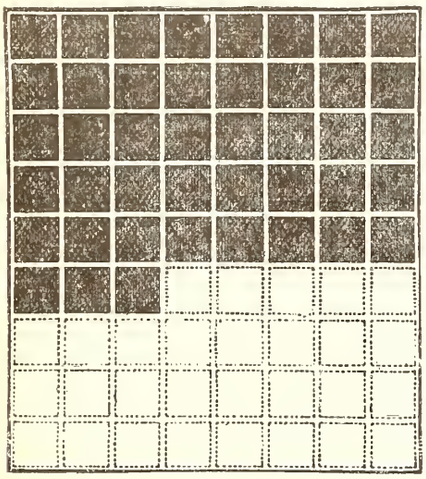
"A Year of Agony."

When I went to Huntington, West Virginia, in the fall of 1897 as pastor of the Church of Christ I found an enormous church debt hanging like a cloud over the people. They were all poor in the world's goods, and had been paying all or more than they could. I remained with them until the close of 1898. They kept paying, but it seemed the debt really grew. I did my best to rally them. Thus we labored on until the first of December last. I never labored in such utter darkness. They were as noble a band of people as I ever saw, and we all loved each other, but there was that awful octopus of ten thousand dollars' debt.



C. B. Titus, Mrs. C. B. Titus
Lu Cheo fu, China.

On the morning of December 12th the sheriff was to sell the building. Hence when we came together on the morning of December 4th to worship, a deep gloom had settled on all our hearts. That morning a letter was received from the Church Extension Board, saying that Brother G. W. Muckley would be with us on the evening of the 5th, and would loan us $5,000 if we would raise the balance. The good people wept for joy. O, it was what God hath wrought! Our extremity was God's opportunity. Brother Muckley came, also Brother A. E. Zeigler, the former pastor who built the church. These two with helpers began a canvass, so that by the 11th of December it was made sure that the amount would be raised and the church building saved. The effect was wonderful. What hopes were revived! Daylight was dawning. Brother Muckley sped away to other work, with the "God-bless-you" upon every lip. Then Brother Zeigler remained to close up the business, and aided in a meeting lasting ten days, in which twenty-two were added. Thus closed our work as pastor at Huntington. All the months were dark and gloomy, but the morning dawned and our closing days were all sunshine. If the Extension Board had not come to our aid we would undoubtedly have lost the building. So we say all too gently to the great brotherhood who made it possible, "Thanks for your saving our church building." And we sincerely thank the good brethren of the board and that noble Christian, Brother Muckley. This one work by this board is enough to settle once for all the great importance of the work they do. It was God's doings, and it was marvelous in our eyes. To him be all the praise!

Remove the Black Squares.

We have in round numbers in this country 7,200 churches. Each square in the above diagram represents 100 churches. There are 72 squares, representing 7,200 churches. The white squares represent the churches that gave to Foreign Missions last year. The black squares, those that did not give. It will be seen that there are 29 white squares, representing 2,907 contributing churches. There are 43 black squares, representing 4,300 churches that did not contribute. During the past five years there has been a gain of 1,700 contributing churches; that is, 17 of the black squares have been changed to white. It is our purpose this year to make a bold effort to change every black square to white. This will be a most appropriate way to celebrate the Jubilee Year.

Will you not see that your church observes the March offering, the first Sunday in March? We are hoping a large number of new churches will join the missionary ranks this year and help in preaching the gospel to every creature. Remember, this is the church's first and supreme business.

Let us remove the last black square this year and be able to hang the chart in the Jubilee Convention next October with every square white. That of itself will be a great event of the Convention.

Illinois Mission Notes.

Summary of work done by the state board for the quarter ending Jan. 31st. Including the service of the secretary there were six men in the field serving 208 days and visiting 30 churches. They preached 180 sermons, had 75 conversions and added 32 otherwise. One church was organized, likewise one Bible-school and one church reorganized. The collections were $462.75 and expenses $66.89. Cost of work for the quarter, 427.50. Money raised on preacher's salary, $125, and $300 on a debt.

Our territory consists of six districts, and of these two pay nothing into our treasury, being misionary territory, we using half of what comes to our treasury from three districts and one-fourth from the one. With only $800 coming from the churches since August 1st, and divided as shown above, it will appear just what capital we have had to do business with. Our work for the quarter is very creditable for the means at our command, and demonstrates the ability of our board to do a fine missionary service if it was well sustained by the preachers and churches.

Study the above and tell the brethren that we never had finer prospects and ask them to send substantial gifts. Strength in Illinois is strength outside.

We have a fine meeting under way at Ridge Farm, a new point, and will begin at Joliet soon. Money to pay for the service is sorely needed.

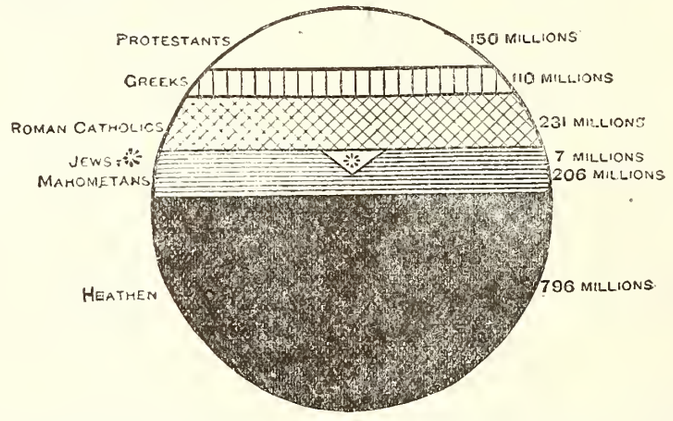
Why be a Christian?

Now that we have more accurate knowledge of all the nations of the earth and their religions we may confidently assert that the highest, most beautiful and most to be desired type of character is that which best and most fully embodies the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth; that from which shines forth the adorning graces of his gospel; that which most resembles the Christ himself. Tnis being true of itself furnishes a sufficient reason why all men should be Christians quite independent of all questions of theology and of future destiny. All men should be Christians for the sake of the character which it forms and develops within them. Like its author, they should love righteousness for righteousness' sake.



The ideal home is possible only upon the basis of the spirit and principles of the religion of Christ. No enlightened parent in this land prefers a pagan education for his children. He may spurn the schools of a religious sect, but he cannot despise the education of the best school system of the Lighest civilization the world has yet known. Every parent owes it to his children to rear them under the best possible influences, and this he cannot do without an experimental knowledge of the spirit and requirements of the gospel of Christ. To seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness is man's first duty. The ideal individual, the ideal home, demands it.

All men should be Christians for the sake of the civilization that a pure and universally received Christianity would produce. The best civilization which the world has yet known is that which has been developed in a nation where Christianity has been most dominant. But the best civilization the world has yet known is far from that of an ideal Christian civilization, and can never be realized without a general acceptance of Christianity. We have come to a time in the world's history when collective bodies, whole nations, as well as individuals, must be Christianized. The non-Christian methods of the business world to-day are the greatest hindrances to the success of Christianity in the world. Men think that they cannot be Christians and compete with their fellowmen in the race of life in our present civilization, and so prefer business to Christianity. If the dominant powers of our civilization were Christian this trouble would not exist. We can remove it only by Christianizing the nation. For this reason every parent, business man and voter ought to be in heart and life a disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ.

All men in all civilized nations ought to be Christians for what Christianity would do for the non-Christian nations. Our interest in the welfare of the nations who know not God and his Son, the world's Savior, ought to inspire us to join the ranks of those who are trying to lift them into the higher life. The Christianization of the great continents of the Eastern Hemisphere is the greatest question of the day. The different races of men and nations are becoming so close that their better interests can be developed and conserved only by a common religion, and that religion must be Christianity. The enlightened world will accept no other; no other will do God's love for the world should awaken an interest in every professed follower of Christ for the welfare of his most distant fellowman.

Christianity satisfies the better yearnings of our nature, which cannot be said of any other religion in as full and co nplete a sense. The soul of man pants after the living God; not the wonder-working God of buried ages; not the distant, august occupant of an invisible throne; not in the inventor of an automatic world; not an indifferent observer of inexorable laws, but a present indwelling divine guest, an all-loving Father. If there is any true want of our nature supplied by any particular religion which Christianity fails to supply, then would men have a reasonable excuse for its rejection; but such is not the case. The Christianity of Christ is not an imperfect religion, neither can it be, because of the indwelling presence of Christ and his Father.

Christianity holds out to man the brightest prospect of the beyond. Talk as we will we cannot eradicate from our hearts the great question of human destiny, and no religion brings to the heart of man such consolation, such possibilities, such inspirations as that of Christ. Every other religion is more or less gross and mythical on all problems of futurity. Here Christianity is as unfaltering in its statements, as unreserved in its promises, and as soul-satisfying in its outlook as it is in things pertaining to the present world. There is no comfort more sweet in the declining years of life than that which comes of a blessed hope in Christ. Neither is there any legacy so rich and so comforting to those who mourn the loss of loved ones as that of a Christian record.

Without the acceptance of Christianity no man can reciprocate the love of God to that degree of which he is capable, neither can he attain to the fullness of his true mission in this world.

THE Kola Plant CURES ASTHMA

The Kola Plant.

Free. The African Kola Plant is Nature's Positive Cure for Asthma. In the short time since its discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing Specific Cure for every form of Asthma. Its cures are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, West Virginia, writes to the New York World, on July 23rd, that it cured him of Asthma of thirty years' standing, and Mrs. E. Johnson, of No. 417 Second St., Washington, D. C., testifies that for years she had to sleep propped up in a chair unable to lie down, night or day. The Kola Plant cured her at once. Mr. Alfred C. Lewis, editor of the Farmer's Magazine, of Washington, D. C., was also cured when he could not lie down for fear of choking. Many other sufferers including Rev. S. H. Eisenburg, Center Hall, Pa., and Rev. John L. Moore, Alice, S. C., gives similar testimony, proving it truly a wonderful remedy. If you suffer from Asthma in any form, in order to prove the power of this new botanical discovery, we will send you one Large Case entirely free. All that we request in return is that when cured yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. It costs you absolutely nothing. Send your address to The Kola Importing Company, No. 1168 Broadway, New York.

Make the Little Children Happy.

Make the little children happy
With a word, a smile, a kiss,
It takes but a moment, mother,
And its charm you should not miss!
They all have their little worries,
And their cross is hard to bear;
Treat the darlings ever kindly,
And beguile the hours of care.

When they hear the kind word spoken,
It soothes all their fleeting pain,
And your smile will bring them pleasure,
Fill their hearts with love's refrain.
When your kiss is theirs to cherish,
They will pay it back with zest,
And 'twill make their childhood happy,
While they cling to mother's breast.

Should the little clouds annoy them,
And the sunbeams cease to cheer,
Tell them soon the sky will brighten,
And the shadows disappear;
Wipe away the tears of childhood,
That fall lightly day by day,
While you take their hand and lead them
Where the sunshine lights the way.

Do not speak to them in anger,
Or in harsh or cruel tone;
It will grieve their hearts to hear you,
And will brutalize your own!
But be careful how you chide them,
Shield the little ones you love,
While you lead their feet in safety
In the paths the good should rove.

Be as gentle with the children
As a mother loved should be,
And remember, life is fleeting,
They are only lent to thee!
Speak to them in kindness ever,
Give your smiles to light the way,
Kiss their lips in love's devotion,
Lead them where the sunbeams lay.

The Crimes of the Tongue.

The second most deadly instrument of destruction is the dynamite gun; the first is the human tongue. The gun merely kills bodies; the tongue kills reputations and, ofttimes, ruins characters. Each gun works alone; each loaded tongue has a hundred accomplices. The havoc of the gun is visible at once. The full evil of the tongue lives through all the years; even the eyes of Omniscience might grow tired in tracing it to its finality.

The crimes of the tongue are words of unkindness, of anger, of malice, of envy, of bitterness, of harsh criticism, gossip, lying and scandal. Theft and murder are awful crimes, yet in any single year the aggregate sorrow, pain and suffering they cause in a nation is microscopic when compared with the sorrows that come from the crimes of the tongue. Place in one of the scale-pans of justice the evils resulting from the acts of criminals, and in the other the grief and tears and suffering resulting from the crimes of respectability, and you will start back in amazement as you see the scale you thought the heavier shoot high in air.

At the hands of thief or murderer few of us in life suffer, even indirectly. But from the careless tongue of friend, the cruel tongue of enemy, who is free? No human being can live a life so true, so fair, so pure as to be beyond the reach of malice, or immune from the poisonous emanations of envy. The insidious attacks against one's reputation, the loathsome innuendoes, slurs, half-lies by which jealous mediocrity seeks to ruin its superiors, are like those insect parasites that killed the heart and life of a mighty oak. So cowardly is the method, so stealthy the shooting of the poisoned thorns, so insignificant the separate acts in their seeming, that one is not on guard against them. It is easier to dodge an elephant than a microbe.

In London they have just formed an Anti-scandal League. The members promise to combat in every way in their power "the prevalent custom of talking scandal, the terrible and unending consequences of which are not generally estimated."

Scandal is one of the crimes of the tongue, but it is only one. Every individual who breathes a word of scandal is an active stockholder in a society for the spread of moral contagion. He is instantly punished by nature by having his mental eyes dimmed to sweetness and purity, and his mind deadened to the sunlight and glow of charity. There is developed a wondrous, ingenious perversion of mental vision by which every act of others is explained and interpreted from the lowest possible motives. They become like certain carrion flies, that pass lightly over acres of rose gardens to feast on a piece of putrid meat. They have developed a keen scent for the foul matter upon which they feed.

There are pillows wet by sobs; there are noble hearts broken in the silence whence comes no cry of protest; there are gentle, sensitive natures seared and warped; there are old-time friends separated and walking their lonely ways with hope dead and memory but a pang; there are cruel misunderstandings that make all life look dark—these are but a few of the sorrows that come from the crimes of the tongue.

A man or woman may lead a life of honesty and purity, battling bravely for what they hold dearest, so firm and sure of the rightness of their life that they never think for an instant of the diabolic ingenuity that makes evil and evil report where naught but good really exists. A few words lightly spoken by the tongue of slander, a significant expression of the eyes, a cruel shrug of the shoulders, with a pursing of the lips—and then friendly hands grow cold, the accustomed smile is displaced by a sneer, and one stands alone and aloof with a dazed feeling of wonder at the vague, intangible something that has caused it all.

For this craze for scandal sensational newspapers of to-day are largely responsible. Each newspaper is not one tongue, but a thousand or a million tongues, telling the same foul story to as many pairs of listening ears. The vultures of sensationalism scent the carcass of immorality afar off. From the uttermost parts of the earth they collect the sin, disgrace and folly of humanity, and show them bare to the world. They do not even require facts, for morbid memories and fertile imaginations make even the worst of the world's happenings seem tame when compared with their monstrosities of invention. These stories, and the discussions they excite, develop in readers a cheap, shrewd power of distortion of the acts of all around them.

If a rich man gives a donation to some charity, they say: "He is doing it to get his name talked about—to help his business." If he gives it anonymously, they say: "Oh, its some millionaire who is clever enough to know that refraining from giving his name will pique curiosity; he will see that the public is informed later." If he does not give to charity, they say: "Oh, he's stingy with his money, of course like the rest of the millionaires." To the vile tongue of gossip and slander virtue is ever deemed but a mask, noble ideals but a pretense, generosity a bribe.

The man who stands above his fellows must expect to be the target for the envious arrows of their inferiority. It is part of the price he must pay for his advance. One of the most detestable characters in all literature is Iago. Envious of the promotion of Cassio above his head, he hated Othello. His was one of those low natures that become absorbed in sustaining his dignity, just as Spain to-day talks of "preserving her honor"—forgetting it has so long been dead that even embalming could not preserve it. Day by day Iago dropped his poison; day by day did subtle resentment and studied vengeance distill the poison of distrust and suspicion into more powerfully insidious doses. With a mind wonderfully concentrated by the blackness of his purpose, he wove a network of circumstantial evidence around the pure-hearted Desdemona, and then murdered her vicariously, by the hand of Othello. Her very simplicity, confidence, innocence and artlessness made Desdemona the easier mark for Iago.

Iago still lives in the hearts of thousands, who have all his despicable meanness without his cleverness. The constant dropping of their lying words of malice and envy have in too many instances at last worn away the noble reputation of their superiors.

To sustain ourselves in our own hasty judgments we sometimes say, as we listen, and accept without investigation, the words of these modern Iagos: "Well, where there is so much smoke, there must be some fire." Yes, but the fire may be only the fire of malice, the incendiary firing of the reputation of another by the lighted torch of envy, thrown into the innocent facts of a life of superiority.

At this Chrismastide, when peace and good will should reign over all the earth, let us not feel we are doing our full duty by making tangible gifts of "presents" to those around us. Let us make this sacred birthday anniversary memorable by renouncing forever the crimes of the tongue, by making to humanity the gift of our life and influence free of the impurity of all evil speaking, and speak, as the angels of Bethlehem, only "peace and good will to men."—Saturday Evening Post.

Little Edith had been in the habit of eating out the soft part of her bread and tucking the crust under the edge of her plate. The other evening Edith was detected in this, and her mother said: "Edith, how often have I told you about leaving your crusts? There may be a day you will be glad to get them." "Yes, mamma," replied Edith promptly; "that's what I'm saving 'em for."

Two Views.

"What have you done to-day?" I asked a rope-maker, writes Rev. Dr. W. B. Wright.

"Oh, sir, ten hours of hard work, just twisting tow, my fingers sore, my lungs choaked with dust. I did not come to the prayer-meeting last night, I was too tired; went to sleep when I was trying to say my prayers. I sometimes think if it were not for Mary I would end it all—nothing but work, work, work. I am so tired, and I only make enough to keep body and soul together."

This is one side. See the other. A ship with eleven hundred souls on board is being driven upon the shore—a land of crags, like giant teeth, stretching up sheer and sharp. One anchor after another is dropped, each checking the speed of the vessel's drift. The last anchor is down. Will it hold? Yes, the ship is saved!

Go, tell the rope-maker not to think of the toil, and the dust, and the monotony, but of the eleven hundred men and women saved. These things are written in the Lamb's Book of Life—the ring of every hammar, the click of every needle, the whir of every loom. They who truly wait upon the Lord shall hear his angels strengthening them as they strengthened Christ, with songs of peace and good will to men.—Union Gospel News.

About Elephants' Teeth.

Elephants have no front teeth, and they never eat flesh, or any food that requires tearing apart.

Eight teeth are all they have, two above and below on each side, huge yellow molars as wide as a man's hand, and about two inches thick.

Over these hay or fodder is shifted by the queerest, ugliest tongue in the whole animal kingdom, a tongue that is literally hung at both ends, having no power or movement except in the middle, where it shifts back and forth from side to side, arching up against the roof of the big mouth like an immense wrinkled pink serpent.

There is nothing stranger than the working of an elephant's tongue, unless it be the working of his breathing apparatus when he sleeps.

Elephants, like human beings, have two sets of teeth—the milk teeth, which are smaller than the permanent molars, fall out when the animals are about fourteen years old.

These baby teeth, which are, nevertheless, enormous, are occasionally picked up by circus men among the fodder, and preserved as curiosities.

A Doubtful Grandfather.

"That there is the grave of my grandfather," said the old man, waving his cane, "Isaac or Reginald Latimore—"

"It says 'Isaac' on the tombstone," the small boy interrupted. "Which was his name, Isaac or Reginald? And didn't he have one name?"

"It ain't which was his name, but which was he, for whether he was Isaac or Reginald is a doubtful question which can't be settled. He is labeled Isaac there, because, when he died the relatives all agreed that it was scandalous to have the question of who he was keepin' on after his death, so they agreed to take a vote as to who he was and abide by it; and at the funeral ten voted he was Reginald and thirty-two voted Isaac; so Isaac is the name on the stone. But I have allers thought that the vote was influenced by the fact that the folks, bein' good orthodox people, felt that it was more Christianlike to put a good Bible name like Isaac on the stone than a highfalutin', worldly name like Reginald. You just sit down and I'll tell you how who my grandfather was really come to be so doubtful."—Wardon Allan Curtis, in February Lippincott's.

Noted Structures.

The largest dwelling house in the world is the Freihaus, in a suburb of Vienna, containing in all between 1,200 and 1,500 rooms, divided into upward of 400 separate apartments. This immense house, wherein a whole city lives, works, eats and sleeps, has thirteen courtyards—five open and eight covered—and a garden within its walls.

The most magnificent work of architecture is the Taj Mahal in Agra, Hindustan. It was erected by Shah Jehan to the memory of his favorite queen. It is octagonal in form, of pure white marble, inlaid with jasper, carnelian, turquoise, agate, amethysts and sapphires. The work took 22,000 men twenty years to complete, and though there were free gifts and the labor was free, the cost was $16,000,000.

The greatest structure ever raised by the hand of man is the great pyramid of Cheops, founded 4,000 years ago, and measuring 746 feet square on the base and 449 feet high. It took twenty years in construction; 100,000 men worked for three months, and, being then relieved, were succeeded by an equally large corps. The massive stones were brought from Arabia, 700 miles away. The cost of the work is estimated at $145,000,000.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES

John I. Brown & Son, Boston.

A man must reap as he sows. If he sows ill-health he will reap ill-health. If he neglects his health the weeds of disease will grow up and choke it.

It is a daily and hourly marvel that men will recklessly neglect their health, when a moment's thought should tell them that they are courting death. It lies in most every man's power to live to a green old age. If a man would only take the same care of himself that he does of his horse, or cow, or dog, he would enjoy good health. When a man owns a hundred-dollar horse, and it gets sick, he does not waste any time about doctoring him up. When his garden gets full of weeds, he doesn't delay about rooting them out, for he knows they will choke out his vegetables. When he is out of sorts, sick, nervous, headachey, has no appetite and is restless and sleepless at night, he pays little attention to it. The result is consumption, nervous prostration or some serious blood or skin disease. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the best of all medicines for hard working men. It gives edge to the appetite, facilitates the flow of digestive juices, invigorates the liver and purifies and enriches the blood. It is the great blood-maker and flesh-builder. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of lingering coughs, bronchial and throat affections, weak lungs, bleeding from lungs and kindred affections. Do not wait until the lungs are too far wasted to admit of being cured.

"As you know, five years ago the doctors had given me up to die with consumption," writes Mr. E. G. McKinney, of Deepwater, Fayette Co., W. Va. "I took treatment from Dr. R. V. Pierce, and am entirely well now. I had taken steadily, as directed, his 'Golden Medical Discovery.'"

Lincoln's Don'ts for Boys.

The name Lincoln must ever command the respect of every American, young and old, rich aud poor. The sayings of others may be gainsayed, but his cannot be, even by his enemies, if he has any.

His words on all questions of state, of morals and of social interests, are especially noted for their simplicity, directness, force and good sense. We are told that he often preached what he called a sermon to his boys. It was short, direct, forcible and made of a series of "don'ts," as follows, "Boys, don't drink, don't smoke, don't chew, don't swear, don't gamble, don't lie, don't cheat, don't disobey your parents."

O boys of to-day, for your own sake, for the sake of your country, heed Abraham Lincoln's don'ts.

A Preacher's Reverie.

The pastor of a struggling church was lying in his bed;
Three months arrears of salary was pillowing his head;
His couch was strewn with tradesmen's bills that pricked his heart like thorns,
And nearly all life's common ills were goading him like horns.
The deacon sat beside him, as the moments ticked away,
And bent his head to catch the words the parson had to say:

"If I never shall arise from this hard bed on which I lie;
If my warfare is accomplished and it's time for me to die,
Take a message to the janitor before I pass away—
Tell him fires are for December and the windows are for May.

"Tell him when he lays the notices upon the pulpit's height,
To shove them 'neath the cushion, far out of reach and sight.
And when he hears the preacher's voice, in whispers soft expire,
That is the time to slam the doors and rattle at the fire.

"And now the deacons—tell the deacons, too, through all the busy week
To hang their boots up in the sun to hatch a Sunday squeak.
With steel-shod canes to poke the man who comes to church to snore,
And use the boys who laugh in church to mop the vestry floor.

"There's another, too; the woman who talks the sermon through;
Tell her I do not mind her buzz—my listening days are few,
Tell her to leave her mouth at home some Sunday for a minute,
And listen to a text, at least, without a whisper in it.

"And tell the Board of Trustees not to weep with bitter tears,
For I can't be any deader then than they have been for years.
And tell half my congregation that I'm glad salvation's free,
For that's the only chance for them, between the desk and me.

"And a farewell to the choir! How the name my memory racks!
If they could get up their voices as they do get up their backs!
Why, the stars would join their music, and the welkin would rejoice,
While the happy congregation could not hear a single voice.
But tell them I forgive them; and, oh, tell them that I said
I wanted them to come and sing above me—when I'm dead."

His voice grew faint and hoarser, but it gave a laughing break,
A kind of gurgling chuckle as a minister might make.
But the deacon rose up slowly, and sternly he looked down
Upon the parson's twinkling eyes with most portentous frown.
And he stiffly said, "Good morning," as he walked out in his ire,
For the deacon was the leader of that amiable choir.

—Robert J. Burdette, in Preacher's Helper for January.

A scientific gentleman told a little tale worth repeating at a British Association meeting the other day. He is engaged in collecting material for a book on magnetism, and heard of a paper on the subject in a German periodical. Not knowing the Teutonic tongue, he sent the article to a translation bureau. In due time the translation was handed to him, and when he scanned the lines he became very wroth indeed, for the article was simply a rendering of one from the gentleman's own pen, which appeared in an English paper a year ago. Insult was added to injury when the scientist had to pay for translation exactly as much again as he received from the proprietors of the journal in which the article originally figured.—From Invention.

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

Have Your Bladder or Uric Acid Trouble?

You May Be Afflicted And Not Know It.

By Special Arrangement, Every "Christian-Evangelist" Reader, to Prove For Themselves the Wonderful Merits of SWAMP-ROOT, the Great Kidney Remedy, May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely FREE by Mail.

People are apt to believe that kidney disease is rather a rare disease, but recent discoveries have proved that it is a most common trouble indeed.

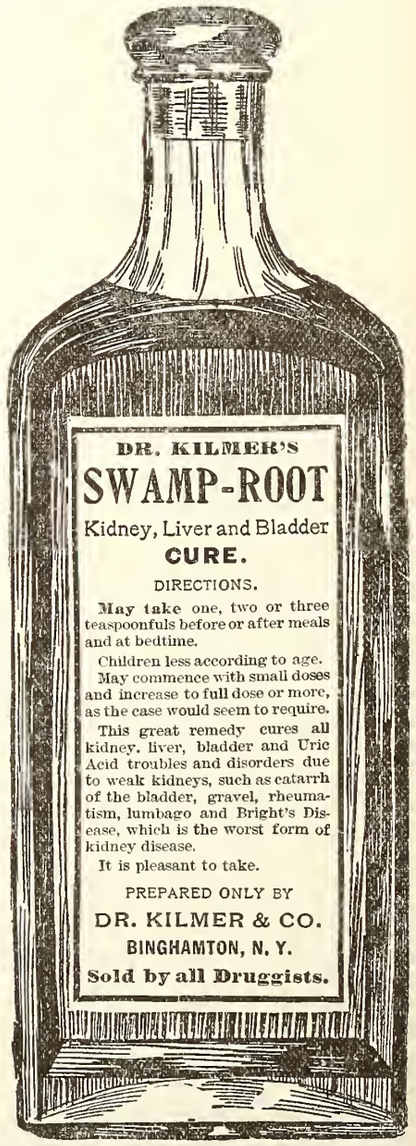
And the proof of this is, that most diseases, perhaps 85 per cent., are caused in the beginning by disorders of the kidneys.

You can't be sick if your blood is pure, free from kidney-poison and disease-breeding germs. Your kidneys should keep it so. That's what they are there for. And as long as they are well they perform their duties with thoroughness and dispatch.

You are well when your kidneys are.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, will make your kidneys well when they are sick.

Kidney trouble often comes from overwork or overexertion. From exposure to cold and other weakening influences, from lifting or a strain, from overeating or drinking. All these things weaken your kidneys and poisonous germs begin to creep into your blood.



It is at just such times that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is needed.

When your kidneys are not doing their work, you have backache, headache, sediment in the urine, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and to get up many times at night, dizziness or irregular heart, bladder or uric acid troubles, rheumatism, neuralgia, sleeplessness, nervousness, irritability, sallow complexion, bloating, dropsy, tired feeling, loss of energy and ambition.

Swamp-Root is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of untiring effort and research by the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, Dr. Kilmer, and has truly wonderful restorative and healing action on the kidneys and bladder.

The best proof of this is a trial, and nothing could be fairer than the offer to send a sample bottle of this great discovery absolutely free by mail.

To get a sample bottle and a book giving some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured, write to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y., and mention that you read this liberal offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

One Half the 50ct. size—One Quarter the $1.00 size.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent or one-dollar sizes at the drug stores. A GOD-SEND TO ALL HUMANITY

Invention of An Ohioan that Guarantees Health, Strength and Beauty by Nature's Method, and Cures Without Drugs all Nervous Diseases, Rheumatism, La Grippe, Neuralgia, Kidney Troubles, Piles, Weakness, and the Most Obstinate Diseases.

Those Who Have Used It Declare It To Be the Most Remarkable Invigorant Ever Produced for Man, Woman or Child.

An inventive genius of Cincinnati, Ohio, has patented and placed on the market a Bath Cabinet that is of great interest to the public, not only the sick and debilitated, but also those enjoying health.

It is a sealed compartment, in which one comfortably rests on a chair, and with only the head outside, may have all the invigorating, cleansing

CABINET OPEN—Step in or out

FOLDED

and purifying effects of the most luxurious Turkish bath, hot vapor or medicated vapor baths at home for three cents each, with no possibility of taking cold, or in any way weakening the system.

A well-known physician of Topeka, Kansas, E. L. Eaton, M. D., gave up his practice to sell these Bath Cabinets, feeling that they were all his patients needed to get well and keep well, as they cured the most obstinate diseases often when his medicine failed, and we understand he has already sold over 600. Another physician of Chicago, Dr. John C. Wright, followed Dr. Eaton's example, moved West, and devotes his entire time to selling these Cabinets. Many others are doing likewise.

Hundreds of remarkable letters have been written the inventors from those who have used the Cabinets, two of which referring to

RHEUMATISM AND LA GRIPPE

Will be interesting to those who suffer from these dread maladies. G. M. Lafferty, Covington, Ky., writes: "Was compelled to quit business a year ago, being prostrated by rheumatism when your Cabinet came. Two weeks' use of it entirely cured me, and have never had a twinge since. My doctor was much astonished and will recommend them." Mrs. S. S. Noteman, Hood River, Ore., writes that her neighbor used the Bath Cabinet for a severe case of la grippe and cured herself entirely in two days. Another neighbor cured eczema of many years' standing, and her little girl of measles. A. B. Strickland, Bloomington, Idaho, writes that the Bath Cabinet did him more good in one week than two years' doctoring, and entirely cured him of catarrh, gravel, kidney trouble and dropsy, with which he had been long afflicted. Hundreds of others write praising this Cabinet, and there seems to be no doubt but that the long-sought-for means of curing rheumatism, la grippe, Bright's disease and all kidney and urinary affections has been found. The

WELL-KNOWN CHRISTIAN MINISTER

Of Una, S. C., Rev. R. E. Peale, highly recommends this Cabinet, as also does Mrs. Kendricks, Princ. of Vassar College; Congressman John J. Lentz, John T. Brown, editor of the Christian Guide, many lawyers, physicians, ministers and hundreds of other influential people.

REDUCES OBESITY

It is important to know that the inventor guarantees that obesity will be reduced 5 lbs. per week if these hot vapor baths are taken regularly. Scientific reasons are brought out in a very instructive little book issued by the makers. To

CURE BLOOD AND SKIN DISEASES

The Cabinet is unquestionably the best thing in the world. If people, instead of filling their system with more poison by taking drugs and nostrums, would get into a Vapor Bath Cabinet and sweat out these poisons and assist Nature to act, they would have a skin as clear and smooth as the most fastidious could desire.

THE GREAT FEATURE

Of this Bath Cabinet is that it gives a Hot Vapor Bath that opens the millions of pores all over the body, stimulating the sweat glands and forcing out by nature's method all the impure salts, acids and effete matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys and the lungs and cause disease, debility and sluggishness. A Hot Vapor Bath instills new life from the very beginning, and makes you feel 10 years younger. With the bath, if desired, is a

HEAD AND COMPLEXION STEAMER

In which the face and head are given the same vapor treatment as the body. This produces the most wonderful results, removes pimples, blackheads, skin eruptions and

CURES CATARRH AND ASTHMA

L. B. Westbrook, Newton, Ia., writes: "For 45 years I have had catarrh and asthma to such an extent that it had eaten out the partition between my nostrils. Drugs and doctors did me no good. The first vapor bath I took helped me and two weeks' use cured me entirely, and I have never had a twinge since."

WHATEVER WILL HASTEN PERSPIRATION,

Every one knows, is beneficial. Turkish baths, massage, hot drinks, stimulants, hot foot baths are all known to be beneficial, but the best of these methods become crude and insignificant when compared to the convenient and marvelous curative power of the Cabinet Bath referred to above. The Cabinet is known as the

QUAKER FOLDING THERMAL

Vapor Bath Cabinet was patented May 18, 1897, and is made only in Cincinnati, O. This Cabinet, we find, is durably made of best materials. It is entered and vacated by a door at the side. The Cabinet is air-tight, made of the best hygienic water-proof cloth, rubber-lined, and a folding steel-plated frame supports it from top to bottom. The makers furnish a good alcohol stove with each Cabinet; also valuable receipts and formulas for medicated baths and ailments, as well as plain directions.

Another excellent feature is that it folds into so small a space that it may be carried when traveling—weighs but five pounds.

People don't need bath-rooms, as this Cabinet may be used in any room. Thus bath-tubs have been discarded since the invention of this Cabinet, as it gives a far better bath for all cleansing purposes than soap and water. For the sick-room its advantages are at once apparent. The Cabinet is amply large enough for any person. There have been

SO-CALLED CABINETS

On the market, but they were unsatisfactory, for they had no door, no supporting frame, but were simply a cheap affair to pull on or off over the head like a skirt or barrel, subjecting the body to sudden and dangerous changes of temperature, or made with a bulky wooden frame, which the heat and steam within the cabinet warped, cracked and caused to fall apart and soon become worthless.

The Quaker Cabinet made by the Cincinnati firm is the only practical article of its kind, and will last for years. It seems to satisfy and delight every user, and the

MAKERS GUARANTEE RESULTS

They assert positively, and their statements are backed by a vast amount of testimony from persons of influence, that their Cabinet will cure nervous troubles and debility, clear the skin, purify the blood, cure rheumatism. (They offer $50 reward for a case that cannot be relieved.) Cures women's troubles, la grippe, sleeplessness, obesity, neuralgia, headaches, gout, sciatica, piles, dropsy, blood and skin disease, liver and kidney troubles. It will

CURE A HARD COLD

With one bath, and break up all symptoms of la grippe, fevers, pneumonia, bronchitis, asthma, and is really a household necessity. It is the most known, and all those enjoying health should use it at least once or twice a week, but its great value lies in its marvelous power to draw out of the system the impurities that cause disease, and for this reason is really a godsend to all humanity.

HOW TO GET ONE

All our readers who want to enjoy perfect health, prevent disease, or are afflicted, should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low, space prevents a detailed description, but it will bear out the most exacting demand for durability and curative properties. Write to the World Manufacturing Co., 9 World Building, Cincinnati, O., and ask them to send you their pamphlets and circulars describing this invention. The regular price of this Cabinet is $5. Head Steaming Attachment, if desired, $1 extra, and it is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much real genuine health, vigor and strength.

Write to-day for full information, or better still, order a Cabinet. You won't be deceived or disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and will refund your money if not just as represented. They are reliable and responsible. Capital, $100,000.00, and fill all orders as soon as received.

Don't fail to send for booklet, as it will prove very interesting reading.

This Cabinet is a wonderful seller for agents, and the firm offers special inducements to good agents, both men and women—upon request.

A Russian peasant returning from town, where he had bought a new pair of boots and drank a few glasses of spirits, fell asleep by the roadside and was stripped of his boots by a light-fingered tramp. The fellow's sleep remained unbroken until a passing wagoner, seeing him lying half across the track, shouted to him to "take his legs out of the way."

"My legs?" echoed the half-aroused sleeper, rubbing his eyes, "those ain't mine—mine had boots on!"—Modern Society.

Your Cross.

Seek not to drop the cross you wear,
Or lay it down; for if you do
Another shall be built for you
More difficult and hard to bear.

The cross is always made to fit
The back which bears it. Be content;
Accept the burden which was sent
And strive to make the best of it.

Think not how heavy is your load;
Think not how rough the road or long;
Look up and say, "Lord, I am strong,
And love makes beautiful the road."

Who toils in faith and knows not fear
Shall live to find his cross some day
Supported all along the way
By angels who are walking near.

When Rudyard Kipling was a lad, he went on a sea voyage with his father, Lockwood Kipling, the artist. Soon after the vessel got under way, Lockwood Kipling went below, leaving the boy on deck. Presently, there was a great commotion overhead, and one of the ship's officers rushed down and banged at Mr. Kipling's door.

"Mr. Kipling," he cried, "your boy has crawled out on the yardarm, and if he lets go he'll drown."

"Yes," said Mr. Kipling, glad to know that nothing serious was the matter, "but he won't let go."—Sel.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

The Robber's Letter.

"Hers's pen, ink and paper," said George.

The robber grinned sheepishly. "Suppose you do the writting," he said. "I has rheumatix in mySpenserian fingers. I'll predict the words and you write 'em down." So George seated himself, and dated the letter. The robber looked at the ham as if he were sorry he could not eat any more, and said, "Washington Shaw to Mrs. Marthy Shaw, Hammertown, Mo. From your son, dear ma."

"Must I put it that way, or begin with 'Dear ma'?" the boy asked.

"No, you begin as I say; 'From your son—dear ma.' She ought to know first who's acalling her 'Ma,' before she sees 'Dear ma' a-staring her out of countenance. Then you say—have you got that?"

George read, "From your son—dear ma."

"That's right. Now you say, 'Here I am in'—whats this town? Oh, yes—'here I am in Mizzouryville, a-doing well in a big wholesale business,' you say, 'a-coming great,' you say."

"I didn't know of that," said George, looking up.

"'A general line, I'm carrying,' you say, 'a general line.' For that's a fact. I am a lyin'."

"Then, what makes you do it?" demanded George. "I can't write down anything that isn't so." It was strange that ever since the robber began to think about his mother, the boy had not been afraid of him.

"I'm a-telling her this," said the robber, "so she'll feel good. What's the good of writtin' letters, unless you make the other party happy? Must I tell her they's holes in my clothes, and I've et my fust meal for three days? Must I say I have bruk open a house, and am medertating a swoop upon the knives and forks?"

"Certainly not," said George. "But if you tell her you are doing fine, she will feel bad to think how long you have let her go poor and hungry, without one word from you all these years!"

"That's a fack," said the robber, slapping his leg. "See now what it means to be eddicated! You must study Latin and algebraying and Mothers, in your curricomb! I should say curriculum. You see I was eddicated once. I knew a page of Latin from English, anywhur I seen it! Well, I don't know rightly what to tell ma."

"I'll tell you what will make her the happiest in the world," said George. "Say you haven't been doing right, nor treating her right, but you are going to do different, and live like a man after this; and you are coming to see her right off. And you are going to support her in her old age, and work for your living, and have a little home of your own to bring her to. And there will be a little garden, and a barn with a nice loft with a trapeze in it and hay under it, so when you fall out, you ain't hurt. You can make the trapeze out of an old broom handle, you know. And you go to church with her every Sunday, and do all you can to make her forget the past. And say that it was hearing the Bible that made you think of her; and every Christmas your mind goes back to her, and you remember how good she was to you then, and used to lay her hand on your hair like mamma does, now, and tell you to be good, and—"

George stopped in amazement, for the robber had actually rubbed a tear off his cheek with a very grimy finger. "Put it all down," said the robber. "That there beats my essy! Except as to the trapeze—she may rightly wonder who is a-going to swing in it, her or me, but no matter, hang it up, anyhow."

When George had written all this he said, "I think it would be a good thing to mention something that happened when you lived with her, so she'll know you are thinking real hard about her!"

"That's right," said the robber. "Now, let me see. It's been so long ago—Oh, yes! You say, 'Dear ma, I reccollect that day when you kicked me down the back stair case, and like to bust my head'—"

"I don't think that would comfort her," said George.

"Why? I ought to have been kicked down stairs! I was a turrible one, I tell you! You say, 'I wish it had bust my head,' you say. That will show her I'm a-getting tender."

"But can't you remember anything good she did for you?"

"That kicking down the stairs was the best," said the robber, "if it is the best you want. That kep' me straight for days. Pore old lady, I'll bet she couldn't kick now. At least not like she done then, so vigerous!" Suddenly the robber leaped to his feet. "What's that?" he growled.

A voice was heard, calling from a distance, "George! George!"

"It's uncle Tom!" exclaimed George.

The man seized him by the shoulder—"If I thought you had kep' me here till he come, a-purpose," he said, "I'd cut out your heart!" He felt for his knife, while his face wore a terrible look. "But I don't believe you could be such a villyan. No, it ain't in you!"

"Indeed, I never thought of his coming," said George.

"I believe you. Now you must help me to get out of this. It's through you that I have stayed, and my blood is upon your soul!" These words made George very uneasy. The voice of his uncle came nearer. "I'll hide in the pantry," said the robber hurriedly. "Don't you mention as I was here. I ain't took no valu'bles, so they ain't no call to peach on me, no how. Now, remember, I trust in you. I could a-killed you, but I turned you free. Now if you give me up, my blood is on your soul!"

While saying these words, the robber had been rappily lighting a lamp, while George wondered at his daring. Then the man cought up his dark lantern, and sped to the pantry. Uncle Tom was heard unlocking the door. When he entered the hall, he saw the light from the dining room. "George!" he called. "Here I am," said George.

Uncle Tom burst into the room, followed by his farm hand, Mr. Pump. Uncle Tom silently looked at his nephew, who had just thrust the letter into his pocket, then at the table. He sat down unable to support his surprise upon his feet. "George," he said, "Why didn't you tell us you were hungry?"

George made no reply.

"It was very alarming to wake up and find you gone from the hut. I thought you enjoyed our little supper in the woods. But from what I see, my dear boy, I am afraid you will be very sick. No wonder you look white! Mr. Pump, observe that ham; he has eaten a third of it. A third of a ham, I fear! As for the fruitcake, of course, your aunt wanted that kept. She gave me orders not to disturb it. George, it must have been a long time since you had any cake!"

The tears came to George's eyes, but he did not know what to do, or say. "Yet, it is not so much the value of the cake," continued Uncle Tom, with mild protest in his voice. "The condition of your stomach is what I consider. I say nothing of the way that pickle-jar has gone down. As for the cheese, it would not be so surprising, if it were not for wondering where you could put it! Mr. Pump, did you examine the ham?"

"I did," said Mr. Pump. "And I may say I have never saw the like! Mr. Wilson, if I may make so bold, I don't believe no mortal boy that is yet born, could stow away so much inside of him! Master Tom looks pretty sick, yes. But he couldn't have did it, he couldn't; he hasn't the power of endurance to eat so much, Mr. Wilson!"

"It seems impossible, certainly."

"Besides, Mr. Wilson, I seem to smell, as I may say—yes, as soon as I come in here, I smelled, as it were, a—a curious presence, as it were; a being, Mr. Wilson, and that being were not Tom. It were a being what uses tobacker. Now you take this cheer—this cheer is strong of some furreigner, as it were!"

"I observe it," said Uncle Tom. "There has been somebody here, George—"

"Look a-there at that kitchen!" cried Mr. Pump, pointing to the dishes George had knocked upon the floor. Uncle Tom siezed the lamp and rushed into the room. George followed in a dumb agony. Mr. Pump went with his nose tilted up. "I'm a-tracing that there smell," he said. "It goes into this here pantry. Wonder why the door's shet?" As he spoke he pushed it open. George uttered a cry, expecting Washington Shaw to leap forth, brandishing his knife. But the pantry was empty. The robber had crawled through the little window and had made his escape. Then it was that the boy told about his night's adventure, feeling sure that Washington Shaw was wise enough to elude pursuit.

The most impressive vision of this generation was the White City with its marvelously beautiful Court of Honor, which seemed to bring back the classic beauty of an age long gone by. This fair creation sprang suddenly full-grown like Minerva from the mind of the master-workers of our time. It came as swiftly as the prophet of the desert, who one day emerged from the wilderness to speak his message of divine truth to the men of his day. So this Magic City appeared to bring its message of art and commerce and industry, set in the fair framework of the age of gold; and having spoken its message departed, like that prophet, in a chariot of fire. But one word spoken by the men who wrought that vision of beauty remains ever its most impressive utterance. On every side could be heard the whirring of a thousand wheels and the babel of ten thousand voices. Everywhere appeared the triumph of human industry and genius. Fabrics and creations of beauty from all parts of the world, the disclosures of mine and ocean were there, and out beyond this beautiful mingling of all tides of human life one caught glimpses of the far-stretching waters along whose paths seemed to come the wealth of the nations. But above all these and more significant than all, when one lifted his eyes he saw written in gold along the splendid entablature of the Peristyle the words which Jesus spoke to a group of Jews two millenniums ago, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." It was no passing inspiration which wrought those significant words into the fabric of the White City, for they contain the highest truth and the deepest philosophy for our age. Beyond and above everything which man can do, is the somewhat that he is; and of that more important factor these words evermore speak. It is deeply significant that in this age which many call materialistic and utilitarian, when men are running to the ends of the earth for wealth and place, and when self is too often worshiped more than God, these words should be chosen as the highest message of the crowning achievement of human skill and genius. They only prove again the fact that when man reflects upon the meaning of life he realizes that its highest good can never be simply the work of his hands, but must be the welfare of that immortal part of himself which is the true man.

Following the thought already emphasized by Jesus in his conversation recorded in the 7th chapter regarding his place as the giver of life and light, he continues in the interview with the Jews recorded in the 8th chapter (after the interruption of the narrative caused by the insertion of 7:53-8:11, which does not appear in the oldest MSS.) to emphasize relationship to himself as the only possible avenue to true freedom. His opponents angrily asserted that they needed no such freedom, for they were children of Abraham and had never yet been enslaved to any one. This foolish boast could only prove how deep was their animosity against Jesus. No people ever afforded a more glaring exhibition of slavery from every point of view than did they. Politically they had lost their autonomy centuries before, and though it was regained for a moment by the glorious heroism of the Maccabees, it had been utterly lost again in the wide-sweeping career of Roman supremacy. They were groaning under foreign rulers and foreign taskmasters, and the poor pretense of Jewish kings, half foreign though the Herods were, was small consolation for the grinding tyranny of Rome, more bitter because of the restless nationalism which inflamed the Jewish heart. Educationally they were the slaves of pedantic and antiquated methods inherited from the scribal schools, or slavish imitators of Greek and Alexandrian forms caught piecemeal from traveling teachers or brought in by returning Jews from the Dispersion. Judaism had not possessed one fresh or vigorous idea for two centuries. Religiously their condition has been graphically drawn by Jesus himself, who disclosed the legalism and formalism which they had substituted for true worship. And thus with the leaders of the nation blind, the whole people went unseeing into spiritual darkness and became bondservants of sin blindly and ignorantly because they did not know the truth; that is, because they did not know God. The wretched boast of their freedom was therefore paltry indeed, and would have been ludicrous had it not been so pathetic.

The freedom to which Jesus calls men is of a different sort. It is not freedom from service, but freedom in service. One only obtains freedom by adjusting himself to a discipline which permits him to use every power and faculty to the utmost. Freedom is not gained by throwing off responsibility, but by taking up the service of the highest Master. The beam of wood is not free when it lies useless in the forest, but when it is fitted into the ground and Gothic roof of some cathedral. The iron bar has not attained its freedom when it rests unused in the iron yard, but when it has been fitted into its proper office as the driving shaft of some huge ocean greyhound. Man's highest freedom is found in becoming the servant of Christ. In learning from him one discovers the true use of the highest powers, and this is evermore the meaning of discipleship. No one is a disciple of Christ in any sense who is not continually learning his method of life. No spasmodic and transient method this, but a continued and persistent discipline, with definite end—absolute likeness to the Master.

And what is the knowledge of the truth? What is this truth of which Jesus speaks? It is not some definite fact or proposition which is to be accepted, though such may enter into it; it is not a set of rules by which one's life is to be guided, though such may result from it. The Truth is first of all himself, as he said. To know him is to know all that the human mind can know of divine truth. But secondly, to know the truth is to know the right proportion of things, and to put every interest into its proper place. Our failures usually result from the transposition of interests. To know the relative value of things and what should be the place of each in a true adjustment of the life forces, this is to know the truth. In such a scheme the divine life ever comes first. It stands at the center of our reorganized universe. Then in the next circle come the interests of our fellowmen. Their welfare, their happiness, their salvation grow naturally important as we view them in the light of our vision of God. In the outer circle comes the orbit of self, whose pathway must ever be true if it revolves about the life of God. The reversal of this plan can only result in confusion. Self can never be strong enough or important enough to swing society and God about it, and yet this is the fruitless effort of ten thousand lives. What wonder that the result is chaos?

To such an adjustment of truths and forces does Christ invite us, and entering into this highest service one realizes how truly his promise is fulfilled. Here true freedom is obtained—not freedom from trouble, but victory over trouble; not freedom from service, but freedom and joy in service; not freedom from responsibility, but the satisfaction of making life symmetrical and productive, the joy of true discipleship, the joy of copartnership with God.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 5.

THE GATES OF ZION.

Ps. 87:1-7; 100:1-5.

"The Lord loveth the gates of Zion."

"I love thy kingdom Lord,
The place of thy abode,
The church our blest Redeemer saved
With his own precious blood.
I love thy church, O God,
Her walls before thee stand,
Dear as the apple of thine eye
And graven on thy hand."

The names of the ancient classic lands have become embedded in our language, the Acropolis, Parnassus, Olympus, the Tiber and the Rubicon; but none of them are so familiar and so endeared as the scriptural names, the Jordan, the Red Sea, Galilee and Mount Zion. The last, perhaps, more than all the others, has become dear to us as the signification of his church.

The gates of Zion enclose the hopes of many men and women. Some there are who have no wealth, nor ambition, no joy nor pride, save in her walls. But in her success is all their happiness, in her advacement is all their pride, in her glory their own glory is found.

Here is a man who has long lived for the world, cared little for Zion, and from the outside has scoffed at her; but once he has passed within her gates, seeing the glory of her and her beauty, he gives himself to her completely, he cannot think of her with without emotion, nor speak of her without tears. Such a man I think of now—stationmaster at a great railway station in one of our cities who lately, past middle life, gave himself to Christ.

Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlasting, doors and the king of glory shall come in. No cause is there for the gates of Zion to be depressed and not lifted up! Great are her triumphs, proud is her position, worthy is her work. In her is the dwelling of the king of glory.

And it is a thought not without beauty that the gates of Zion are the gates of the human heart. Those gates may be open for the king of glory or they may be closed against him. Are yours opened, Endeavorers, or closed? "Behold," he says, "I stand at the door and knock." If we open to him the closed or half-closed doors of our hearts he will come in saying, "Peace be to this house."

Some have held but very humble position within the gates of Zion, to whom that position was nevertheless very dear. "I would rather be a doorkeeper in the house of the Lord," said one, "than to dwell in the tents of the wicked." It is better to be a campfollower in Zion than a prince in Satan's host.

How often have the gates been closed, into which some poor traveler would like to go. Lazarus has lain many and many a time at castle gates, tired, starving and full of sores. but never has one sought entrance to Zion's gates in sincerity and sought in vain. Ecclesiastical gates are often locked and double locked with bars of steel; but these, thank God, are not the gates of Zion.

One of the surest means of finding a wide entrance through the gates into the city is the showing of the way to others. The best way to find a way is to point the way.

Pioneers: Benjamin Franklin.

By F. D. Power, Director.

Strictly, the subject of this sketch belongs to the post-pioneer period. Joseph Franklin, the tallow-chandler and soap-boiler, had seventeen children, of whom the philosopher was the youngest but two. All the Franklins of "Freeholders" trace their lines to these seventeen. To one of these brothers, John Franklin, we may trace the line of Benjamin Franklin, son of Joseph Franklin and Isabella Devold. He was born in Belmont County, O., Feb. 1, 1812. Joseph Franklin was farmer, miller and worker in wood. In 1833 he removed with his family to Henry County, Ind.

Benjamin secured eighty acres of land here, built a log house, and married May Personett, who bore him eleven children and proved herself a noble helpmeet in his long and varied life as a preacher of the gospel. In 1834 Samuel Rogers moved into Henry County, Ind., and settled as a near neighbor to the Franklins. He preached in a schoolhouse, but was excluded, and then in groves, barns and private dwellings. Joseph Franklin and wife, who were immersed Methodists, were very religious people. They attended these meetings, and at first with much prejudice against Campbellism. Two of their sons, Benjamin and Daniel, obeyed the gospel and later others, and in the spring of 1835 a church was organized, of which Joseph Franklin and his wife became members. Benjamin, Josiah and Joseph Franklin, Jr., and John I. Rogers, who obeyed the gospel during these meetings, became preachers of the gospel.

For two years the church met in the house of Joseph Franklin. These young men began at once to assist in prayer and exhortation. From the day Benjamin Franklin confessed Christ, he began to exhort sinners and to speak in defense of the truth. He carried his New Testament everywhere. His zeal knew no bounds. He sold his mill and gave himself unreservedly to preaching the gospel.

His early efforts were not promising. John Longley, an old Hoosier pioneer, tells how Franklin had a great fashion of saying, "My dear friends and brethring." "He always put the 'ing' to it," says Longley. "He used the expression a great many times in every sermon, so often that it became tiresome, and some one of us took him to task about it. He doubted whether he used it so frequently, so one day when he began a sermon, I got a piece of paper and a pin, and every time he said, 'My dear friends and brethring,' I stuck a hole in the paper. And there were a hundred and fifty! But la me!" exclaimed the old man, "it was not long before he shot past all of us!"

Benjamin Franklin in 1844 moved to Centerville, Ind., and the following year began the publication of the Reformer. Here Samuel K. Hoshour had taught school for four years, from 1835 to 1839, at $20 a month and preached for nothing, finding himself, and a church was established. In 1847 Franklin moved to Milton, Ind., and in October of the same year he held his discussion with Manford, the Universalist. In all he held twenty-five discussions, five of which were published. In 1846 he received a call to the Church of Christ, Clinton St., Cincinnati. In 1850 he associated D. S. Burnet with himself in his editorial work, moved to Cincinnati and continued his paper under the title, the Christian Age. He united with the Mt. Healthy Church. In 1856 he began a monthly periodical entitled, the American Christian Review. From 1850 to 1855 he preached regularly for the church on Clinton St., Cincinnati, and in Covington, Ky.

In 1855 he became corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society. Assuming the duties of the office, he wrote: "The Bible and Publication Societies being discontinued and the brethren in the anniversary, in this city, in October last, agreeing with great unanimity to concentrate our energies upon the Missionary Society is a proceeding, so far as we are informed, that meets the wishes of the brotherhood at large with more favor and general approbation than any move of the kind that has ever been made among us. Things are now taking, we think, a rational and proper form. The Missionary Society is a medium for us to co-operate through, as a general body throughout the land, in such works as single churches or individuals cannot do. The State Missionary Societies open the way for the voluntary contributions, to be combined, united and concentrated in sending the Word to destitute regions and penetrating important points as single churches or individuals cannot do." He promised that the society should be "conducted on the score of the very best economy," and declared it the most simple and safe arrangement that could be made, professing no authority over the churches and interfering nothing with their independence, government or officers in any way.

Later, Franklin took a different view in respect to missionary organizations. Congregational independency, the relation of the ministry to the church and human expedients in public worship, were discussed with great warmth in the religious papers of the Disciples. In 1865 the Christian Standard was established and its editor, Isaac Errett, favored the organized missionary work and other things regarded as "progressive," while the Review claimed to advocate the pure gospel and simple practices of the New Testament, and was christened by its friends as "the Old Reliable."

The Review was very successful. For twenty years it continued to be a review of the religious faith and practice of Christendom, and especially of the "Current Reformation." The first year it reached a circulation of 4,000. During this period its editor was an exceedingly busy man. He was preaching, editing, debating constantly. He made tours in Canada, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Tennessee, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky. Four-fifths of his time he was away from home and in his meetings made over ten thousand converts. October, 1876, while preaching near Richmond, Ky., his strength gave way. He lingered for two years in shattered health and died at Anderson, Ind., Oct. 22, 1878.

Franklin's genius was work, constant, laborious, untiring work. He was an example of faithfulness. He had large influence as a speaker and writer. He was a man of the people. He spoke and wrote for the masses and they understood him and believed in him. His style was simple, clear, logical. Little children and uneducated grasped his thought without difficulty. Not learned or critical, he was nevertheless powerful and convincing. He was "the great commoner," and unquestionably stood in the front rank as preacher of the simple faith of the New Testament. A man of splendid physique, standing six feet, well rounded and proportioned, erect and stately, and with eyes full of expression. One of nature's orators, he had great power over an audience. Then his purity of life and honesty of purpose commanded recognition, and the truth in his hands was mighty. His published volumes, "The Gospel Preacher," "Sincerity Seeking the Way to Heaven," etc., have had a large circulation.

BAUSERMAN.

Shortly after the clock had struck 12 on the night of Wednesday, January 18, the spirit of James Henry Bauserman took flight to heaven, at the home of his sister, Mrs. Evans, in Valley Falls, Kas. Bro. Bauserman was born near Woodstock, Va., Jan. 20, 1836. Had he lived two days longer he would have reached his 63rd year. When four years old he removed with his parents to Delaware Co., Ohio. He lived there until his graduation from Dennison University at the age of 22. He then entered the Northwestern Christian University, at Irvington, Ind., to take a Bible course. He came to Kansas in 1860 and taught school for a little while, when, by the advice and encouragement of good brother S. G. Brown—well known to Kansans—he began preaching near Emporia, and from that time to the day of his death he devoted his life to the ministry of the Word. The most of his work was done in Kansas, serving the state board as evangelist for about 10 years, holding meetings, setting in order the things that were wanting, and doing everything he could to advance the cause of Christ in this great state. In 1871 he was married to Miss Carrie Lane, a niece of Senator Lane, who died in 1877, leaving no children. He did not marry again. The past two years Bro. Bauserman spent on the Pacific Coast and for the last eight months had charge of the church at Ogden, Utah. He had intended going to Leavenworth for a few days and then on to Excelsior Springs, Mo., to recuperate. He was conscious, however, when his illness came upon him, that the end was near, and he made all the arrangements for his funeral. A few moments before he passed away he said, "I have no fears of death. I only pray that I may soon be freed from this dreadful pain." He leaves two brothers and two sisters. He was a man full of the Holy Spirit and of faith, and his death was his entrance into everlasting life. The writer was called to Leavenworth to conduct the funeral services from the residence of his brother, J. P. Bauserman, on Friday, Jan. 20.

Publishers' Notes.

"Mary Ardmore," the latest production from the pen of J. H. Stark, is growing into favor. Competent judges who have read the book speak in the highest terms of it. J. V. Updike, one of the most successful evangelists among our brotherhood, after reading this book, writes thus to the author: "I want to thank you a thousand times for that splendid book, "Mary Ardmore." When I began reading it I became so interested I did not want to put it down to eat or sleep until I was through with the story. I laughed and cried, and thought and wondered how Mary would come out in her undertakings. I rejoiced to see the truth prevail, as it always must. I do wish that the people would take a greater interest in such literature. The world would be much better if they did. There would certainly be fewer divorces, and less intemperance. I thank you. God bless you."

"I have just laid down a most charming and helpful book, 'Queen Esther,' by M. M. Davis. When it came to my table a brother preacher, who was present, said: 'I think I could preach a sermon or two on the book of Esther, but I never thought of a series,' and I felt as he did. There are nine excellent sermons in the book. The plan of each is to give a portion of the history and then deduce some practical lessons. M. M. Davis is always practical, and every lesson he gives is of this character. But the practical bent of his mind does not prevent his treating us to strains of the poetical and to visions of the beautiful. The table he spreads for us is one covered with wholesome food. Read the book for yourself, and if you do not get good from it the presumption will be that the fault is with you." The above is an extract from what C. McPherson, of Ft. Worth, Tex., has had to say concerning "Queen Esther," as recently published in the Christian Courier, Dallas, Texas.

The Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, Ohio, is high authority on the merits of good books. The following notice of "King Saul" appeared in a recent number of that paper: " 'King Saul,' by J. Breckenridge Ellis, is the second of a series of volumes by the same author, which purposes to describe the various romantic narratives found in the Bible, and which, without altering or mending one fact, shall develop those histories as though they were for the first time told. In the present instance the author has succeeded in his purpose to a good degree. His style has a clear narrative quality, and the story of King Saul is told in a pleasing way. It is a good, healthy book, and we can heartily commend it for the family circle. It will increase the interest of old and young people who read it in the true and romantic history recorded in the Old Testament."

The prices of the above-mentioned books are as follows, postage paid:

"Mary Ardmore," by J. H. Stark.....$1.00
"Queen Esther," by M. M. Davis..... .75

Supt. of Subscription Department.

Our rates for 1899, subject to change without previous notice, are as follows:

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, one year, $1.50
THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, one year, and The Life of Alexander Campbell, 2.00
THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, one year, and The Genuine Oxford Self-Pronouncing Teachers' Bible, 2.50
Good Alike to Renewals or New Subscriptions.

In advocating expansion we have tried to impress upon our readers that what is desired is an increase of our mental and spiritual attainments; a clearer vision and a broader, more charitable view of men and their affairs.

We did not intend to teach that we should so expand (in our own estimation) as to become the "whole thing," as one of our esteemed contemporaries seems to be doing.

"On what meat doth this our Cæsar feed that he hath grown so great?"

"The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is daily becoming a greater factor in my life, and I feel that no praise can do justice to the weekly food it offers." F. A. HODGE.

Ebensburg, Pa.

Progress and loyalty to "the principles and ideals of the fathers" are not incompatable since those principles and ideals are those of Christ. Loyalty to Him is the point about which we should be careful, and our fathers so taught. We believe that progress and such loyalty are inseparable. Christ brought light and life to a world in darkness and death, and growth is a certainty where light and life reign.

"The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, to me, is not only a feast of good things but a necessity in order to spiritual development. For eighteen years I have read its pages and I love to think of the happy hours I have spent sitting on the footstool by Bro. Garrison's Easy Chair. May his life be happily prolonged and his real worth appeciated more and more."

"Let not thy right hand know what thy left hand doeth," is an injunction which we are satisfied can not be construed so as to justify unfair dealings with our patrons.

In other words we find it difficult to reconcile with the teachings of Christianity the practice of violating our published rates either in the case of this paper or any other of our publications, by accepting from twenty-five to fifty per cent. less "on the quiet," for no better reason than to gain or retain a customer.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST exists for a higher purpose than to merely circulate and will endeavor to "practice what it preaches." We have substantial proof that our stand in this matter is approved very generally.

"I value the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST very highly and am particularly pleased at the tone of your articles on the great need of more spirituality in our midst.

"Whether we as a brotherhood grow numerically or not in this Jubilee Year, if we grow in grace and in the likeness of our Lord we shall be wonderfully stronger and more missionary in our life. The articles on the Reformation will be especially beneficial to any who, like myself, have but a slight knowledge of our history. Keep on with these good things and your subscription list must grow."

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versu petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,

America or Rome? Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. Peolep will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the ope.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The present session of Congress will expire by limitation on March 3rd. The work of the fifty-fifth Congress will therefore be done by the time this paper is in the hands of most of its readers. In these last days events will move rapidly and it is scarcely worth while to attempt to predict what will or will not be done. Next week we will present a summary of the important legislation of the session. Besides the regular appropriation bills, which are not yet all out of the way, the most pressing matter is the Army Reorganization Bill. The President at first urged the Republican members to accept no compromise measure postponing the permanent reorganization. The anxiety to avoid a special session has, however, led to a pretty general agreement upon a compromise measure, increasing the regular army to 65,000 men and providing for a provisional army of 35,000 volunteer infantry in addition, this arrangement to hold good only until July 1, 1901. This bill is considered likely to pass. It will meet the present emergency, which is a pressing one, for without some legislation now, the technical restoration of peace by Spain's ratification of the treaty would automatically reduce our military force to its ante-bellum condition. But the reorganization of the army means more than its numerical increase. There are questions as to the relations of departments, the relative authority of the secretary of war and the commanding general, etc., which will be constant sources of trouble until they are settled, and it is not without regret that we witness the probable postponement of this settlement for a year or two.

The past week in the Philippines has been marked by increasing hostility on the part of the natives and more loss of life on both sides. General Miller has taken Santa Barbara, an important town near Iloilo. General Otis has cabled the text of a Filipino proclamation calling for a massacre of the Americans and detailing the plans by which it was to be carried out. The publication of this proclamation in Manila was followed almost immediately by an outbreak of incendiarism in the city. A concerted effort was made by the insurgents to burn the city and under cover of the confusion, while the American troops were fighting the fire, an attack was made. Much property was destroyed and many lives lost, but the attack was repulsed and order restored. Skirmishes continue in the suburbs and the Filipino sharpshooters are constantly at work with improving marksmanship. Aguinaldo has issued another pompous manifesto reciting the innocent sufferings of the insurgents and the "treachery" of the Americans. Judging from recent events in Luzon, there is some ground for the opinion that, in describing our "new-caught sullen people" as "half-devil and half-child," Mr. Kipling overestimated the proportion of child in the compound.

The Philippine situation is a serious matter. There is a good deal of tragedy about it in some respects and it is no joke from any point of view. But occasionally there comes a flash of genuine comedy which relieves the otherwise monotonously sombre situation. In that aggregation of stars in which most of the characters assume the role of tragic hero and the rest insist on being heavy villains, Emilio Aguinaldo occasionally finds himself playing the part of light comedian. He does not know that he is funny, but he is, and his unconscious humor is the only thing that keeps him from becoming an insufferable bore. A few days ago we received the full text of the pronunciamento which was issued in January, announcing the breaking off of peaceful relations with the United States. As usual, he narrates his own heroic struggles and the perfidious treatment which he has received from those who came as liberators. These acts of the Americans, he says, give him "the right to proceed, leaving them out of consideration." This is good. He will not lower himself by revenge. He will not take the trouble to drive out his new oppressor. He will simply elevate his gaze to the treetops, yea, to the stars, to the very zenith, if necessary, that he may ignore the presence of his insignificant but annoying foe. It is a goodly sight, even at this distance, to see this noble soul trying to be oblivious to the major part of his environment. It will be interesting to stand by and watch whither, how far and how fast he will "proceed, leaving out of consideration" the people who drove the Spanish out of the Philippines.

The Spanish Cortes assembled for the opening of the new session on Monday, Feb. 20. It was not to be expected that deep peace would brood over that assembly, and it has not. Still there has been no positive riot on the floor of the house and all parties interested in the transaction of business feel encouraged. The speeches on the Spanish-American war on the opening day aroused a good deal of excitement and created no little disorder in the house. One member advocated the policy of shooting all generals who surrendered their commands to the Americans. Such a proposition could be received only tumultuously, whether by friends or foes. We are having some military trials of our own, but it will be observed that, while the Spaniards are proposing to punish their leaders because they were defeated, without special regard to the circumstances under which they were defeated, we are investigating the means by which a victorious army attained its victory and stand ready to punish, in spite of the victory, if there was anything wrong with the management. They will not tolerate a defeat, even if it be inevitable and well managed. We will not tolerate mismanagemet, even if it be followed by victory. The one piece of work before the Cortes, which is of importance for us, is the ratification of the treaty. It will be done promptly.

The reception given to the new French President can scarcely be considered a cordial one. There was even a demonstration of hostility to him in the streets of Paris, but this is not considered as representative of the feeling of any very numerous body of citizens, but rather the "artificial product of professional agitators." The public generally has failed to exhibit any very deep concern in the event. The anti-revisionist press and leaders have been attempting to make the new President feel the weight of their influence and the demonstrations of hostility are almost all directly traceable to this cause. Threats have been freely used to extort from M. Loubet promises not to use his influence in favor of Dreyfus. No notice has been taken of them and he remains neutral, as he has been heretofore. The funeral of the late President, M. Faure, was the occasion of a considerable amount of disturbance worked up by these anti-revisionist agitators. M. Loubet, in spite of threats of personal danger and insult, followed his predecessor's coffin in the funeral procession. A number of disturbers of the peace were placed under arrest and sentenced to a few days of confinement. Among them were three members of the Chamber of Deputies, who were arrested for inciting to riot and are suspected of having attempted to lead the troops to the Elysee with hostile intent. One of the three was released the next day, but the others may have a large account to settle.

The Pope's recent letter to Cardinal Gibbons on "Americanism" has now been published in full. It is an interesting document, but says just about what one would expect the Pope to say on that subject. The occasion of the letter is furnished by the controvesy which has arisen over Father Elliott's "Life of Father Hecker," in which the author advocates the policy that "in order more easily to attract those who differ from her, the church should shape her teachings more in accordance with the spirit of the age, and relax some of her ancient severity." This tendency the Pope considers especially marked in America. Here "the passion for discussing any possible subject, the assumed right to hold whatever opinions one pleases upon any subject, and to set them forth in print to the world," have produced the most widespread evil effects. Leo's encyclical to the Catholics of America is a warning against the danger which attends any relaxation of emphasis upon the authority of the church, and the absolute and immutable truth of the deposit of faith, which the church holds. The Pope and the King of Italy are just now on even more unfriendly terms than ever. The Czar's plan for the peace conference at the Hague included an invitation to the Pope to send a representative. King Humbert says the Pope has no right to representation in the conference, and refuses to have anything to do with it if Leo is recognized. It would be a pity to have a peace conference break up in a squabble over the "Vicar of Christ," but Humbert is right, of course. It is a meeting of the representatives of the civil powers of Europe, and anything which looks toward including the Pope in the list of temporal princes is an affront to his sovereign, the King of Italy.

February 24 was the fourth anniversary of the outbreak of the last Cuban insurrection. On that day was held the Cuban patriotic celebration which was postponed from January 1. It will be remembered that the Cuban leaders proposed to celebrate the end of Spanish sovereignty in Cuba on New Year's day, when the government passed from Spanish to American hands. The demonstration at that time was prohibited by the American authorities for fear of the disorder which might result. A postponement was agreed upon to this date, when there would be more perfect facilities for preserving order, when most of the Spanish troops would be actually gone, and when the anniversary of the uprising could be celebrated at the same time. It was a great day of rejoicing in and about Havana. Gen. Gomez reached Havana on that day. His journey through the provinces was a triumphal procession, and withal possessed one picturesque feature of the celebrated Hobson tour, though in a less extreme degree. No disorder is reported to have occurred in connection with the demonstration. It was a jubilant but peaceful celebration, and exhibited the ability of the Cubans to keep their heads even when they are happy.

Rear-Admiral Schley is to be congratulated for the self-control and courteous demeanor which he has exhibited under provocation. When Gen. Eagan was criticised by Gen. Miles his injured innocence sought relief in a copious flow of vituperation aimed at his traducer. But they do not do things that way in the navy. Admiral Schley has been subjected to some very severe criticism, both officially and unofficially, for his conduct at the time of the bottling of Cervera's fleet at Santiago. It has been authoritatively stated that his conduct in consuming so much time at Cienfuegos and in starting for Key West to coal when the enemy's fleet was at Santiago amounted to little less than disobedience to positive orders, and that his brilliant achievements in the naval battle alone saved him from punishment for what Admiral Sampson called his "reprehensible" conduct. Whether these charges are true or false, Admiral Schley has preferred to adhere to the canons of gentlemanly conduct and the etiquette of the service. He has not carried the case into the newspaper court; he has not called anybody a liar; he has not melodramatically called heaven to witness, nor invoked the vengeance of a righteous Providence upon his enemies. He has kept quiet until the time came to speak, and he has now spoken in his own defense calmly, courteously, convincingly and to the proper tribunal. The most important evidence which he has introduced is some hitherto unpublished official dispatches in which he was distinctly ordered to do the things which he has since been censured for doing. The evidence is not yet all in and we must withhold judgment for the present, but the calmness and precision of Admiral Schley's statements in defense of his course inspire confidence in the strength of his position. The rank of admiral has been revived by "vote of the Senate and the House," and Dewey will be the recipient. There may also be a revival of the office of vice-admiral. If so, the present discussion will decide whether it shall go to Sampson or Schley.

The trial of Gen. Miles is calling out a large amount of testimony in regard to army beef. Gen. Miles himself testified to the court early last week. His statements to the former commission were called up, particularly the statement which gave most offense to Gen. Eagan, that the canned roast beef was furnished to the troops "under pretense of experiment." Gen. Miles disclaimed any intention of charging fraud upon the commissary department and admitted that the words were ill-chosen. He was quite willing to admit that it was an actual experiment, and, he added, a terribly costly one. Testimony was received from many of the officers from whom the commanding general received the reports upon which he based his former charges. The canned roast beef suffers most from their testimony. Most of these witnesses say that the refrigerated beef was good when received, but spoiled almost immediately upon exposure in that tropical climate. On this account the men were thrown back on the canned beef more than had been intended. Most of the witnesses agree that the canned roast beef was bad, in degrees varying from "unpalatable" to "poisonous." Few of them pretend to know anything about the method of preparation, whether chemicals were employed or not, but most of them agree that as food the product, whatever the process, was useless or worse. Gen. Eagan was put on the stand to testify, but he had little to say about the canned beef. He preferred to devote himself to declaring the superiority of the refrigerated beef to the beef which could have been bought on the hoof in Porto Rico and to an attempt to disprove Gen. Miles' statement that he (Miles) had not resources for buying supplies in place of the worthless stuff furnished by the department.

The Secretary of Agriculture, on his return from the recent convention of cotton raisers at Vicksburg, gave emphatic expression again to the thought that has for many years been in the minds of the most intelligent friends of the South. The full measure of commercial and agricultural prosperity can never come to the great New South until, along with other new ideas, it grasps the idea that it can raise something besides cotton. The price of cotton is down and the planters are discussing ways and means to raise it. Yet Secretary Wilson reports that there was but a cool reception for the obviously sensible suggestion that they should raise something else. The impression is that colored workmen, who constitute the bulk of the available cheap labor, can work nowhere but in the cotton field. With this belief the Secretary does not sympathize and cites the industrial school at Tuskegee as proof that the negroes of the South can be readily trained to the most varied forms of industry. He suggests that the raising of dairy cows, sheep, horses and poultry would be an advantageous substitute for some of the present unprofitable cotton fields. In all of these lines the South could command the market, not only of the North, but of foreign countries. This is an old story, but one which must be incessantly repeated until the lesson has been learned, that the permanent prosperity of so great a territory cannot be based upon a single product.

It comes to us with a shock of surprise and chargin, and must cause a ripple of amusement among the other civilized nations of earth, that it should be necessary now on the brink of the twentieth century for the Congress of the United States to consider an amendment to the constitution providing that no congressman or senator shall be a polygamist. And yet the case of Mr. Roberts, of Utah, has brought us into that ridiculous situation. As we have said before, the House of Representatives might of course expel Mr. Roberts as soon as he has taken his seat. But it has been felt to be necessary to settle the matter forever by an amendment to the constitution. A joint resolution has been introduced into the House for that purpose and has been favorably acted on by the committee. The proposed amendment is in two parts. The first is an amendment to the article which declares the legal qualification of senators and representatives. The other is in the form of a sixteenth amendment to the constitation and reads as follows: "Sec. 1. Polygamy shall never exist within the United States or any piace snbject to their jurisdiction. Sec. 2. Congress shall have power to make all needful laws to enforce this article and punish its violation."

Those of the European powers which are suspicious and disturbed at every indication of a possible Anglo-American Alliance are doubtless viewing with satisfaction the failure of the joint high commission which has for many months been trying to construct a reciprocity treaty between the United States and Canada and define the boundary between Alaska and British Columbia. We have already mentioned the points at issue and called attention to the difficulties involved. The difficulties have proved to be insurmountable at present and tha commission has dissolved temporarily. It will reassemble during the summer at Quebec and resume negotiations. However, the failure to agree upon any single item of any consequence after nearly six months of continuous effort, is not a promising omen for ultimate success. The boundary question is the most important point of difference since it cannot be set aside, like a eciprocity proposition, but must be set-ed, now that it has been raised. It is ifficult to see how the American commis-ioners can alter their view of the bound-ry, backed as it is by the explicit provi-ions of the original treaty and by the nanimous consent of all nations, including reat Britain, for three-quarters of a cen-ury. On the other hand, Great Britain ants a port convenient to the Klondike egion so much that it will be hard for her ommissioners to admit that they have no ight to it. There is still no reason why ur relations with England should be other han the most friendly sort. A matter like his should not and will not be permitted to nterfere with the sympathy co-operation etween the two nations.

PAPALISM AND AMERICANISM.

The Pope has written a letter to Cardinal ibbons which has created no small stir in oman Catholic circles in this country. he object of the letter was "to clear up everal controversies which troubled the ouls and hearts of the Catholics, as the ope himself declares." The "Life of ather Hecker" is made a sort of text for he Pope's epistolary sermon to American atholics. It is claimed that this book through defective translations and com-ents has been the cause of many dissen-ions." The book has been regarded as upporting the view that Roman Catholi-ism ought to take cognizance of the prog-ess of the age and "lessen its old severi-ies and accept theories suitable to the press-ng requirements of the people." His oliness will have none of this. He says: Those who consider that it is opportune o attract dissidents into the church by werving from or modifying known doc-rines are highly blamable. On this point he Vatican Council has declared that a doctrine of the faith which God has revealed s not a philosophic invention proposed for perfecting men, but a divine depository given in the person of Christ, which must be guarded faithfully and held infallible." The Council" he adds, "having recognized he infallibility of the Pope, Catholics ought to listen to the counsels of the Pope on all questions." Further on he adds, We cannot approve the mass of theories called 'Americanism,' which might give rise to suspicions that Americans wish to constitute amongst themselves an autono-mous church."

This letter will be very disappointing to the more liberal prelates, such as Archbishop Ireland, who hoped to see Roman Catholi-cism in this country become sufficiently Americanized to adapt itself to the spirit of our institutions. The Pope sees this tendency, for he is a shrewd man and a close observer of the events and movements of the times, and he has taken this occasion to rebuke it. If this thing is allowed to go on the Pope fears that the Roman Catholic Church in the United States might con-clude to throw off allegiance to the See of Rome, as the Church of England did a good while ago. This would not be in harmony with the theory of papal su-premacy, in which the idea of home rule has no place.

Enlightened Roman Catholics see very plainly that unless Roman Catholicism does modify some of its discipline and practices it cannot continue to thrive and prosper in this free land. Hitherto the church has grown chiefly from immigration. The time has come when it must depend more upon making Catholics of native Americans. This will be found to be a very slow process unless it can be made apparant that Roman Catholicism is in perfect harmony with the American idea of religious liberty and the rights of con-science.

There is no question but that a crisis is approaching in the history of Roman Ca-tholicism in this country, and the question is soon to be decided as to whether the church whose boast is, "Always the same," can maintain that boast in free America, or whether it must of necessity adapt itself to the civilization that is here dominant. It would be safe to predict, we think, that such modifications as are essential will be made in spite of traditional boasts or the epistolary deliverances of infallible popes. The spirit of the age is stronger than the edicts of kings or the bulls of popes.

THE EARLY PROGRESS OF CHRIS-TIANITY.

The Rev. James Orr, D. D., Professor of Church History in the United Presbyterian Theological College, in Edinburgh, deliv-ered a course of lectures in 1897, in the Theological Seminary at Auburn, New York. The title of the lectures, three in number, was, "Neglected Factors in the Study of the Early Progress of Christian-ity." The lectures were originally pre-pared for the Mansfield Summer School at Oxford, in 1894. By request of the faculty of the Auburn Seminary they are now given to the public in a volume of more than two hundred pages. This work is from the press of A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York.

Dr. Orr's contention is:

"I. That Christianity had a larger exten-sion laterally, i. e., in point of mere numbers, in the Roman Empire, than the ordinary rep-resentations allow.

"II. That it had a much larger extension vertically, i. e., as respects the different strata of society, than is commonly believed; and—

"III. That it had a much greater influence intensively or penetratively, i. e., in its effects on the thought and life of the age, than is gen-erally acknowledged."

Gibbon estimates the Christian popula-tion of the Roman Empire at 6,000,000. Chastel, a French writer, rejects Gibbon's computation as too low. He thinks that probably one person in twelve in the Roman Empire was a Christian. Uhlhorn says in his book on "The Conflict of Chris-tianity with Heathenism:" "It is gener-ally assumed that they [the Christians] formed about one-twelfth of the whole population in the East, and in the West about one-fifteenth." A writer, named Matter, put in a plea for one-fifth. Canon Robertson apparently leans toward the opinion that between one-tenth and one-fifth of the Roman population was Chris-tian. Kiem expresses the belief that at the close of the second century of our era the Christians were one-sixth of the popula-tion of the empire.

It requires courage to stand out against these commonly received estimates con-cerning the numerical progress of Chris-tianity in its early history, but the facts now accessible render doubtful, at least, the estimates above referred to. The an-cient catacombs are purely Christian cemeteries. Millions of persons are known to have been buried in them. These were all Christians. The catacomb discoveries are a "neglected factor in the study of early church history." They seem to in-dicate that the Christian population of the city of Rome was from one-third to one-half, and Gibbon admits that the propor-tion throughout the empire was analogous to that of Rome. The number of Christians in Rome was sufficiently large to cause Paul to write one of his longest and certainly his most important epistle to the saints in Rome only about twenty years after the ascension of our Lord. Accord-ing to Tacitus, in the year 64 A. D., the number of Christians involved in Nero's persecution was multitudo ingens — "an immense multitude." And Clement, of Rome, referring to the same persecution, speaks of "a great multitude" that had suffered for Christ. The famous letter of Pliny to the Emperor Trajan, in the year 112 A. D., leaves an impression on the mind of the reader that the gospel had won signal victories in the turning of men from the worship of idols to the service of the living God. Reading what this man said about the Christians when asking advice of the Emperor as to the manner in which he, as an officer of the Roman Government, should treat the followers of Christ, we are prepared to dissent from Gibbon's characterization of Justin Mar-tyr's language concerning the numerical increase of Christians as a "splendid exag-geration." This is what Justin Martyr says:

> "For there is not one single race of men, whether barbarians, or Greeks, or whatever they may be called, nomads, or vagrants, or herdsmen dwelling in tents, among whom prayers and giving of thanks are not offered through the name of the crucified Jesus."

Pliny says that the temples of the heath-en gods were "almost deserted," and that the victims for sacrifice could find "very few purchasers." Was Pliny guilty of "rhetorical exaggeration" when he wrote thus to Trajan concerning the numerical strength of the Christians in the year one hundred and twelve? Eusebius is authority for the statement that in the year 250 A. D., the church in Rome cared for widows and other poor to the number of one thousand five hundred. The church in Antioch cared for double that number. This church had a membership of one hundred thou-sand. During the persecution inaugurated by Diocletian, a town in Phrygia was burned with all its population, including men, women and children, because the inhabitants, those in high rank as well as persons of humbler station, confessed that they were Christians and would not recant!

These are a few of the facts to be con-sidered in a study of the early success of Christianity in gaining numbers.

The membership of the Church of Christ in the beginning was not drawn mainly from the lowest, but from the intermediate classes and embraced many of the wealthier and higher orders. The New Testament furnishes conclusive testimony on this point. Prof. Ramsay in his "Church in the Roman Empire," goes so far as to say that Christianity "spread at first among the educated more rapidly than among the uneducated." This probably is going too far. It is, however, certain that Gibbon is in error when he says that the church was "almost entirely composed of the dregs of the populace—of peasants and mechanics, of boys and women, of beggars and slaves." The wealthy and learned are now and must always be a minority in the church, since in any community, as a whole, there are comparatively few such persons. In what church are rich people a majority? There were men and women of social position and wealth among those who received Jesus as the Messiah during his personal ministry. Luke names Mary, of Magdala, Joanna, the wife of Chuza, Herod's steward and a woman named Susannah, and says that with them were "many others who ministered unto" Jesus and his disciples "of their substance." Lazarus and his sisters, of Bethany, were evidently persons of good social position. Zebedee, the father of James and John, two of the apostles of the Christ, owned boats and employed servants in carrying on his business. Matthew was able to make "a great feast in his house," and Zaccheus is described as "rich." Joseph of the Arimathea is spoken of as "a councilor of honorable estate" and as being "rich." He was a disciple of Jesus and gave his degraded and disgraced Master decent burial. "Even of the rulers many believed on him." In the Jerusalem church were persons, apparently not a few, who owned houses and lands. If there were no persons of wealth in the apostolic church why did Paul say to Timothy:

"Charge them that are rich in this present world, that they be not high-minded, nor have their hope set on the uncertainty of riches, but on God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, that they be ready to distribute, willing to communicate, laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on the life which is life indeed?"

Does not this charge to the young preacher imply that his ministry was, in part at least, to persons of wealth and social position?

That there were very poor persons who were disciples of the Christ and the members of his church is not denied. Such men and women in large numbers received the Son of Man as their Friend and Savior. Of this there can be no doubt.

But the facts here named and a multitude of similar ones have too often been overlooked in our study of the "progress of Christianity."

Hour of Prayer.

LIVING EPISTLES.

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, March 1st.)

(2 Cor. 3:1-6; Matt. 5:13-16.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The lives of Christians ought to reflect the life of Christ in such a way as to commend Him to the world.

The lesson this week emphasizes the truth of the statement that Christianity is more than creed or doctrine or dogma; that it is a life. It is a life which is, indeed, related to creed and doctrine, but it is something other and more important than either. It is a vital force, transforming character and manifesting its power and conduct in all the relationshisps of life. In his profound prologue to the fourth Gospel, John declares of the Word that was with God and was God, that "in Him was life and the life was the light of men." Let it be noted that in this statement it is the life of the incarnate Word that is the light of men. It is not so much what Jesus taught, though that is of infinite value, as what he was, that has influenced the life of mankind. It was His life that has profoundly impressed men of all ages with the divinity of his character and mission, and has commended God to the faith and the affections of men.

This is the sum and substance of what Paul declares to these Corinthians. He tells them that they are his epistle and that they are an epistle of Christ, "written, not with ink, but with the Spirit of the the living God; not in tables of stone, but in tables that are hearts of flesh" (2 Cor. 3:3). The apostle declares here that the character of these Corinthian Christians is his commendation as an apostle, and also the commendation of Christ. There are living letters, whose lives declare to others both the character of Christ whom they acknowledge as Savior, and, in a measure, of the minister through whose teaching they became disciples of Christ. There is a suggestion here for ministers which ought not to fail to impress upon them their peculiar responsibility. A minister's work must be judged, ultimately, by the character of his converts.

If Christians themselves are living epistles in whom the world reads the life of Christ, and from whom men of the world derive their conception of Christ and of the worth of his religion, "what mannner of persons ought we to be in all holy living and godliness?"

This harmonizes entirely with the words of Jesus quoted in the second citation, where the disciples are declared to be "the salt of the earth;" that is, the saving power by which society and the world is to be purified and preserved. Losing this saving power, this positive quality to affect others for good, they become worthless. Again, they are said to be the "light of the world." Having thus received the light of Christ, who is the true light, they are to allow that light to shine through their lives and enlighten others. It would be a profitable question for us to ask ourselves, How far are our lives reflecting the life of Christ? In other words, what conception of Christ would the world form, judging Him solely by what they see in our characters and conduct?

He tells us, further, that the place for a lighted lamp is not under a bushel, but on a stand, and admonishes us to "let our light so shine before men that they may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven." It is of the first importance to see to it that we have the true light of Christ in our own hearts, and then not forget that we have been enlightened, not only for our own good, but for the enlightenment of others, and that we are to become transmitters of the light of life.

Nothing is more needed to quicken the work of evangelism, to commend the religion of Christ to the world, and to stop the mouths of gainsayers than the exemplification of Christ's life in the lives of His followers and the application of His teaching to all the affairs of life. This is the supreme responsibility of the church, no less important than its external agencies for sending the gospel to the ends of the earth. The silent outraying influence of the lives of Christians is not less important in the winning of the world to Christ than the verbal proclamation of the gospe The two supplement each other, and with out either the work of the gospel is crip pled. In the light of this truth it is eas to see that there is an important sense i which all of us can be preachers and mis sionaries.

Some letters contain good news an wholesome instruction, while others con tain bad news and exert an evil influence What kind of letters are we? What d our neighbors, our associates, our busines partners, our employees, our families, rea in us to commend Jesus Christ to them an constrain them to glorify our Father i heaven?

PRAYER.

O, Thou who art the Lord of Life an Light, whose epistles we are, written b Thy Holy Spirit, we thank Thee that Thou didst not only give Thy life for sinful men but that in addition to this sacrifice o Thyself, Thou hast bestowed upon us th gift the Holy Spirit, through whose gra cious influence our lives and characters hav received some of the divine lineaments We humbly pray Thee to write Thy wil upon our minds and hearts, Thy name upon our foreheads, that we may more fully represent Thee to the world. May our lives be a truer transcript of Thy life, that others may be won by our example to Thy love and service. For thy name's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

This is written on the anniversary of Washington's birth, the 22nd of February. The flags are flying from the public buildings and from many business houses and residences, and the banks are closed in honor of "the Father of his country." It is a great character that projects his influence across the centuries and makes his personality a potent factor in shaping the course of events. Such a character was that of George Washington. It is not simply that he lived in an important epoch of his country's history, for thousands of others did the same whose names have not come down to us. There was something in his personality which focused the spirit and highest purposes of his time and made him the leading actor in a great historic drama. No one thinks of Washington as a man of special brilliancy in any particular line or of remarkable talents—a sort of intellectual prodigy—for he was not that. But he possessed something of far more value than brilliancy of intellect. He was a man of sound judgment, of wide information, lofty patriotism, unsullied integrity and a statesman of wide vision and of high ideals. In him the occasion and the personality which it demanded met and henceforth he became a great historic figure.

It would be difficult, perhaps, to overestimate the influence of so great a personality on the life of the nation, standing in the forefront of our national history as an ideal of lofty patriotism and unselfish devotion to the interests of his country. His example has inspired in the hearts of millions of his countrymen the desire and the ambition to serve faithfully and well the country and Constitution with which his name is forever linked. Men have seen in him a type of American manhood which has inspired hatred of tyranny, a love of freedom and a devotion to God and native land. The life of such a man does not ease its influence with his death, but ontinues to be a powerful factor in mold-ng the character of men and institutions n far-off lands and ages. Most of the reat men that have served our country vith distinction, received inspiration rom the life and character of George Washington. Jackson, Clay, Webster, Ben-on, Lincoln, Garfield and McKinley, have each felt the impress of his influence.

How rich a nation becomes in the lives and influences of its great men—its states-men, its military and naval heroes, its poets, its authors, its artists, its jurists, its preachers of righteousness, its phi-anthropists, its great company of name-less heroes and heroines who give themselves unselfishly to the enlight-enment and elevation of the race. It is this sort of production that makes a nation truly great, rather than its square miles of territory, its material products of field and mine, its army or its navy. Washington's country is great because of its free institu-tions, its civil and religious liberty, the great men and women who have adorned the pages of its history and have made that history resplendent with noble deeds, and because they hold that liberty as a sacred trust to be used for the benefit of mankind. It is great because, along with its civil in-stitutions there have sprung into life in-numerable religious and benevolent insti-tutions for the benefit of the unfortunate classes of society and for fostering and de-veloping the moral life of the poeple. Long live the memory of George Washington! Long live the country of which he is the "Father," and the institutions which bear the impress of his noble character! Long live pure and unselfish patriotism, a mighty factor in the maintenance of civil and re-ligious liberty and in disseminating their blessings throughout the world!

It is to be remembered, however, that we best honor Washington, not by slavish con-formity to maxims and rules laid down by him for the infancy of the republic, but by cherishing the same spirit of unselfish patri-otism and high ideals of citizenship which animated him. It was not given to Washing-ton to foresee the possibilities in the exten-sion and development of the nation he assist-ed in establishing. It would be vain, there-fore, to expect to find in his writings a previs-ion of future conditions and a statement of rules to be applied to those conditions. Each generation of patriots must, under the in-spiration of the same spirit that animated Washington and his compatriots, apply the principles of constitutional liberty to the condition that exist in its own time, just as each generation of Christians is under obligation to apply the principles of the gospel of Christ to the conditions of its own time. In neither politics nor re-ligion can we be true to our fathers except as we are true to their spirit, and cherish the same independence and love of truth which they cherished, and be true to our age as they were true to theirs.

During March we will present to every one paying their own subscription to 1900 and sending us $1.50 for one new subscriber a copy of The Wonders of the Sky, a beautiful little cloth-bound volume of 82 pages, written by W. J. Russell, with an introduction by J. H. Garrison.

Questions and Answers.

What is meant by "hungering and thirst-ing after righteousness?" (Matt. 5:6.)

Jesus, in the language quoted, doubtless refers to that deep and earnest desire of the human soul for that righteousness which he taught and which exceeded the right-eousness of the Scribes and Pharisees. It consists not in conformity to certain ex-ternal rules and regulations, but in purity of heart and motive and life. The blessing pronounced upon those who thus hunger and thirst is that "they shall be filled;" that is, they shall find that satisfaction of heart and soul which comes to those who accept Christ as their "wisdom, their right-ousness, their sanctification and redemp-tion."

We have a brother in the church here who is opposed to women leading the prayer-meeting. What is best to be done in his case? F. J. D.

Get him to join the Christian Endeavor Society if you can. Persuade him to sub-scribe for and read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGEL IST. Get him in a class in Sunday-school that has a good teacher. Present him a copy of the New Testament in clear, bold type. Get him to lead the prayer-meeting oc-casionally, when, as usual, the attendance is made up largely of women. If these things do not straighten him out, he is probably incurable.

Current Religious Thought

In a history of Christian Science in the Standard, by John Rothwell Slater, the writer says:

Intelligent Christian Scientists estimate the proportion of their number attracted to the subject and convinced by personal knowledge of physical cures at three-fourths of the whole. In other words, the remarkable book of Mrs. Eddy, whose obscurities, absurdities and self-contradictions must be evident to any educated reader not blinded by an unreasoning credulity, is not responsibile for the wonderful growth of Christian Science. A few minds here and there, especially those easily mystified by abstract terms and the artful use of capital letters, have been converted solely through this book, without reference to its practical application. But the great majority have, either before becoming acquainted with "Science and Health," or during its study, learned of persons being suddenly and strange-ly released from the grasp of some chronic and severe disease while under the care of Chris-tian Science practitioners. They have wit-nessed the swift transformation of an appar-ently helpless rheumatic or paralytic patient into an active and cheerful person. Or in their own bodies they have felt such changes, after proving for months or years the powerlessness of drugs to effect a radical cure. Let us be prepared to admit that great numbers of such cures have occurred. To attempt to break down the evidence on which they rest would be, in many cases, a waste of time; though certainly many persons have supposed them-selves to be cured when they were really only temporarily relieved of pain; and many others have testified to wonderful cures of ailments which never existed save in their own imagina-tion—such as certain cases of "nervous pros-tration," and similar ill-defined maladies which, any good physician knows, often need no cure save the firm resolution of the patient to throw away pills and powders, get out of doors, and take some interest in life. But cures have been wrought, and apparently in not a few cases, where according to ordinary views of physiology the mind is not a controlling factor. This is the fact which Christian Scientists rely upon as their unsailable defence.

On the question of ministerial courtesy in relation to his church, Rev. P. G. Her-bert, of Louisville, Ky., in the Preacher's Helper for Dec. 1898, says:

In leaving an old pastorate, he should show no partiality in his farewells. If there has been any friction between a member and him-self, perhaps at this time the weak brother's heart may be touched and may yield if he should receive due courtesy from the pastor. Then it is very discourteous for a minister to speak disparagingly of his past charge. If there are grievous faults which must be spoken of, contesy demands that the mildest terms be used. As a matter of courtesy, a minister should be in his pulpit at the appointed hour for service, unless the sickness of himself or immediate family prevent. Sometimes we find ministers vacating their pulpits for a mar-riage or funeral without previous notice. Such a procedure is a gross discourtesy to his con-gregation. This law requires that a minister do the best service possible on all occasions. Anything less is positively a discourtesy to the people who employ and give attention to him. He should conform to the custom of the time with reference to hours for service and length of sermon. He should not assume to be director; neither should he talk the prayer-meeting, Sunday-school or church to death. He should know that "a fool is known by a multitude of words." He should greet all who attend his services; and visit his entire mem-bership regardless of social, political or finan-cial difference.

The Literary Digest, Jan. 14, contains an interesting article, translated from the German language, on the question, "Is Social Democracy Becoming More Friend-ly to Christianity?" from which we give below the closing paragraph, indicative of an affirmative answer to the question:

In this connection it is deeply interesting that Pastor Paul Gohre, easily the leading social writer among the German clergy, in an article in the Leipsic Welt (No. 46), in review-ing the history of Mehrig, expresses the con-viction that since the beginning of the present decade the Social Democrats actually have been able not only to carry out their non-partisan policy in reference to religion, but that a more friendly attitude toward Chris-tianity actually had been developed in the ranks of Social Democrats that promises much good by regaining the non-Christian masses of Germany and of Europe for Christianity. This new era dates from the cessation of the special Social laws in 1890, since which time the agi-tation, once so widespread and popular—name-ly, of having all Social Democrats of Germany to a man sever their connection with the state churches (Massenanstritt) — has practically died out, and prominent anti-Christian agi-tators in their ranks, such as Dr. Rudt and Dr. Wille, have been crowded out of the ranks of Social Democracy by the sentiment of the others. The Christian pastor, Th. Wachter, has been received as a member, and his at-tempts to spread Christian ideas among his new associates have ever been received with favor, as is seen from the Sonntagsblatt, started by him in the interests of this program.

But Gohre declares that it is useless to ex-pect the return of the masses to the Christian-ity as taught and practiced by the churches of to-day. He states that Mehrig's book cer-tainly teaches this, not only the primitive Christianity of Christ, a religion stripped of its dogmatic garb, can successfully plead for the return of the estranged multitudes now found in the Socialistic camps; and that this Christianity must come, not with words only, but also with deeds that will do justice to the workingman and his cause.

The New Voice takes occasion in a re-cent number to correct a very widespread misconception of the true purpose of those advocating the legal prohibition of the liquor traffic. It says:

The purpose of the Prohibitionists is not to make men moral, but to place the government on the side of morality instead of on the side of immorality. The sale of alcoholic liquor is a nuisance; it is the business of the government to supress nuisances. It is a constant menace to peace and order; it is the government's business (recognized as such on election days and other occasions) to remove all such men-aces. It is a constant and inevitable breeder of crime; it is the government's duty to remove notorious causes of crime, as well as to dispose of the results of those causes. It is a constant cause of increased taxation; it is the govern-ment's duty to protect property from the im-position of needless and useless burdens. Finally, it is a business in direct contradiction to the purposes of government, and its work is a perpetual danger to the success of republican institutions, dependent, as they are, upon the virtue and intelligence of the citizens. For all these reasons, political and economical as well as moral, we urge that the government, so far as its power and influence extend shall be placed on the right side instead of the wrong side; shall refuse to countenance and protect the public traffic in liquor, its barter and sale; shall, in other words, assume the same attitude toward alcoholic poisons that it assumes to-ward other poisons—forbid its sale except for medical purposes.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

INTRODUCTORY PERIOD.

V. The First National Convention, Held in Cincinnati, October, 1849—The Call.

CHAS. LOUIS LOOS.

The fact which was noted with emphasis in the chapter on "A. Campbell and His Colaborers," that the men who inaugurated our reformation were endowed with large intellectual power, with wisdom, learning, piety and strong moral courage, and were vividly and deeply versed in the Word of God—a providential fact, certainly—has marked with its salutary influence our entire history. In the divine hand it has given us power and large development; has brought us to understand God's purposes in his Church, and to adopt the efficient means of executing these purposes.

Early in our history, during the fourth decade of this century, the thoughts of our prominent men were turned to the important question of the necessary condition for the permanent and prosperous life of the church. This meant its proper organization, in the widest sense of this word, as revealed in the word and spirit of the New Testament; for on this depended its efficiency—the wise development and exercise of its power as God's agency to execute his work in Christ on the earth.

The revolutionary period of initiatory conflicts was passing away; the time for the established, regular, enduring life of the church had come.

Those still among us, old enough, may remember that by 1840 there was already a general awakening in the churches, the result of the teaching of our strong men, notably in the Millennial Harbinger, on the questions of "Organization, Co-operation and Edification;" i. e., the closer alliance of the churches for efficient co-operation in general evangelization, Sunday-schools, proper pastoral work and discipline in the churches; the creation of a larger efficient ministry of the Word, and the control of the free itinerant preachers.

These and kindred questions were at that time exciting with much force general attention.

This was most creditable to the intelligence of our preachers and our people, and was full of promise for the future. It is well for the present generation, now so far removed from those days, to know this important fact in our history. Those who will take the pains to read the Millennial Harbinger of those years will find this statement confirmed. The inquiries and discussions these important topics aroused throughout our churches and our press, had much to do in bringing about the great convention of 1849, and in inaugurating among us the era of missionary enterprises, which has given us the remarkable period of expansion and progress we are witnessing to-day.

The Millennial Harbinger was always with its great power leading in the ways of true progress and development; its watchword was ever, Forward! It was the Pharos that guided the people and illuminated their path in all important movements.

Our first general convention was held in Cincinnati, in 1849, beginning October 24; it continued, with the preliminary meeting, five days. What were the motives that summoned this national assembly?

First of all, it was urged on all sides, and by our wisest men, that it was of great importance that a closer acquaintance and fellowship of mind, heart and hand should now be established among us, because of the increasing number and the widespread extent of our people. But, furthermore, also because we were beginning to awaken to the duty of executing the command of our King to carry the gospel to all parts of the world. These were the two leading motives that called this memorable convention. A. Campbell, in an article strongly advocating this step, said: "The purposes of such a primary convention are already indicated by the general demand for a more efficient and scriptural organization —for a more general and efficient co-operation in the Bible cause, in the missionary cause, in the education cause." Everywhere the words were heard: "We have gone through the war period, battling for life and existence; now we must turn our attention to the more difficult but most vital question of permanent organization for lasting existence and strong action in our life and mission as representatives of apostolic Christianity."

During the spring and summer of 1849 the calls for a general convention became more numerous and stronger. A. Campbell early in that year advocated such a meeting to devise methods "for the setting in order the things wanting among us to perfect the church and convert the world." The Christian Age and Unionist, of Cincinati, edited by W. Scott and T. J. Melish, responding to the suggestion of A. Campbell, said: "We all seem to see the necessity of such a meeting, and doubtless a great majority of the brotherhood are anxious to have it." The Christian Intelligencer, the organ of the brethren in Virginia, edited, I think, by R. L. Coleman, under date of June 23, gave hearty approval. "We are very anxious," it declared, "that there shall be a general meeting of the Disciples. Let the brethren from the different parts of the United States come together, cultivate each other's acquaintance, and in the fear of the Lord consider the welfare of Zion and the means to be employed in extending the boundaries of Messiah's kingdom. We insist that all the churches shall take the matter into consideration at an early day and appoint persons to represent them."

John Young, of Mason County, Ky., an Irishman of liberal education, and once a professor in Bethany College, and afterwards president of Butler University, wrote to the M. Harbinger. "Brother Campbell: I am truly glad to see among our editorial brethren a general desire for a meeting of delegates from the churches to decide upon our course in reference to Bible circulation and missionary operations. . . . . The delegates from the churches should proceed to lay a basis for missionary operations ar form a society for sending evangelists to th heathen. . . . . The great comman of our Lord is, 'Go into all the world an preach the gospel to every creature.' Bu we are not fulfilling it. Others with les knowledge of the divine Word than w possess, have gone abroad and are winnin thousands from paganism to the service o the living God, and earning for themselve imperishable crowns, while we stand gazin on, priding ourselves on being the Reforma tion of the nineteenth century, but no doing the works which might honor an justify this high claim."

A. Campbell, during the spring an summer of that year, was with great powe and clearness urging the claims of th convention and of its objects, especiall that of the missionary cause. To certai objections to a missionary society, h answered in his usual forcible manner. H said, "To ask for a positive precept fo everything in the details of duties growin out of the various exigencies of the Chris tian Church and the world would be quit as irrational and unscriptural as to ask fo an immutable wardrobe or a uniform stand ard of apparel for all persons and ages i the Christian Church. . . . . In al things pertaining to public interest, not o Christian faith, piety or morality, th church of Jesus Christ in its aggregat character is left free and unshackled b any apostolic authority. This is the grea point which I assert as of capital impor tance in any great conventional movemen or co-operation in advancing the publi interests of a common salvation." To th end of his life this illustrious man contin ued with unabated confidence and earnest ness to advocate the missionary cause an the work of the convention in 1849.

In answer to the even more general and louder call for the convention, it was finally decided that it should meet at Cincinnati then yet the geographical center of ou reformation, on the 22nd of October.

CAN THE BARRIER WHICH INFANT BAPTISM PRESENTS TO CHRISTIAN UNION BE SURMOUNTED?—IV.

BY REV. JAMES M. CAMPBELL.

Infant baptism is of very ancient origin Its historical beginning cannot, however be very clearly defined. It seems to have been a thing of gradual growth. Had it come in as a sudden innovation a violent protest would undoubtedly have been raised against it. There are those who boldly affirm that it reaches back to apostolic times. Others maintain that it cannot be traced further back than the third century. The truth seems to be that whenever it may have had its genesis, it first emerges into sight early in the second century. When Irenæus wrote (about 180 A. D.) it was already an established custom. (See Professor Fisher's "History of the Christian Church," page 41.) Origen says, "Infants are by the usage of the church baptised," and he adds, "The church has received from the apostles the custom of baptising even infants." Cypan says, "There is less reason for refusing baptism to an infant newly born than an aged, though repentant sinner." nd Augustine, reflecting the opinion of is day, says of the baptism of infants, This matter has not been instituted by ouncils, but was ever in use, and is most easonably believed to be no other than a ning delivered by the apostles." The ontention of Origen and Augustine, that nfant baptism had apostolic sanction lacks atisfactory proof.

The main reason for the spread of infant aptism doubtless lay in the prevailing elief that baptism was necessary to salvaon. When the position was taken that ne regenerating grace of God is passively eceived in baptism (the view of Augusne), or when the modified view was held nat in baptism a germ of divine life is nparted to the soul (the Lutheran view), was at once asked, Why should it not be xtended to infants? If they are lost without it, why allow them to perish? Are they ot worth saving? And if their salvation an be secured in such an easy, magical vay, why not hasten with them to the aptismal font? A lingering faith in baptismal regeneration will, we think, be ound to lie at the root of the practice of nfant baptism. In very few Pedobaptist hurches to-day is that faith openly declared; in most it is stoutly repudiated, ut in all it finds a secret, lurking place. When a child in a Pedobaptist family falls ick, and is liable to die, his baptism must e attended to. Not that the parents believe in the sacramental efficacy of baptism; not that they consider it necessary o salvation. Oh no! but they want to be n the safe side. Against this superstitious regard for what is at best a mere eligious symbol all right-minded Pedobaptists lift their protest. Unless the rite s treated as a simple, symbolical act it is armful; unless it is accompanied with a piritual purpose and followed by the eaching of the child in spiritual things, it s vain. The very dividing of children into baptized and unbaptized is in itself injurious, especially to the baptized child, who nay be ignorant of the true significance of he rite. A boy in an English charity chool, when asked if he had been baptized, said that he had the marks of it on is arm. It was the exhibition of such ases of flagrant ignorance that led Lange o exclaim, "Would the Protestant Church ttain unto its final destiny, the baptism of ew-born children must of necessity be abolished. It has sunk down to a formality without any meaning for the child." ("History of Protestantism," page 34.)

To freshen the faith of Pedobaptists themselves in that which lies at the heart of infant baptism, might it not be well to throw away a worn-out ceremony for one that is fresh, easily understood, free from the blight of past controversies and incapable of being employed as a badge of sectarian separation? As a matter of fact, infant baptism has come largely to mean nothing more than infant consecration. Ask any number of ministers and intelligent laymen in Pedobaptist churches what meaning they attach to infant baptism, and they will tell you that it means the consecration of the child to God. Instead, then, of continuing to use an old ceremony with a new meaning, would it not be wiser and better to adopt a new ceremony to fit the new meaning?

It must be admitted that although the practice of infant baptism grew up early and spread wide, it never became universal. Many pious parents dedicated their children in their hearts to God, and brought them up in his fear without presenting them at the baptismal font. Gregory, of Nazianzan, Basil the Great, Chrysostom and Augustine were instances of eminent Christian leaders who, although the sons of saintly mothers, were not baptized until in after years they made open confession of Christ. Three of them were over thirty years before their confession through baptism took place. Here, then, was infant consecration without infant baptism; the very thing for which the writer of this paper is now contending.

(7) The introduction of infant consecration suggests the desirability of the restoration of the catechumenate. From the earliest history of the church the instruction of the children of Christian parents in the truths of Christianity was considered as necessary for baptism and admission to the church. The church threw over the children her fostering care. Originally the course of instruction given to catechumens extended over three months, but gradually the term was lengthened until it took between two and three years. Catechists were specially appointed by the church for this work. The most careful training was given in Christian doctrine and duty, and not until the catechumen was sufficiently instructed was the rite of baptism administered.

SOME TRACES OF HALF-FORGOTTEN SERMONS—THE CHURCH.

GEO. PLATTENBURG.

The relation of the church to the one great event to which the whole creation looked with earnest expectation, the redemption of the world, seems to be most vaguely held and minimized, if not wholly discredited. Looked at in the light of biblical assertion its value cannot be measured by words. The word church is here used in its strict New Testament limitations, with no special reference to the organizations popularly so designated. That the word is badly treated needs not to be affirmed here. It is no uncommon thing to hear that there are good people in all churches and Christians in all churches and in "no church." Whatever may be admitted as to the first part of this statement, the latter is perniciously untrue. It contains a fatally absured conception of the church of the New Testament. Whatever is here said shall be in rigid agreement with plain apostolic statement.

Paul, addressing "the church of God at Corinth," those "sanctified in Christ Jesus, called saints," says: "Ye are the body of Christ" (12:27). This body is the church of which Christ is the Head. "The Head over all to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all" (Eph. 1:22-23). "And he is the Head of the body, the church." "For his body's sake, which is the church" (Col. 1:18, 24). To be "a member in particular" of this one body, the church, and vitally connected with the Head is to be a "called saint," a Christian, and no one else is. Whatever is necessary to constitute a man a Christian is ncessary to make him a member of the one body. This statement is conversely true. In the one body, whose Head is Christ, and nowhere else (Acts 4:12), is salvation and life, for "Christ is the Savior of the body." What is the body without the Head? The Head without the body? The members in particular without either or both? The beauty and grace, the excellence and efficiency of the members are not in themselves, but are acquired and held by virtue of their essential union with the Head, and because of their respective positions in the body (1 Cor. 12:15-24). This need of an essential union with an original source of life and light is confirmed by these words: "Holding the Head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God" (Col. 2:19). An interesting problem is here presented to the lax dealers with the Scriptures, as to just how the "saints" in "no church," having no connection with the body or the Head, derives "nourishment" and "increases with the increase of God." Here is an ample field for the logic and learning of a "no-church" Christian.

The Lord himself illustrates, in the analogy of the vine and the branches, very cleary, the absolute necesity of a living union between the two, and so between himslf and the disciples. "As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, for without me ye can do nothing" (Jno. 15:4, 5). What is true here is just as necessarily of the Head and the body. And all this shows how fatally absurd is the puling conceit that spiritual, or even ethical life, in its highest conception, may possibly exist independent of and outside the body of Christ, "which is the church." In this age of piebald doctrinalism, it is desirable to emphasize the intensely personal conception lying at the base of all Christian life and productiveness. The community of interests, the reciprocal benefits and mutual sympathy of the "many members," come with their union with the Person of our Lord. "Except ye abide in me." "Without me ye can do nothing."

Another fact is strangely overlooked, or disregarded, in this age of countless "bodies," namely, that the body of Christ, the church, is not many, but one. "So we, being many, are one body in Christ" (Rom. 12:5). "There is one body" (Eph. 4:4). "For the body is one, and has many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. "For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body." "And now are they many members, yet but one body" (1 Cor. 12:12, 13, 20).

Paul, in a passage of great eloqence and majesty, describes the risen, ascended and enthroned Christ as uplifted beyond all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, above every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come. How transcendent these glories! How exalted these dignities!

> "No thought can reach
> The summit of his glory's height!
> Imagination's wildest flight
> Is lost in the romantic stretch"— still, great and wonderful as all these things are, Christ without the church would have no completeness. He "filleth all in all," yet the church is "the fullness of him." The specific sense of the pleroma here is very significant. It is that which fills a partially unfilled vessel to the full measure of its capacity. What surpassing glory and honor the church acquires in the light of this stupendous statement!

The value and the supreme worth of the church to Christ and to the soul redeemed, and the ineffable splendors that await it in the ages to come, are compressed by Paul into one brief passage (Eph. 5:25-27), which falls naturally into these parts:

1. Christ loved it.
2. He gave himself for it.
3. He cleansed it by the bath of water.

These form the grounds of its present deliverance, and in turn become the basis of its future development and glory. These things are the necessary antecedents of that he might—

1. Sanctify it.
2. Present it to himself—glorious, spotless, wrinkleless and without blemish.

These points present to the believer an ample and ever-enlarging field of inquiry, encouragement and hope. The beginning, the growth and glorification of the one body are unfolded in this single passage. How fair and glorious the daughter of Jerusalem, when all these things shall have been accomplished!

"Clothed with the sun, and in her train the moon,
And on her head a coronet of stars,
And girded round her waist with heavenly grace,
The bow of Mercy bright, and in her hand
Immanuel's cross—her sceptre and her hope."

JESUS AND THE SOCIAL PROBLEM.

FRANK A. MORGAN.

How did Jesus deal with the social problems of his own day? Some of them were as serious then as now. The social evil, pauperism, and municipal and state government were incomparably worse. Neither he nor the apostles denounced the state or city government, but they appealed to the governor to repent. Theirs was the individual method. Instead of merely deploring the widespread poverty our Savior preached the gospel to the poor, and gave this as an evidence of his Messiahship. An impostor might pretend to work miracles and deceive the people, but an impostor would not preach the gospel to the poor. In the making of feasts he would have the neglected ones invited. In order to reach the masses he would go within reach of the masses. As a physician he would not quarantine himself against those who are sick. Nor did he wait for them to come to him. "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." As well try to fish on dry land or catch canaries in the midst of the sea as to save men without going near them.

Is our method of locating churches usually in harmony with this fact? Are they not too often in the better parts of the city, where they are least needed, especially since others are in the same locality? In Brooklyn, N. Y., there are fifty churches within a radius of one mile. In the thirteenth ward, Boston, with 22,000 population, there is said to be not one Protestant church, while the Back Bay ward, with a smaller population, has thirty churches. When a physician finds a man with a sprained wrist he does not apply the remedy to the man's breast. Denominationalism is largely responsible for the present conditions.

Jesus would save society by saving the individual. He would save the individual by seeking for him. He not only loved humanity, but he loved men. There are some who profess great patriotism for their country, but have no love for any citizen of the country; they talk with tearful sentiment of the ignorant negro of the South, or of the poor and oppressed, but the one that lives within a stone's throw of their door, or is a servant in their own household, receives neither sympathy nor help. This could never be said of Jesus. His heart was open to all. The common people heard him gladly, because he gladly heard the common people. By healing the unfortunate he led the multitude to "glorify the God of Israel." The same result would follow to-day if the church did this work. It is true with the Roman Catholics. Notwithstanding the many faults of the church, doctrinally and otherwise, it holds a great place in the world on account of its practical works in the hospitals, schools and charities. The Protestant churches, with superior doctrine and a superior life, could do far more if they would.

In giving an example of love to one's neighbor Jesus does not command us to hold a prayer-meeting in his behalf, however good and needful such a work might be; nor does he advise the sending of a Bible or a hymn book, however commendable a gift of this nature should be considered; but the neighborly love is shown by caring for the wounded man by the wayside. The church is daily passing by on the other side and failing to relieve the distressed. The Disciples of Christ have not a single hospital for the sick, nor an asylum for the unfortunate of any class, and only one home for the orphan, so far as I am aware. The children of the poor are asking for bread, and the church is giving them an invitation to the monthly social; they are asking for an egg, and are told that the regular prayer-meeting is held on Wednesday evening. Like the disciples of old, the church is saying, "Send them away;" but Jesus would say, as he said to the disciples, "Give ye them to eat." I say this, not by way of censure, but that we may not be exalted overmuch on account of the little we have accomplished, or the few things we have tried to teach. In some respects we have scarcely touched the hem of the garment of New Testament Christianity. A vast field of practical Christian work we have never entered, and many New Testament teachings we have neglected or overlooked. These we must learn and teach and practice before we can claim to have fully restored primitive Christianity. For New Testament Christianity is not only a doctrine, but a life; not so much an opinion as a practice; not so much a theory as a spirit; not so much a correct scheme of redemption, as the fruits of redemption; not so much in telling men what to do to be saved, as in getting them to do something after they are saved.

Much of the work which was done by Christ and afterwards by the church is now done by the state asylums, hospitals and other institutions. This is through the influence of Christianity, and yet the church receives little or no credit for it. Too often, however, the work of the state is only negative. The state will arrest the criminal and punish him for his crime, but Jesus would save the man from the desire to sin. The state provides for gathering the bad fruit, but Jesus prevents it from growing. The state seeks for the sinner to punish him, Jesus seeks for the sinner to save him. One is the expression of authority, the other is the expression of love. A hungry boy in this state stole sixty cents, and in consequence was sentenced to the penitentiary for two years. He afterwards wrote a friend, saying he was learning a good trade, and that it might thus have been well for him to be sent to the penitentiary as he could then secure employment more easily after getting out and would not be tempted to steal. Should it be necessary for a poor boy to be sent to the penitentiary or the reform school in order to learn a trade at the expense of the state? If it be true, as claimed, that 85 per cent. of those sent to the reform schools are reclaimed, mainly from the fact of their being taught a trade, could not a large per cent. of them be kept out of the reformatories by giving them an opportunity to earn an honest living or learn a profitable trade? It is quite as important that a child's hand should be trained as his head, and with some it is even more so. We are so afraid of parental government that many children are left without a parent and without government and are scarce aware that they have a country until arrested for a crime. The mission of Christ was not only to all men but to all of the man.

Another example of the Savior's method in solving the social problem is expressed by Paul in the words, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus; who . . . emptied himself, taking the form of a servant." Paul held not his life of any account as dear unto himself. St. Bernard and St. Ambrose, in the middle ages, and Thomas Coke, in more recent times, abandoned worldly property and gave their lives to the service of Christ. This spirit was seen in the Norwegians, who went to India, saying: "We have come to teach you Christianity." "Who sent you?" "Nobody." "What have you to live upon?" "Nothing." "How do you mean to live?" We mean to do all the good we can and we are sure you will not let us starve." "But if we have nothing?" "Then we will have nothing along with you." The same consecration was seen in the devoted Christian wife of General Booth, of the Salvation Army, in leaving a home of luxury and wealth and consecrating her life to the elevation and salvation of the wretched people of the slums. And many others in this and similar organizations have done the same, and they are doing much to restore important elements in primitive Christianity and solve the social problem.

No less than this can be said of the workers in the college settlements in some of our cities. They have the true Christ-spirit. The fact that refined, cultured Christian girls are willing to give up comforts and selfish pleasures, and devote their lives to the worst classes in our worst cities is among the most heroic and commendable examples in history. It is pure Christianity of the Christ-type. When Thomas Chamlers became imbued with the holy ambition to solve the social problem in Glasgow he left his wealthy parish and accepted a work in the most degraded part of the city. House-to-house visitation was begun, reading rooms, bath rooms, societies and classes for all kinds of education were established, the gospel was preached in simplicity and power, and thus the community was transformed into one of the most Christianized and cultured sections of the city.

Here is a truth which cannot be denied: 'A people willing for Christ's sake to live where he needs them is the ultimate solution of the problem of saving the masses." Let me ask this question: If the divine Christ must needs have emptied himself of glory, leave his home in heaven, become a servant of mankind and live and mingle with the people whom he sought to save in order to redeem them—if the divine Christ must do this, can the human church expect to save mankind while doing less? If Christ must be a servant, how much more the church? If Christ must mingle with the people whom he would save, can the church save them from a distance? If Christ must seek the lost in order to save them, can the church expect to save them while waiting to be sought? If the apostles must be "as sheep in the midst of wolves," can the church ever save the world while remaining in the midst of sheep? We cannot save ourselves if we would save others any more than could Christ save himself. The church must be crucified together with Christ, must give its life a ransom for many, and the solution of the social problem is assured.

MINISTERIAL STUDENTS AND THE CHURCHES.

R. A. GILCREST.

A slight touch of the minor note sometimes heightens the appreciation of the harmony. But that same note long drawn out becomes a serious discord. In the editorial Budget of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for February 9th occurs an oft-repeated and long-continued note on such a minor key as would threaten to turn a symphony into a dirge. The strain is chimed in, doubtless, with the best intent. But, dropping the figure, it contains serious error, both on general principles and specific point that needs to be anti-spoken. This it is the purpose of this paper to do; and the fifth paragraph above in the same column of Budget furnishes a good text on general principles. It is a quotation from Beecher: "When a man goes to sleep in the audience it is a sign the preacher needs waking up." We need only a slight paraphrase of the text: "When the churches begin to leave the service of the older preacher for the services of the younger it is a sign the older preacher needs rejuvenating." If he has passed beyond that stage, permanently or otherwise, it is the part of wisdom and grace to accept the inevitable and do the best thing possible in the best possible temper. The inevitable, I say; for such it is. Such it always has been and such it always will be, until human nature is either transformed or glorified. Human nature is selfish, at least in spots, but one thing is certain: we shall not change it for the better by complaining of our lot. We entered the ministry of Christ, if we entered it right, "for better or for worse, for prosperity or for adversity;" yea, even for life or for death, and I would as soon parade my failure to maintain the sympathy and love my own family at home as to make public and complain of the church's lack of sympathy with me. I have been a preacher in my humble way for over twenty years, and I have for a long time been resolved what to do in the premises. If sympathy and regard cannot be had by earnest, loving and uncomplaining service, it shall be gained by a graceful and resigned resignation. In fact, here are two graces the preacher ought to develop early in life: that of resigning and that of being resigned. They are frequently the most necessary elements looking toward the safety of the church and the Church of Christ has the righ o way against all individual interest in spite of all her weaknesses. It is a very painful truth that the mercenary spirit too much prevails as a motive to the misistry; too painful, nevertheless too true, the writer not excepted. More than one or two preachers, in the last three years, in the prime of their vigor and strength, have turned away from open fields with an offer of nine hundred to twelve hundred salary and have laid idle for months watching for a better call, and that with general depression and bankruptcy all around. Not a few letters in the last four years have come to the writer from four states after this tone: "My work has been successful here, I can stay indefinitely, but I have always had a kind of hard place and would like to change. I see such-and-such a pulpit is vacant. Can you not recommend me there?" It would be an amazement to the unsophisticated to see the multitude of letters of application that comes to the elders of any one of our most substantial churches the week after its pulpit is published vacant, and that, too, from those who are "eminently successful in their present field," and are "urgently requested to remain." The cry is on now, "Home missions to the front." And, in view of the need of world-wide missions, well it may be. But where is our missionary spirit for the home field? Is it true, indeed, that "the love of Christ constraineth us" while we are always on the alert for calls—"louder" calls, more "substantial" calls, calls to a "splendid field," to a magnificent church, as though churches were made for preachers—so many opportunities opened for so many preachers to make a living in. Christ made preachers in order that churches might exist. Is it true that our fathers have made the churches in order that the present generation of preachers may subsit? The valiant soldier in a glorious cause is proud of his scars. Paul boasted that he bore in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus. If we are not disposed to "glory in tribulations" and boast of our scars, if need be, we had better be mustered out while our tempers are sweet; it may be some years before we can go and live with the angels who are perfectly good and able to bear with our pettishness. In all this there is no intention of justifying the selfishness and petty dealings of many churches with their ministers. God knows they are bad enough and need reform, but he also knows that lamentations never raised the dead.

Now as to some points in particular. "It is the fact that, in the neighborhood of some of our colleges where young men are preparing for the ministry, older ministers with families to support are crowded out by young men who underbid them because they have no families, and are anxious to get even a little assitance in aiding them through college."

If this is not a serious charge against our young preachers certainly the words "crowded out by" and "underbid" are unfortunate ones to use in the connection. They will surely leave a bad impression somewhere.

Permit me to state a few facts which, if they do not offset the "fact" mentioned above, will at least mitigate its crime.

It is a fact that our students go willingly and work hard where student preaching is asked for by the churches and judged by them to be the best they can do under the circumstances. It is a fact that among the churches wanting stated Sunday work students are discriminated against on general principles, even at lower wages. It is a fact that many of the weak churches of Central Illinoise would have nothing at all were it not for the help of students who are willing to help for the pittance they get.

It is a fact that some of our students are giving their time and all they are able to do in destitute places where they barely get their traveling expenses.

It is a fact that some of these young men are church-makers rather than church-takers, even before they get through their preparatory year.

It is a fact that some of them, when further advanced, refuse to build on another's foundation, or even choose the hard field in preference to the one well organized and established.

It is a fact, doubtless, that these same older preachers, if they have not already done the same thing, would do it if they were twenty-five years old and under the same circumstances.

It is a fact that there are "regions beyond" even the limits of college students where churches are wanting "the man for the place."

It is a fact that those preachers who were "lingering at Jerusalem" in the early day, by the providence of God, suffered a worse "crowding out" than the one above mentioned, and they "went everywhere preaching the Word;" and even then they went rejoicing.

Finally on this point, it is a fact that the very success of one of these young preachers sometimes proves his own disaster; for he gets the church in shape to support a man among them and then an "older preacher" is called in to reap the ripening harvest.

The remedy: "If they could be helped in some other way it would be far better."—"It would enable the young men to make better progress in their studies."—"A Students Aid Fund would come in good play in such cases." The best help is self-help, always and everywhere. In my judgement, of two students of the same capacity and industry the one who does two years' half-time preaching in a four years' course will be the broader, deeper and readier man and will have the advantage in after years. Students Aid Fund help is all right if properly limited and discreetly bestowed. It may be loaned on long time at low interest or none at all or given outright; but in either case if made more than supplementary it will prove disastrous in many cases to those we seek to help. On the one hand it will launch our young preacher into his future with a burden of debt; on the other it will send him out with the softness and dependence of one who has surrendered half his manhood to become a beneficiary. In either situation the smallest minority of young men would not be handicapped for all their days. Give the young man a chance, urge him to be independent, encourage him to make his own destiny in the on-rushing years of the world's greatest monuments for the redemption of man and the reign of heaven, with a trusting—

"Heart within and God o'erhead."

When he shall come in competition with me as an "older preacher"—and he will before many years go by—Heaven help me to say, God speed, and still be sweet.

Eureka, Feb. 11.

[A very good sermon, in the main, but at least nine-tenths of it has nothing to do with the text. The paragraph on which the sermon is based, raised no issue between young and old preachers as such. It referred to a complaint made by one of our state secretaries, that in certain sections of the state regular preachers, giving their whole time to the work, were crowded out of their places by persons who were not devoting themselves to the ministry, some of them being students and some of them farmers. He had certain concrete facts in his mind where this practice had worked injury to the churches, and injustice to the preachers. In his judgment that ministerial students who preach during their term of study, surpass those who do not. Prof. G. differs from the general opinion of those who have had experience in ministerial training. But our purpose was simply to drop a word of caution against carrying this practice on in a way to injure churches which have regular ministers and are able to support them. Let the students have free course in new fields or in weak churches unable to support pastors.—EDITOR.]

Our Budget.

—The time for the March offering is at hand.

—Take the offering on time; delay is dangerous.

—See that your church reaches its full apportionment.

—Be determined to have your church on the roll of honor.

—Aim to have the membership average $1 each. Push the one dollar crusade.

—Remember the Foreign Society will send missionaries to Cuba and Manila soon. This new work involves a much larger outlay.

—Bear in mind the outlay of the Foreign Society will be about $15,000 more this year than last. See that your church gives its proportion of the $15,000.

—Make March 5th a great day in your church. Make it a day long to be remembered.

—Remember, the Foreign Society has been compelled to borrow several thausand dollars to pay the missionaries.

—More than 2,000 churches have signified their purpose to observe the March offering. Many will do so that did not order March offering envelopes and other supplies.

—It is important that your offering be sent promptly. We hope to be able to make a favorable report for the first week following March 5th.

—Remember the new watchword: $150,000 for Foreign Missions in this, the Jubilee Year.

—Bear in mind the churches are asked for only one offering during the whole year, for Foreign Missions.

—Those wishing information about the Summer School of Theology, Harvard Univerity, may obtain the same by a note to Rev. R. S. Morrison, divinity secretary, Cambridge, Mass. This summer school will be open to men and women alike.

—At the third annual meeting of the Council of Seventy, at the University of Chicago, March 4th, there will be held a series of conferences for college students upon the general topic of "The College Student's Difficulties Concerning the Bible." While it is not supposed that the outcome of these discussions will be the removal of all the difficulties of the college student, it is hoped thereby to arouse a deeper sense of the dignity and importance of Bible study in connection with the college course.

—The official board of the church at Hebron, Neb., appointed a committee to place a church paper in every family possible, especially in the hands of the forty-two additions recently received as the result of a meeting in which D. D. Boyle assisted their pastor. Their care of new converts is worthy of commendation. Let the lambs be fed and there will be fewer weak churches in the land.

—We regret that we have been compelled to omit whole departments of our paper frequently this year in order to accommodate a portion at least of the deluge of excellent literature that has been pouring in upon us. Those whose articles have not yet appeared will thus understand the cause and continue toward us their good will and patience. We hope to be able to resume all our usual departments again in the near future.

—The protracted meeting at the First Christian Church, in this city, opened on last Wednesday night with a croweded house and great enthusiasm. Dr. J. Z. Tyler's sermons are greatly appreciated and will impart a strong spiritual uplift to the church. On last Sunday night the house was packed with people anxious to hear him. Being St. Louis Alliance day our preachers held no meeting on last Monday. We heard, however, of one confession at the Fourth Church.

—We are glad to present our readers with a portrait of our popular London correspondent, this week, together with an autobiographical sketch. Bro. Durban has for several years served up "English Topics" for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, hot and well seasoned, and those who have read after him with so much pleasure will be glad to look upon a good counterfeit of his face and to read his modest but most interesting sketch of himself. No doubt this will add to the relish with which they will read after him in the future.

—Clark Braden has been employed to take charge of Alma College, Alma, Ill. The board of trustees are making a special effort to increase the efficiency and popularity of this school and from the facts cited in a communication which will appear in our next number it is evident that such a school as this is greatly needed in Southern Illinois. Clark Braden is well known as an educator and preacher and will do a good work for and in Alma College.

—The editor of this paper has been on the wing a good deal of late, delivering a series of lectures at Butler College, preaching at Mexico on the Lord's day following, delivering a lecture at the Bible Institute at Columbia, Mo., on Friday of last week, returning on Saturday morning and leaving the same evening for Chicago, where he is to spend a few days. This will account for a somewhat smaller amount of editorial matter from his pen this week than usual. This, however, gives us an opportunity of working off some of the accumulated material which we have been compelled to lay over for lack of space.

—It is announced in the daily press of this and other cities that a brewing company of this city recently closed a deal for $3,000,000 worth of beer for Klondike. From the beer-maker's standpoint this would be called business, but it is neither good business nor good goods for Klondike. Better put this money in a railroad to that region, in the necessities of life for those in that region, or in mining machinery for the better extraction of the gold from its mines. But no! it must go for that which will do the miners great harm and no good. This is enterprise, but it is enterprise in a worse than profitless business. We do not rejoice in such prosperity.

—Our readers will find considerable space this week, as for several numbers past, devoted to Foreign Mission interests and the March offering. In addition to three pages of purely missionary literature of a high order and important, we publish a missionary story in Family Circle entitled "Will Brown," by Dr. Albert Buxton, of Fairbury, Neb. Dr. Buxton appears in a new role to our readers in this story, but in this role he writes as one who feels at home and who is the master of his theme. Then, in addition to all of these articles, the excellent likenesses of some of our missionaries in the foreign field and our usual Budget notes on the March offering in all, appeals to our readers in the strongest possible language for the largest possible offering, on the first Sunday in March. This is our last call before the time and we shall hope to hear of record-breaking results by the time of our next issue.

—Each step in missions in advance costs. It involves new workers, more buildings, more equipment. If a work is stationary or going backward, there is no call for any enlargement of contributions for its support. But if a work is alive and growing, there must be a constant increase in expenditures. There is nothing so costly as success.

—It should be borne in mind that the expenses of the missionary society are incurred in securring funds, and not in administering them. If churches would send in all the money needed of their own accord, the cost of administartion would not amount to one-fourth of one per cent. It is not handling money that costs; it is getting money form the churches. Agents must be employed, advertising must be carried on. If those who have the work in charge were to dismiss the agents and to cease advertising, the contributions would fall away to almost nothing. There are not five hundred churches that would contribute if no appeals were made. It is in this educational process that the expenses are incurred. The Missionary Society is educating a million people. This is one of the greatest universities in the world. This year 100,000 new students matriculate. It should be further borne in mind that if the receipts were doubled, the per cent. of expenses would be reduced almost one-half. It does not cost any more to handle a half a million dollars a year than it does to handle a qurater of a million. The way to reduce the expenditures is to increase the contributions.

—The election of Burris A. Jenkins, of Indianapolis, as the first president of Indianapolis University, by the trustees of that institution, at a meeting last week, is a very great honor and responsibility to be conferred on so young a man—only 30 years of age. Prof. Jenkins, however, has filled with credit every position to which he has hitherto been called, and there is no reason to doubt but that he will prove himself worthy of this new honor. Indianapolis University is composed of Butler College and colleges of Law, Medicine and Dentistry, embracing about 800 students. President Jenkins will resign his position as pastor of the Third Christian Church and will devote himself largely to the administrative duties of the University. The institution and its new president both have our congratulations.

—In the "Honest Rumseller's Plea," published in the Family Circle two weeks ago, the phrase which reads "And so in order that you may assist us in the greatest debaucheries common to this business" should have read in the greatest advancement that is at all possible in our common cause, etc. The abbreviation was ours, but the writer prefers his original words, It was our understanding that the debaucheries a saloon can cause is usually in proportion to the amount of business which it does.

—We regret that we have had to make so many divisions of Rev. Jas. M. Campbell's article on "Can the Barriers which Infant Baptism Presents to Christian Union be Surmounted?" The conclusion of the article, however, will appear in our next issue, and can then be read consecutively by those who have preserved their papers. That the article is provoking thought is evident in the replies already received from some who could not await the close of the article with their criticisms. We are glad of this evidence of interest in the thought-provoking article, and will let others be heard after the article has all been placed in the hands of our readers.

—From marked copies of the Morning Herald, Lexington, Ky., sent to us, it is evident that that city is in turmoil. The powers of darkness have been holding high carnival behind political curtains until they have driven or are driving the better citizens to an open warfare, a thing which they ought to have done at the first appearance of official corruption and saloon dictation. At the front in this open attack upon the enemies of righteousness in that city is I. J. Spencer, pastor of the Central Christian Church. Bro. Spencer is preaching against the evils of that city with all boldness and placing the responsibility for the state of things there upon the right parties. Such preaching will never lack for hearers nor fail of good results. Remember that we in America have yet to demonstrate whether we can govern our larger cities or whether they are to remain the spoils of corruptionists, boodlers, politicians, saloonkeepers, blind partisan voters and other criminals. So far as we have read Bro. Spencer we have said Amen! to his declarations.

—The Chicago Record, of the 26th inst., says that Robt. Breckenridge Halligan, of Chicago, has expressed an intention of giving $500,000 to Kentucky University, at Lexington, provided the institution would perpetuate his name. The authorities at Lexington now have the matter under advisement. We are glad to hear of this prospective piece of good fortune upon that historic institution.

—The article in this paper on "Jesus and the Social Problem," by Frank A. Morgan, is one of the most sensible treatments of the subject we have yet seen in the same amount of space and will be read with deep interest and with great satisfaction by all students of this problem. "Some Traces of Half-Forgotten Sermons—The Church," by Geo. Plattenburg, will also be read with interest. The title alone provokes an anxiety on the part of the reader to know what the article contains. It has the fascination of a locked box labeled, A Curiosity.

—As a large number of applicants from Cuba and Porto Rico have come to the Cuban Educational Association for the allotment to educational institutions in the United States and the association suggests the following plan to meet the emergency:

In each city or town which has an institution willing to receive one or two of these young men let there be formed a committee who will stand sponsors for the board and incidental expenses of each young man for one year of trial work at school. As soon as such committee informs this association they are ready to receive a student we will allot to them one whom we believe to be a competent and reputable student. Persons who do not care to engage directly in the work and wish to aid can do so by giving the money direct to the association and with such gifts express their preference for the institution where they wish the money expended. These gifts should be sent to the Cuban Educational Association, 289 Fourth Ave., New York City, N. Y., who will acknowledge the receipt and furnish any information regarding the work being done to aid these young men.

—One of the leading sermons in the Preacher's Magazine for February is by F. D. Power, Washington, D. C. The theme of the sermon is, "The Young People and Temperance Reform." The sermon is accompanied with a good picture of its preacher and the the theme is certainly timely and important. By all means our young people should be enlisted in temperance reform. If this can be done the liquor traffic would soon be crowded out of civilized society and off the earth, in due time, without the aid of either the civil law or moral suasion. Of course the sermon by Dr. Power on the subject is a strong one.

—In a note to the Standard, N. S. Haynes says: "I am glad to find myself not alone as to the place and function of these societies," referring to Bro. McNeill's statement that Endeavor Societies are not "co-ordinate" with the churches. How fortunate it is that we have two brethren among us who are opposed to making Endeavor Societies "co ordinate" with the churches! Now, if either of these bretheren will furnish us the name of one man, woman or child in the United States who believes in this "co-ordinate" idea, we will publish the name as a curiosity.

—Your editorial in reply to the Christian Standard was exactly right, not a word too much, nor other than it ought to be. I hope the brethren will express themselves on the question. You have my hearty approval of your position, and you are at liberty to so quote me if occasion should arise.—W. F. Richardson.

We have received many letters similar to the above from leading brethren, most of which are personal letters which we shall treat as private. As the above distinctly gives us permission to do so, we quote a few sentences from it. We particularly appreciate this word of approval from the president of the Jubilee Convention, whose head is as clear as his heart is loyal, in all matters that involve the well-being of the brotherhood.

—Dear Christian-Evangelist:—I notice in Christian-Evangelist of Feb. 2, that in referring to a symposium in Michigan Evangelist of Jan. 15, you say: "And yet there are reasons why a few Disciples of Christ in a given place, who are unable to maintain an organic existence, should work and worship with existing evangelical bodies in that place, at least until such a time as they can maintain a worship more in accord with primitive Christianity." By "work and worship" do you mean to recommend Disciples of Christ in the circumstances indicated to enter into full, formal fellowship "with existing evangelical bodies?"

We mean simply what we said, that there can be no objection, under the circumstances stated, in a Disciple of Christ working and worshiping with a religious body of another name. And not only so, but we believe that it is a duty to so do until such times as that one can have fellowship with his or her own people again. Full membership in another body is not necessary to a share in their spiritual things in such cases.

—The Superintendent of Public Instruction of the state of New York has decided that the employment of a teacher wearing the garb of a religious order in a public school or the rental of a building ornamented with religious symbols is a violation of the organic law of that state. In rendering his decision the superintendent quotes from a previous decision on this subject rendered in March, 1897, by Superintendent Draper, which quotation, owing to the general importance of the subject, we give below. Supt. Draper said:

The wearing of an unusual garb worn exclusively by members of one religious sect, and for the purpose of indicating membership in that sect by the teachers in the public schools, constitutes a sectarian influence which ought not to be persisted in. The same may be said of the pupils addressing the teachers as "Sister Mary," "Sister Martha," etc., etc. The conclusion is irresistible that these things may constitute a much stronger sectarian or denominational influence over the minds of the children than the repetition of the Lord's prayer or the reading of Scriptures at the opening of the schools, and yet these things have been prohibited whenever objection has been offered by the rulings of this department from the earliest days, because of the purpose enshrined in the hearts of the people and imbedded in the fundamental law of the state, that the public school system shall be kept altogether free from matters not essential to its primary purpose and dangerous to its harmony and efficiency.

—The pastor of the First Church in Atchinson, Kan., has fallen upon a plan which will help to solve the problem of the midweek prayer-meeting, perhaps. It is the giving of a series of twelve lectures—studies in the "Life of Christ." The first thirty minutes of the hour are spent in the regular prayer-meeting service, using the uniform topics recommended by the Chattanooga Convention; the last half of the hour is then occupied with the study. Outlines are carefully prepared and given out a week in advance. Constant reference is made to Geikie, Farrar, Edersheim, Deems' "Light of the Nations," Beedor, etc., etc. Already seven copies of Geikie have been brought by those interested. In spite of the very cold weather, the meetings have been largely attended and full of interest.

W. S. P.

This is a good suggestion and one that is entirely practicable where the pastor isable and willing to take on the extra work of thoroughly preparing his material. But the lecture should supplement, as above, and not be allowed to take the place of the prayer-meeting.

—The following are some of the names of preachers who have promised to enlist at least four churches in the March offering for Foreign Missions that did not give last year: C. G. McNeil, Cor. Sec. of Michigan; H. Baldwin, San Angelo, Texas; J. W. Holsaple, Sherman, Texas; B. E. Yuntz, Des Moines, Iowa; Dr. W. F. Ross, Champaigne, Ill., H. G. Wilkinson, Hastings, Neb.; L. M. Omer, Martinsville, Va.; J. W. West, Tazewell, Va.; L. E. Sellers, Emporia, Kan.; J. A. Battonfield, Clay City, Ill.; A. R. Hunt, Tarkio, Mo.; G. W. Henry, Warsaw, Ind.; H. H. Halley, Kalkaska, Mich.; W. H. Cord, Hazelgreen, Ky., and J. E. Lynn, Springfield, Ill. Many of these preachers have promised to enlist more than four new churches. J. E. Lynn, of Springfield, Ill., will undertake to enlist every church in Sangamon, County. We trust that these are but a hint of what all our preachers will try to do this year.

William Durban: Autobiographical Notice.

I was born in London, on the 6th of May, 1841, in a Church of England family. My father was a schoolmaster, and my mother was the daughter of an Essex farmer. Thus, I saw much amongst my relatives all during my childhood of both city and rural lite, and I have always felt equally at home in town or country. Many other circumstances helped to give me broad social sympathies with every class. I was brought up in very close contact wfth the clergy and the religious life of the majority of the English people.

At the age of seven I entered the highest class in my school, which was regarded as an extraordinary fact in the life of a little child. Though one of the most playful and skittish of children, I had from my first recollection a passionate love of study in many branches. It was a habit with me to begin the study of language after language without waiting for parents or teachers to set me a course of study. If I could get hold of a foreign grammar I immediately on my own account set to acquire all that was in it. When I was a small boy a clergyman, a Cambridge Classical Honor Graduate, was astonished to come across me lying down in playtime, amusing myself by reading the "De Oratore" of Cicero. That gentleman at once began to promote my interests, and in due time I was entered for a sizarship at Trinity College, Cambridge University. Circumstances prevented me from going thither, my mother dying and my family affairs being broken up.

I entered the office of a great shipbuilder and became a designer of marine engines for a few years after leaving school, but spent my evenings at King's College, London, and in due time graduated at London University. My purpose was to take "holy orders" in the Church of England ministry, but this was suddenly intercepted by a change of views on baptism, through reading some of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons. I therefore found that I could not conscientiously present myself for the bishop's ordination, for which I had been preparing.

After being baptized in the city of Hereford, where I held a tutorship in a college as professor of languages, I was of course compelled to abandon a position which was connected with the Established Church, and Mr. Spurgeon offered me a tutorship in his college, in which I remained for two years, after which I accepted a call to a Baptist pulpit at Newport, in the beautiful Isle of Wight. After four years of ministerial labor there I went north at the urgent request of Mr. Spurgeon and Hugh Stowell Brown, of Liverpool, to start a Baptist cause in the ancient and beautiful city of Chester. Here I enjoyed extraordinary blessing and success. My heart throbs with pleasure as I think of the thirteen years of delightful life in Chester, and of the noble church of generous people gathered, and the splendid chapel erected.

It was during that period of my life that I made acquaintance with the Disciples of Christ as represented by certain American preachers. An evangelist named M. D. Todd appeared in the city and, by his sermons in the great Music Hall, created a sensation and raised a storm such as I have seldom witnessed. I made his acquaintance, and was at first astonished and bewildered at his plea, but on examining it frankly and boldly told my own people and all the city that he was right in those things in which he differed from others. The storm was then diverted to myself, and I was made to feel the stress of bitter persecution.

It was my privilege at this time to make the acquaintance of W. T. Moore, J. H. Garrison, H. S. Earl, and others of the band of American preachers, as well as of the sainted Timothy Coop.

Being suddenly called to London to undertake the secretaryship of the Monthly Tract Society, I had the opportunity of coming into close contact with W. T. Moore, whom I in a short time joined in full co-operation in the work of the Disciples of Christ, at the invitation of the Foreign Christian Mission Society of Cincinnati. Since that day, I have without break or jar for a single moment, been my Bro. Moore's trusted lieutenant in the editorship of the Christian Commonwealth, and have toiled with every desire to be faithful to the Master's great cause, raising churches in London. After Mornington Church of Christ, Camden Town, which the railway company took from us, came Tasso Tabernacle, Fulham, which it fell to me to build; and then I was called on to take charge of the new work at Hornsey Tabernacle, in North London, where is being carried on what must surely one day become a great Church of Christ, which will help to move London. Thus am I rejoicing in pioneering for greater workers who will follow. There is not in England a more earnest, distinctive or promising cause than this at Hornsey. But all our Churches of Christ of the Christian Association are to be thus characterized. They never seemed in such good case as now. As president of the Christian Association of Great Britain I have the best opportunity of knowing what is the state of things. It has never been anything like so encouraging. If such dear old friends as Earl, VanHorn, Haley, Martin, Moore, Richardson, Garrison and others, who have paved the way, could take a round amongst us they would be abundantly gratified to see how their work has stood aud how it is being developed. The churches are sound in the faith, and so to a man are the preachers. If I had a thousand lives I should be proud to give them all to the Disciples of Christ, and this is how each man seems to feel.

Some Things.

That March offering for Foreign Missions promises to be by far the greatest our people have made. So mote it be.

"Whereas, God in his wisdom has seen fit to remove from among us our beloved brother, C. E. Garst," etc. Speaking with reverence and a heart full of grief, I say if God did that he has done a thing greatly to his own injury. Is it not time for us to leave off copying the mistakes of an age that did not understand, and to teach them better? It is sickness and death, not God, who removes people.

We thank God and take courage when we see a great paper like the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST publishing such sentiments as S. T. Shortess writes under the head of "The Relation of Christians to Politics." Oh no! the world is not growing worse while we have such writers and such papers.

Bro. Garrison, with your trenchant, yet mi d pen, touch up that bad trio, theater, cards and dancing. The church is being shorn of her glory and robbed of her power by these things. A religious church, armed with the truth, is i.resistible. E. L. FRAZIER.

[Bro. Frazier raises a very deep and much-mooted question concerning God's providence, in his reference to Bro. Garst's death. Does it go to the bottom of the problem to say that men are removed from this life by sickness and death? Do not both sickness and death occur under the operation of laws of which God is the Author? We regard our material life as a gift from God, in spite of the fact that human agencies are involved, because it comes through laws of which God is the Author. Is it any less true that death comes in the same way? It is catalogued among the Christian's possessions, along with life. It is in this sense, we suppose, that it is customary to speak of our deceased friends as having been removed by the hand of God. We cannot banish God from our joys or our sorrows; our coming into the world, or our departure from it. He who was dead and is alive forevermore, said: "I have the keys of death and of Hades."—EDITOR.]

Christ a Wonderful Savior.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—As a recent subscriber allow me to heartily commend your editorial on "The Fullness of the Gospel." It voices my exact sentiments. Christ is a wonderful Savior and most of us have not found out half his power. Let us labor for perfect love and trust.

I am a recent convert to the modern reform movement and have been helped on my way by Rev. E. M. Flinn, of Haverhill, who is the pastor of the church there. There is need of a vast amount of work in New England. I believe the people are ready for the movement and would welcome it under good preaching. Let us pray that God may send more such men as Bro. Flinn into this field and raise up workers among us who will explain the beauties of primitive Christianity.

The common people will hear them gladly. Protestantism in New England is drifting away from the poor. A special work among this class would be greatly blessed.

The testimonials in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla come from a class of people whose words are worth considering. Many clergymen testify to the value of this medicine. Read this:

"By a severe attack of diphtheria I lost two of my children. I used Hood's Sarsaparilla as a tonic both for myself and little girl and found it most excellent as a means to restore the impoverished blood to its natural state and as a help to appetite and digestion. I depend upon it when I need a tonic and I find it at once efficacious." REV. C. H. SMITH, Congregational parsonage, Plymouth, Conn.

J. H. Stark, the popular preacher of the gospel in story, has accepted a call from the church at Virginia, Ill., and will begin his work there March 5th, the day for the Foreign Mission offering. Bro. Stark has done a good work at Du Quoin, Ill.

Samuel Gregg has accepted the work at Ashland, Neb., and reports conditions and prospects favorable to a good work. The surrounding country will be kept in view and Bible-schools established wherever possible. Literature is ordered from this house for use in this field.

Bro. Graham, pastor of the church at New Kirk, O. T., has resigned on account of his wife's health. She is suffering from a cancer and for six months he has not been able to do much pastoral work. The church at New Kirk has had a good meeting by R. H. Walling, but is now out of a pastor. They have 65 members, half men, a $1,200 house, and a $200 debt. Address K. D. Olin.

G. W. Burch, pastor of the church at West Liberty, Iowa, reports the baptism, Feb. 7th, of Rev. A. L. Zink, of the U. P. Church. He is now engaged with the church at Milton, Ia. On the 17th Bro. Burch and his wife were surprised by members of his flock with an unlooked-for visit, the present of a gold watch for himself and a fine mantle clock for his wife.

W. J. Lhamon, pastor of the First Christian Church, Allegheny, Pa., began a series of special didactic and evangelistic sermons Feb. 21st to be continued each evening until March 11th. The gospel according to Matthew and the book of Acts will be the basis of the entire series of sermons. Those in relation to Christ, which come first on Matthew's record, those which relate to the kingdom and citizenship therein on Acts.

The church at Brazil, Ind., is trying the novel plan of introducing a protracted meeting with noted preachers from different parts of the state. Beginning on Feb. 13th the following preachers visited them in the order given: J. E. Pounds, B. A. Jenkins, A. J. Frank, L. C. Brown and Wallace Tharp. The meeting was continued by O. P. Shrout and the pestor, P. T. Martin.

Dr. J. Z. Tyler, of Cleveland, O., is assisting F. O. Fannon, the pastor of the First Christian Church of this city in a protracted meeting. Every preparation has been made for a good meeting. Enthusiasm and expectation are runni g high. The meeting opened with a crowded houses and one confession the first night. Dr. Tyler is looking well and enjoying his work and visit to our city.

J. E. Lynn, pastor of the church at Springfield, Ill., says: "The churches of Sangamon County have agreed to co-operate with the Springfield church in supporting a missionary upon the field, and we have adopted Miss Kate V. English Topics.

ENGLAND'S GRAND OCTOGENARIAN.

Yesterday John Ruskin passed his 80th year. All over the world, where the English language is spoken, multitudes of the admirers of the finest writers of that tongue now alive, must have joined in the salutations which his splendid career has merited and elicited. The British people are not as passionately appreciative of their great men as the French, but they are proud indeed of such a paragon of versatile genius as John Ruskin. This man is at once artist, poet, economist, philanthropist, altruist, philosopher, religionist and visionary. He is our English Tolstoi, but is a far greater genius, for he is many-sided beyond any living man, and excels alike in every department which he occupies in thought and action. John Ruskin was brought up in the Evangelical circles which early in this century monopolized influence in England. But exactly as Carlyle and George Eliot revolted against the narrow bondage, irksome forms and limited aims of the Puritan school of theology, so did young Ruskin rebel against the intolerably narrow doctrinal modes of thought and preaching which preceded the great revival of Anglicanism and the expansion of Dissent. Tennyson was another of these religious mutineers. So was Charles Dickens. It was on the Continent that Ruskin finally abjured Evangelicalism. He had strayed into a little Waldensian chapel in Turin, where he heard an excessively dull discourse on the exclusive favor of God for a few precious elect souls. Ruskin's position has ever since been very singular. He has fiercely fought Protestantism, narrowness and bigotry, and has in his capacity as an art critic constantly adulated the glorious pictures of the old religious painters of the Catholic renaissance. I spent most of my time during one year of my youthful studies in drinking the wonderful streams of thought which gush out of the pages of the seven volumes of Ruskin's "Lives of the Painters," surely the very grandest work on art ever given to the world. It was with much delight that I learned afterwards that Henry Ward Beecher had saturated his mind and formed his literary style by a similar course. If all our young preachers would spend a year in careful study, during their spare time, of that monumental work, they would find that their taste had been cultured in a school of the most beautiful diction and of the noblest thought. Sermons are sprinkled in every chapter. Ruskin is profoundly devout beyond every other art critic of the age. But his rebellion against the repellent Calvinism of the Protestant majority did not drive him as it did so many others either into Rationalism or Popery. With his passion for the æsthetic he loved the monks in the Florentine convents and cloisters, but he saw on the Continent what Romanism meant, and he unerringly recognized the elements in the Catholic hierarchies which justly brought on them the fierce hostility of men like Garibaldi in Italy and of the honest liberal leaders in other countries. John Ruskin has made a creed for himself, a system of psychology for himself and a political economy for himself. His creed is very short and very simple: "Obedience and love God and love and mercy to my neighbor." I often wonder what might have come of it if this pure and splendid soul had come in contact with some of the pioneers of our new reformation with all its liberty and breadth, blended with fidelity to the Bible, the Book which is everywhere adulated and extolled in the writings of Ruskin. It is pathetic to read of the decline of the grand old champion's strength. No longer can he send those vivid numbers of "Fors Clavigera," which were the most breezy and at the same time the most refined essays in modern social literature. Now Ruskin sits all day long by the window in his lovely Cumberland home, gazing out on the sea whose moods he has so often described as only he could depict it in word-painting. And ere long he will gaze on the glories of that glassy and fiery sea of whose splendors he has also penned rapt passages almost to be compared to the inspired rhapsodies of the Apocalyptic Seer. No nation can produce more than one John Ruskin.

OUR PROGRESS IN ENGLAND.

I should be very thankful if I could stimulate our noble American sympathizers to think much and often of the needs and the prospects of this our English work. Kindly look, brothers and sisters in America, at one latest record. Bro. Romig is in Liverpool. He has spent a few weeks there and has won for Christ 50 fresh conversions! Now this surely shows what England needs. You have sent us the right man, and he comes to sow the good seed in a style which makes us believe that there will be in each place he visits a splendid harvest after he has gone. But that is only one part. The other is that he is at the same time reaping the harvest that others have sown. Several of our brethren have toiled in Liverpool as evangelists for a few years each, being pastors also. And directly a specially gifted evangelist comes along for a campaign of a few weeks there is at once a fine ingathering. Why? Simply because the regular preaching had been so faithfully continued. We want Romig all the time to go through the land, first thus visiting each existing church for a protracted meeting and then going to start the movement on entirely new ground. This is what is desired by our Christian Association in this country. We need to have a man surrendered to this work, and indeed amongst the 40 millions of the British and Irish people we need to send forth a dozen such evangelists as Romig. With him is his fine singer, Prof. Hanna.

BROTHER HEDDEN.

We in the churches of Christ in London have been for a year learning to know and love Fred E. Hedden, who came over here from Buffalo, N. Y., on his way to South Africa, intending to preach the gospel there at his own charges, supporting himself by his trade, and going wherever the Lord should open doors of spiritual usefulness. He has this week left London for Southampton, whence after a week or so he will sail for the Transvaal. Bro. Hedden has gone to and fro amongst us in London, taking services or taking any part of a meeting that might fall to him, or worshiping amongst our congregatinns, but never accepting a penny for his help anywhere. He is a coachbuilder and works diligently with his hands as Paul did at tent-making. He spent his last Sunday in England with me, and now we have said farewell to this noble and loving-spirited brother who will be a missionary in a part of the earth where our plea is as yet utterly unknown. Are there any other young men in the United States who are waiting for a call? Any more who can sustain themselves by their manual skill and can go forth without waiting for a society to support them in the field? When our young men dream dreams and see visions in the Pentecostal sense the world will be moved. The time will come.

RELIGION IN PARLIAMENT.

The British and Irish Parliament has met. This is to be very largely an ecclesiastical session. At the very beginning the storm-signal was hoisted by Mr. Samuel Smith, member for Liverpool, who moved an amendment to the address to the Queen, regretting the lawlessness now prevailing in the Protestant Church. The government is turning cowardly. They are afraid to touch with the little finger the terrible problems which haunt them. The state ought to be absolutely impartial between one religion and another, but in this country it is not so. Here a state church must adopt the religion prescribed by Parliament, as in Russia the prescription goes forth from the Tsar, in China from the Emperor and in Turkey from the Sultan. The Lord Jesus Christ really has nothing at all to do with the matter. Parliaments and Emperors and Sultans do not allow Christ to interfere. Most of our bishops are supple courtiers and clever men of business. A new spirit is springing up among the laity of the Church of England, which the bishops and the government will find it hard indeed to deal with. The archbishop has been delivering a manifesto of his own. He wants to set up new courts of his own without any authority from Parliament. He offers to sit with the archbishop of York and to hear appeals from the bishops, a thing to which he has no right whatever and which no Parliament will endure. Bishops and clergy are alike trying to escape from the authority of the state and at the same time to clutch more tenaciously than ever the advantages of their connection with the state.

A Good Complexion

Depends on Good Digestion.

This is almost an axiom, although usually we are apt to think that cosmetics, face powders, lotions, fancy soaps, etc., are the secret for securing a clear complexion.

But all these are simply superficial assistants. It is impossible to have a good complexion unless the digestive organs perform their work properly; unless the stomach by properly digesting the food taken into it furnishes an abundance of pure blood a good complexion is impossible.

This is the reason so many ladies are using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they promptly cure any stomach trouble, and they have found out that perfect digestion means a perfect complexion and one that does not require cosmetics and powders to enhance its beauty.

Many ladies diet themselves or deny themselves many articles of food solely in order to keep their complexions clear.

When Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are used no such dieting is necessary. Take these tablets and eat all the good, wholesome food you want and you need have no fear of indigestion nor the sallow, dull complexion which nine women out of ten have, solely because they are suffering from some form of indigestion.

Bear in mind that beauty proceeds from good health, good health results from perfect digestion and we have advanced the best argument to induce every man or woman to give this splendid remedy a trial.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found in drug stores and cost but 50 cents per package. They are prepared by the F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

If there is any derangement of the stomach or bowels they will remove it and the resultant effects are good digestion, good health and a clear, bright complexion. Ask your druggist for the tablets and a free book on stomach diseases.

HONORABLE WITNESSES.

In all stations of life we find ardent advocates of the merits of that fine old Swiss-German remedy, Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. The farmer behind his plow, the mechanic in his workshop, the merchant in his counting-room, the scholar in his study, all have a word in its praise. The Rev. Emil Osbrand of Wayne, Neb., gives his opinion in the following words: "I can give from personal experience the best testimonial to Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. It acts quickly and effectively in all disorders of the system and has benefited me greatly in my rheumatic troubles.

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer cures rheumatism by eliminating the uric acid from the blood. It is not a drug store medicine, but is sold to consumers direct through local agents. Address the proprietor, Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 South Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

We might fill up our column this week with an account of the weather, which for four days has been the worst Washington has ever experienced. Now the sun is shining, the cold is less severe and we trust blizzards have left us for the season. This delightful change in the weather we trust is a pressage of the spiritual blessings in store for us. Evangelist J. Wilbur Chapman, of Philadelphia, with a corps of assistants will begin a series of meetings in this city Feb. 23, under the auspices of the C. E. Union, of the District of Columbia. We shall follow the Chapman meeting with a four weeks' seige at the Ninth Street Church. The pastor will lead the services assisted by C. E. Millard, the sweet singer of Missouri. With a congregation numbering six hundred, an auditorium which will hold one thousand (if it gets the chance) and an unlimited field, we should be able to report a large ingathering.

We regret to chronicle the fact that F. D. Power is suffering from throat trouble, the effects of an attack of the la grippe in January. He is contemplating a trip South until he shall have fully recovered. He has been fortunate in securing good pulpit supplies: A. McLean, L. A. Cutler, of Louisa, Va., Jno. L. Brant, of Valparaiso, Ind., and a general in the Salvation Army have edified the Vermont Avenue saints.

In spite of Bro. Power's gray hair and the fact the newspapers refer to him as the "venerable Dr. Power," and a young brother in a C. E. meeting, in Philadelphia, referred to him in the petition, "Lord, bless thy aged servant who is with us to-night," our Washington bishop has only just passed his forty-eighth milestone in the journey of life. Upon Jan. 23, his birthday, he received over three hundred letters of congratulation in the morning mail. This was the result of a conspiracy hatched by several of the Vermont Avenue members and stands as an evidence of the high esteem in which our good brother is held in the Capital City.

We are glad to have with us again Hon. Thomas W. Phillips, of Newcastle, Pa., who is widely known among our people for his large-hearted liberality. Bro. Phillips comes to Washington to attend the sessions of the Industrial Commission, of which he is first vice-chairman.

The purpose of the newly organized commission is "to study and compare existing laws bearing upon industrial conditions, here and elsewhere, to ascertain by competent testimony where they are deficient, defective, inoperative or oppressive, and to recommend such remedial statutes as will tend not only to make the conditions of industry more uniform as between the several states, but to remove such existing sources of discontent, inequality and injustice as can be reached and regulated through legislation."

The commission is composed of five members of the Senate, appointed by the Vice-President, five members of the House of Representatives, appointed by the Speaker, and nine other persons, who represent the different industries and employments, appointed by the President and approved by the Senate. The commission is divided into five sub-commissions as follows: (1) On agriculture and agricultural labor; (2) on the conditions of labor and capital employed in manufacturing and general business; (3) on the conditions of labor and capital employed in mining; (4) on transportation; (5) on statistics.

How profitable this commission may become is evident from a consideration of the subjects they have outlined for investigation; such as strikes, boycotts, good roads, effects of new and improved machinery, effects of employment of women and children, sweatshops, overproduction, the extension of markets, Sunday labor, effect of so-called grain and cotton gambling, and last but not least, effects on employees of use of intoxicants. William E. Sackett, Bliss Building, Washington, D.C., is secretary of the commission and will furnish information to inquirers.

A very remarkable meeting has been held by W. H. Book, in Montgomery, W. Va. One week's preaching resulted in 60 additions; 46 of whome came forward at the last service. Book helped me in a four days' meeting at Link's Grove, W. Va., eleven years ago, with similar results. I have never been associated with a preacher whose sowing yielded such quick harvests. The good, too, he accomplishes is not transient or evanescent, but abides. The new church at Joppa, Md., will be dedicated Jan. 19. W. F. Watkins will assist Pastor Hopkins in a meeting following the dedication. The meeting at Hagerstown, Md., conducted by Evangelist Ryan and pastor Carr resulted in thirty-three additions. EDWARD B. An Interesting Letter from Manila.

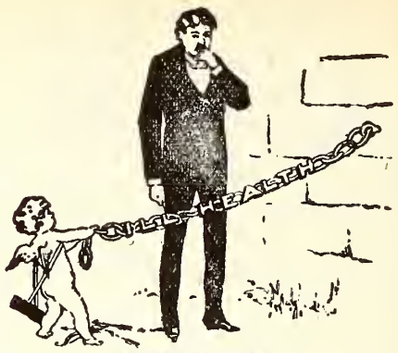
The following letter from Chaplain Hermon P. Williams, of the 51st Iowa Infantry, was written to the secretaries of the Foreign Society. In answer to his appeal the society has decided to enter the Philippines this year, if at all possible:

"Since my regiment has been assigned to duty in the expedition westward, and while the diplomatic status of these islands has been developing such a decisive significance, the advisability of focusing large missionary effort on the city of Manila has been urging itself on my mind. And now that I have seen the place and become somewhat acquainted with its salient features, and have been inspired by its prospects, it does not seem amiss that I write you on the subject.

"Just what disposition will be made of the Philippines by the results of the Paris Commission I do not know, but I understand that Manila is to be an American city. One cannot imagine a mission field more inviting and urgent than this to every sacred interest of the American Christian. A new government and a new civilization, introduced to these semi-civilized Filipinos by the glory of victory and every manifestation of good will to the peaceably disposed, affords an opportunity to the Church of God in America that cannot be found elsewhere and that will never be seen here again. If Christian America is as insistently earnest as military America, it is sure that she will be as victorious. To follow hard on our armies; to preach the gospel of love; to discriminate promptly between cursing, dishonest, licentious Americans and those who really represent her Christian civilization; above all, to show that the true religion is far nobler than the deceiving, barbarous priestcraft of this insular Catholicism—this is our immediate duty.



"There are in the city of Manila some two hundred and eighty thousand people and not a Protestant church in the city. Thirty years ago even English residents had to smuggle in their Bibles, and ten years ago an ex-priest was poisoned for translating a portion of the Scriptures and attempting its distribution. The Catholic Church is not so active as formerly and its power is greatly broken.

"Besides the customary services in the different regiments here, the only public meetings for Protestant worship are held in the Christian Commission tent and these are for the soldiers. There is a Methodist missionary here and a Salvation Army officer, but they have done nothing as yet. Chaplain Pearce, of the regulars, has gathered a small band of Filipinos around him and expects to organize an Episcopalian church soon. The Disciples are represented by a woman, who is working here, independently and unsupported—Miss Spradlin, of Topeka, Kan., one time laboring for the C. W. B. B. M. at Deoghur, India. She is at present working in a private school in English.

"These efforts are far from enough. Churches are needed and needed greatly, not for the Filipinos and Spanish alone, but for the Americans as well. They say Hong Kong is full of people crowding into Manila. I venture the assertion that a good thrifty church could be established within five years among the English and American residents. Perhaps the same task would take little longer in the Filipino districts, for these Filipinos have been nutured in deceit and treachery. They are bright and capable, eager to learn, and hopeful material for the gospel.

"Manila is bound to be one of the greatest radiating centers of the Orient. Its climate is salubrious. It is so situated as to command a large share in the commercial development of countries possessing great and untold natural resources. Its harbor is said to be one of the finest in the world. It is backed by a territory remarkably fertile. Above all it is destined to be the Eastern headquarters of the irrepressible Yankee, and that means a great deal.

"If the foreign missionary expects to occupy this field—and surely they will plan for nothing less—why can it not be done at once, and the new mission be made an issue in the coming March collection? Two men are urgently needed to start the work as it ought to be started. Put one in the Malate district south of the river and he can gather a church from the higher class of natives and may soon find himself in the midst of the growing American community. Let the other man begin to preach among the thatched roofs of Sampolo and he will have a large territory, unguarded even by the Catholic church house and a parish of ten thousand Filipinos. A third man could occupy

A New Obstacle.

The old obstacles that used to prevent the marriage of loving couples are out of date. The blood-and-thunder villian is a myth nowadays. The cruel father is only a tradition. Distance, absence and shipwreck in these days of cheap, safe and swift transportation do not count. The new obstacle is a common sense one. It is ill-health on one side or the other, and sometimes on both.

Men nowadays hesitate to marry a woman, no matter how beautiful, no matter how attractive, or interesting, or witty, if she is a sufferer from ill-health. All men worth having desire happy, healthy children. Any woman who will, may fit herself for the duties of wifehood and the exalted function of motherhood. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription banishes all hindrance in the nature of local ill-health. It gives health, power and capacity to the delicate and important organs concerned in wifehood and maternity. It corrects all displacements, allays inflammation, heals ulceration, stops exhausting drains and soothes pain. It prepares for natural, healthy motherhood. It makes maternity easy and safe and almost painless. It insures a new-comer constitutionally strong and able to withstand the usual ills of babyhood. It is the greatest of nerve tonics and restoratives. Medicine dealers sell it and an honest dealer will not urge a substitute upon you.

"After suffering untold tortures," writes Mrs. J. Ferguson, of Box 29, Douglas Station, Selkirk Co., Manitoba, "I thank God I found relief and cure in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription."

The profit side of life is health. The balance is written in the rich, red, pure blood of health. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation and make the blood rich and pure. They never gripe. By druggists.

his time well among the Chinese of the Binondo district.

"In writing to you on this subject, I am aware that you may have considered this question yourself quite at length. If such is the case, I hope your conclusions will prompt you to urge on the board the immediate opening of a mission in Manila, and I trust that the brotherhood will place in your hands sufficient funds to successfully prosecute the work.

A Supreme Opportunity in Our Educational Work.

This is our Jubilee Year. All departments of our work as a people must be pushed to the front. The strengthening of our educational institutions is a part of this work that must come in for its share of attention. My soul is filled with joy to see the work of Hiram College making such wonderful progress. As a loyal son of Hiram I hope to do my part as the Lord hath prospered me in the jubilee endowment of that institution. But I want to say to the brethren of the West that another burden is on my heart at present. It has been said that the success of the popular movement for Hiram will mean much for all our educational institutions. God grant that this may be true. It seems, therefore, a fitting time to speak concerning an opportunity that is now before the churches in Nebraska and surrounding states. Has our brotherhood forgotten Cotner University? I trust not. True, the obituary of this institution has been written a number of times, but the school has gone on in a quiet way doing a noble work for God and for the church in this section of the Lord's great harvestfield. Some of the most consecrated preachers of the Word that I have ever met have been educated in this school.

In the past few years this work has not been placed conspicuously before the people, but Bro. W. P. Aylesworth and his faithful associates have gone on in a quiet way instructing young men and women in the great questions of life. Those of us who know the work done do not hesitate to say that the school is doing an excellent work for God and for our cause in this state. At present there are twenty-eight young men in the school who are preparing for the gospel ministry. This is nine times as many ministerial students as there were in Hiram when I entered there thirteen years ago. Yet, some people say there can be no future for Cotner. For three years the school has been conducted and no debts have been incurred. This has been done at a great personal sacrifice to those who are teaching. But now if our brethren will awake to the responsibilities of the hour this school may not only be saved to our brotherhood, but it can be made much more of a power for good than it now is. Hence I want to speak of the opportunity that is now before us.

Unfortunately the finances of the school were such that the college building, dormitory and grounds have passed into the hands of the creditors, principally a number of banks of Lincoln, Neb. These firms do not want this property, they desire that the people who have started this work shall own and control it. To prove their sincerity they have subscribed very liberally toward reducing the indebtedness. A plan of reorganization has been devised by the friends of the school whereby those who will aid in redeeming the property shall have a part in the management.

Last July Bro. J. W. Hilton, a graduate of the institution, a man whose work will do credit to any school among us, was secured to take the field and canvass for funds to redeem the building and grounds from indebtedness. About sixteen thousand dollars is needed in addition to that subscribed by the creditors. Thus far something over eight thousand has been subscribed, over one-half of the amount needed. Now is the time of opportunity, for less than eight thousand dollars in addition to what is now in sight, property worth at least fifty thousand dollars can belong to the Church of Christ. Shall we allow this opportunity to pass by? This property cost one hundred thousand dollars. Without ownership of the property the school cannot be conducted much longer. This is needed to prepare young men for the ministry. Our cause will be put back fifty years in this state if we lose this school. It cannot, it must not be. In the name of God and in behalf of the cause that we all love, I appeal to the men and women whom God has blessed with temporal things, come to the rescue of this school. There ought to be at least five men in the state who would gladly and willingly give a thousand dollars each to this work. There is no place that money can be invested with greater profit than in the cause of Christian education. A number of brethren would be far richer if they would give five thousand dollars apiece. It would be money invested for the Lord.

Bro. Hilton is doing all in his power. He is working like a hero under discouraging circumstances. Now in the last few months of the canvass may not his heart be made glad by some liberal contributions to the trust fund—a fund to be held in sacred trust until enough has been secured to meet all indebtedness of the school? It is hoped to close this canvass by May first. Brother, sister, will you not help in this? If so, send your offering or pledge to J. W. Hilton, Bethany, Neb. If you cannot send a large amount, send what you can and the Lord will bless you in the giving. Remember, brethren, that contributions are not limited to Nebraska, or even Western states.

Many Eastern people have so invested money that it has been lost in a Western boom. This is not a boom. We are dealing with solid facts. Invest your money for the Lord in the cause of Christian education and you will be "laying up treasures in heaven where moth and rust doth not corrupt and thieves do not break through and steal."

May the Lord lead you to be liberal in this matter.

Fraternally yours,

F. A. BRIGHT,

Pres. of Nebr. Christian Missionary Society.

One of John Smith's Sermons.

In the last number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Frank W. Allen in his interesting letter says, "I would give a good round sum for even one of John Smith's sermons," and then inquires, "Has even one of all he preached been preserved?"

I am able to answer this inquiry in the affirmative. At the annual Missouri state meeting, in the year 1867, at Chillicothe, John Smith was an honored visitor. This was probably the last state meeting he ever attended. Though his body was weak and frail, it was remarked by all that his mind was clear and strong. There was a general desire to hear him preach one of his grand sermons, and this he consented to do upon the Lord's day over which the meeting was held. By request of the convention, W. C. Rogers, J. A. Berry and myself were chosen to take down the sermon as it fell from the lips of the venerable preacher. After he closed we conferred together and compared notes. There was very little difference in our versions of the sermon, and what one lacked of catching the exact phraseology the others supplied, and the result was a complete transcript of one of the greatest sermons to which I have ever listened. Its publication was requested in the Christian Pioneer, then published in Chillicothe by Bro. D T. Wright, and I well remember its appearance in that paper, though I cannot now tell the month; probably in the September or October number of the year 1867. By an examination of the files of the Pioneer, Bro. Allen can have his wishes gratified. I would be greatly pleased to see a republication of the sermon for the benefit of the present generation.

A Great Meeting.

The Central Church of Christ, Des Moines, Iowa, has now in progress a great meeting, now four weeks old, which for spiritual power surpasses any of the great meetings held in this church. The weather during the entire time has been intensely cold, but every evening a large, earnest, thoughtful congregation greets the speaker; and at every service there have been a number of additions to the church. The preaching has been done by the pastor, Dr. H. O. Breeden. I need not say it is well done. Those who know Dr. Breeden, either as a preacher or a lecturer, understand his forceful manner and logical thought. No higher endorsement can be given any man than the fourteen years of continued service and the monumental work which stands to his praise in the Central Church. The people are not drawn to this meeting by the desire to hear a new man tell the new story, but to hear the earnest, godly man, whose voice has become familiar to them, and many times upon occasions of joy or sorrow has conveyed the true sympathy of soul. The great themes of the gospel have been presented with unusual clearness and earnestness. The people are taught and won. There have been one hundred and sixty-one added to date, and the meeting continues with unabated interest. The history of this church demonstrates to the brotherhood the advantage of a long pastorate. Fourteen years ago, when Dr. Breeden, then a young man, was called to the pastorate of the little church on Locust Street, there was a membership of about three hundred. The congregation and pastor worked, and God gave the increase. Eight other churches have been established in the city, and the Church of Christ occupies the very first place in membership and influence in the city of Des Moines. Much of this is due to the unbroken influence of the long and successful pastorate. The Central Church has now, after liberally giving of its members and means to the establishing of eight churches in the city, over twelve hundred members. The church supports several missionaries in the foreign field, gives liberally to all Home Missions, responds readily to calls for charity and conducts in the church institutional work, where supplementary instruction is given the young men and women, thus enlarging their usefulness. This department was opened last October, and now has about four hundred persons regularly enrolled. The importance of this department, I think, can hardly be overestimated. The great work accomplished here is possible in any city in the country. There are, however, three things necessary:

1st. The pastor must be satisfied to remain with his people.

2d The church must be satisfied and appreciative of the efforts of the pastor.

3d. All parties must work together for the glory of God and the good of humanity.

A succession of short pastorates can never build up a great work.

The New Church Building at Boston.

The new building of the Disciples of Christ was dedicated on Sunday, January 22nd, and it may be somewhat interesting to note progress of our work in the city of Boston.

For several years the society has worshiped in South End Tabernacle, corner of Shawmut Avenue and Madison Street, and after repeated efforts to establish a permanent work in that location, and after having reached the conclusion that it was impossible to build a permanent home church which we might reasonably expect to call the mother-church in Boston, and from which we might hope to start missions in other sections of the city, it was decided wise in the fall of 1897 to dispose of our property at Shawmut Avenue and Madison Street. After considerable careful search we finally decided to locate on St. James Street, which is in Roxbury Highlands, and succeeded in purchasing a lot of about 8,000 feet, upon which stood a dwelling-house, and the location of the dwelling-house was such that it did not have to be moved, and therefore to-day stands as a source of income to our work. The property was purchased, and sufficient Roxbury stone was taken from the lot with which to build our present chapel. The seating capacity is about 250 to 300, and immediately back of the auditorium is the pastor's study and two robing rooms. A pipe organ has been put in which is very sweet in tone and adds much to the impressiveness of our service. The house is heated by steam throughout, the pews are quartered oak, and everything is gotten up with an eye to having a comfortable and attractive church home. The vestry is about the same size as the auditorium, with ladies' parlor, library and kitchen connected.

We built the building on the lot so that the dwelling-house did not have to be moved, and therefore have the income from the property which more than takes care of the small debt which we now have on the property, and instead of having to raise $600 a year interest as we did on the old property, we now practically have no interest to raise, as the rent from our dwelling-house pays the interest and gives us $100 to $200 per year besides. Our property stands us $16,500, and is accessible from all parts of the city.

Bro. B. L. Smith, of Cincinnati, preached the dedicatory sermon, and the American Christian Missionary Society, who have been having an oversight over this work for years, and who have contributed largely toward the support of the work here, took our dedication as an occasion on which to declare this church self-supporting, and with a gift of $1,000 bestowed upon us, the benediction of the society. It would be needless for us to try to state our appreciation of the efforts put forth and the substantial aid rendered by the American Christian Missionary Society during the past several years in the maintainance and upbuilding of this work, and it is now our hope that we may be able to show ourselves able to care for this work here and thus render to the American Christian Missionary Society the best and most permanent thanks possible. We feel that those who have contributed toward the American Christian Missionary work cannot but feel that the means and effort they have contributed have certainly been wisely entrusted to the society, and as people come here and visit us and go to other places where they may see the work of the Missionary Society, it cannot help but convince them that money placed with the American Christian Missionary Society is placed where it will yield the best of interest.

The sermon preached by Bro. Smith was very able and reached the hearts of the people and did us all good. In the afternoon communion service was held at 2:30 and Bro. Roland A. Nichols, of Worcester, preached the evening sermon. A short session of Sunday-school was held at 12:15, conducted by the superintendent, J. C. Spry. Junior Endeavor was held at 4:00 P. M., conducted by Rev. R. B. Ray, who has substituted for us for the last year and a half and has done excellent work among us. Christian Endeavor, at 6:30, was conducted by Rev. E. C. Davis, of Springfield, Mass., and at all of the services the house was filled.

Those of our membership throughout the West, where we are so strong, and where we have church buildings without number, cannot appreciate quite the feeling which we now have here in getting into our own attractive house, and it is our earnest desire that we may be able to build the work up from now on, so that much good may be done for the Master in this city.

We earnestly desire that all who come to our city shall certainly visit us in our new house at No. 18 St. James Street, Roxbury. Lock us up, as we want to meet you.

The Crisis in Christian Endeavor.

The recent references to the present condition and opportunities of Christian Endeavor among the Disciples of Christ is timely. No one who studies the situation can fail to see that Christian Endeavor as a force in the religious world is passing from the period of youth and experiment to that of strength and maturity, and in no communion of the church is it capable of rendering the service which the Disciples of Christ may realize from its judicious use. We have for several years been permitting it to take its way among us directed only by such efforts as Bro. Tyler and other earnest workers in the various states could make in justice to the demands of busy pastorates and occupations requiring most of the time of these willing workers. If under such circumstances the movement has assumed the proportions which it now holds among us, what may it not become both in extent and in the character of its service if we can devote to it the full energies of a ripe and experienced life, such as Bro. Tyler is now willing to dedicate to the work? Few will be able to realize how untiring have been his efforts in the past and at what expense of time and strength he has wrought in behalf of this work among us. If it is possible to secure from this time forward his full time at a salary for which he will make a many-fold return, it ought not to take long to provide that salary. We think it worth while to employ trained and competent men for the supervision of our missionary interests. Is it not equally worth the while to secure exclusive and experienced direction for a work which touches every phase of our interests, missionary, educational, biblical, and those relating to every form of church life, and that holds in its hands the whole future life of our movement? The incomparable work which Bro. Tyler has already done as superintendent of Endeavor and as organizer of the Bethany Reading Courses is the pledge of what he is able to do, and yet it is only a suggestion of what is possible with the larger liberty which such a service would offer him. It is usually more difficult to secure the right man than it is to provide the means for his support. But the man is available at this moment; should not the means be easily and quickly obtained?

Notes and News.

The new church building at Steubenville, O., will be dedicated April 16th, by F. M. Rains. The building will be equal in convenience and seating capacity to any in our city. Our congregation has held together almost without a break during the year we have been out of a church house. JOHN G. SLAYTON, Pastor.

Yesterday, the East Side Christian Church decided to purchase lots, upon which a temporary building is to be erected soon. This will make the fifth church of Christians in Denver. Our East Side organization is but fourteen months old, but it is a bouncing baby. Two additions so far in February.

The First Christian Church at Barry, Illinois, N. Cory pastor, will dedicate its new house of worship March 5th. The dedicatory services will be conducted by F. M. Rains, Cincinnati, Ohio. There will be three sessions of the church on that day, beginning at 10 A. M., 3 P. M. and 7 P. M. A cordial invitation to all has been extended and a great day in anticipated.

San Antonio, Tex., a city of 65,000 people at a recent election, changed its government from Catholic to Protestant men. The mayor, eight aldermen and all the balance of the city ticket except the city collector was elected by the Protestant element. This change is believed to have been absolutely necessary for the welfare and prosperity of the city by its non-Catholic residents. Our Sunday-school there is reported to be "on a genuine boom."

Dedication.

The good people at Cortland, Jackson County, Ind., have just completed a new and commodious house of worship. It is built in modern style; is well furnished; has baptistery, organ, etc., and is in every respect an up-to-date house. The attendance at the dedication, which occurred on Lord's day, Feb. 19, was very large. Brethren Jones and Veach, of Seymour, were with us. It was a great pleasure to be with the brethren at Cortland and preach the opening sermon, raise the money to provide for the debt, and dedicate the house. God bless them! L. L. CARPENTER.

The First Pastor at Carthage, Ill.

Bro. Scofield called me to assist him in a meeting at Carthage, Ill., when 22 below zero marked the degrees of cold. The meeting was to me a very pleasant one. Thirty-four years ago this month I began work here as pastor, being the first pastor of the church. Thirty-three years ago I had the pleasure of baptizing the present pastor, Judge C. J. Scofield. Twenty-one years of the thirty-three he has been the church's efficient pastor, doing a successful work for truth and righteousness. There was a number added during the meeting. I was called home to attend a funeral and closed my work there Feb. 20th. Week by week the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST reaches me, ever full of freshness. I think the excellent picture of our noble Bro. Procter deserves a compliment. That I think a praiseworthy feature of the paper. E. J. LAMPTON.

Please allow me to request through the columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that if any of the readers know of Disciples who have moved to this city they write me giving their names and past record. If any friends we know who are inclined to the position of the Disciples I should like to have their names also. We have here a great city. There are twenty-two immediate suburbs connected with the city by electric cars. In the city and suburbs reside about 100,000 people. We have a church of about 300 members, some of whom live in almost every suburb. Many of these people come from points where the Disciples are strong, but a change of location and environments sometimes cool their ardor, unless they are immediately seen after. Christians are too much like our great iron furnaces, when once "cooled off" it is hard to get them warmed up to the "running" point. Hence we prefer to never allow them "banked." If, then, you will drop me a card of information I will try to "shovel in the fuel" so as to keep them running. O. P. SPIEGEL.

"Egypt" Lives.

Our people have a mind to work. Mt. Carmel is utilizing Evangelist Updyke, Flora has arranged for a campaign with Coombs, Carter is moving things at Lawrenceville, W. H. Boles is storming breastworks in Lower Egypt, about Marion, and in many instances the regular pastors, without foreign help, are pushing up to the 100,000 line.

Clark Braden has recently been secured for chief place in the faculty in Alma College, and has set a rapid pace for himself in the work. Elder C. J. Musgrove is actively at work in the field as financial agent for this educational gem in Egypt. Elder A. C. Eaton is equipped as assistant state evangelist in "Lower Egypt." Elder J. H. Stottler, of Mt. Carmel, has been appointed to the position of chairman of the board of directors of S. I. C. M. C., in place of J. H. Stark, resigned. Our preachers and our people are in genuine earnest in the work all along the lines and I confidently believe that the Home and Foreign Mission day will be observed and the collections taken by more churches than have ever done so before. All should "remember the Maine," this year, when special offering time comes. We shall strive for the million-dollar line for missions, and the 100,000 souls for Christ mark in evangelistic efforts. W. BEDALL, Cor. Sec.

Our baby's face and neck was all raw meat, and something awful to look at. THE GREAT HIRAM JUBILEE ENDOWMENT MOVEMENT.

WHAT WILL THE HARVEST BE?

This is the question that the friends of Hiram and of Christian education are asking everywhere. Can such a movement be made a success? To every one that asks this question we answer, the success of the movement depends on you. If every friend of Christian education among the Disciples of Christ will lend a helping hand there is no question about the success of the movement. Why should we not do so? What grander thing can be done than to place a great institution of learning on a permanent financial basis, thus enabling it to not only go forward in this grand work, but to enter upon an era that shall be characterized by larger achievements and grander work.

Hundreds of names are coming in, but we must not only have hundreds but thousands and tens of thousands. Do not delay. Send in your name at once.

Very much depends upon our preachers. If they will unitedly favor this movement there is no trouble about the congregations. The masses of our brethren receive their inspiration, in part at least, from the preachers. If the preachers favor the movement and help it in all possible ways, their example will be contagious. Our preachers can help the movement:

First, by sending in their own name.

Second, by writing helpful words commendatory of the movement.

Third, by making our agents cordially welcome when they visit the churches.

Brethren, I appeal to you in the name of our common Master, and in the interests of his cause that we love so much, lend to this movement a helping hand. Send in your name at once. Every name received sends a thrill of hope to the hearts of those who are working for the success of this movement.

Very sincerely,

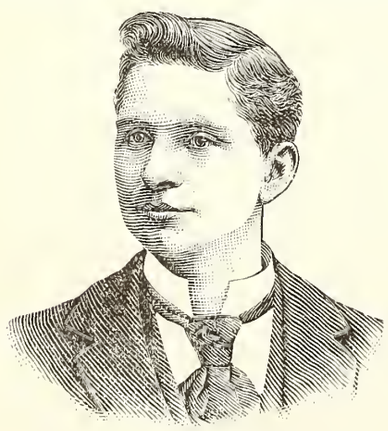
A Uniqe Reception.

On the evening of Jan. 26 E. L. Powell, minister of the First Church, Louisville, Ky., gave his fifth annual banquet to the men of his congregation. In this company were included not only communicants, but many outside friends who attend the service of the First Church more or less regularly, and not a few of the other preachers of the city. The scene in the spacious Sunday-school room was an attractive one indeed. All the tables were deftly arranged with reference to the center of the room, where was placed the one occupied by the speakers of the evening. The women of the church assist the minister with their faultless taste in setting and decorating the tables. Promptly at eight o'clock several hundred guests were in their places, and an elegant menu was skillfully served. The speaking is evidently a prime matter in this annual festivity. This year, of course, everybody was prepared to hear the note of patriotism; and the ministerial side was happily represented in apostolic blows and knocks; and an eminent physician let us all into some of the secret tribulations of his profession; and the end man plainly took a whack at the times and the manners in general, and scored a hit every time, judging by the loud laughter and applause.

The good influence of this graceful hospitality on the part of the minister of the First Church is unmistakable. No preacher in Louisville preaches regularly to a larger number of men in his audience than E. L. Powell. He has evidently held both the old residents so long members of this historic congregation, and also the new generation now coming to baptism. May he be spared for many a day for a still more fruitful ministry. R. T. M.

Missionary.



Results of Foreign Missions.

One hundred years ago the Christian world was asleep. The cry for the world's evangelization woke it up. Now, missions have become the measure of the spiritual life of the church. This is a correct standard, for the evangelization of the world is its imperative duty. One hundred years ago men threw the responsibility of evangelizing the world upon God; now, the responsibility is correctly placed upon the church. The church has learned that it is its positive duty to preach the gospel to every creature. And the church has also learned that it has everything to gain and nothing to lose by an aggressive expansion over heathen lands. Missions are no longer regarded as an experiment. They do not belong to the order of reasonable expedient, nor logical inference, but they are positively and clearly taught in the New Testament Scriptures. Missions are as binding upon the churches as baptism upon the sinner, or the Lord's Supper upon the saint. The whole book of God, in its prophecies, in its dispensational developments, and in its purpose and spirit, teaches that the church of Christ is redeemed, endowed, and enjoys all her rights, possesses all her privileges, for the purpose of evangelizing the world. We have learned that missions are not a mere phase of Christianity; they are Christianity itself. The non-missionary church stands directly against its own self-interest. A church must have the missionary spirit to be a church of Christ. It is now historically true to say that the non-missionary church decays and dies while the missionary church lives and grows. The churches must look out upon the world with the Savior's eyes, and feel for the world with the Savior's heart, and stand on the threshold of the world with the Savior's purpose; and then will they indeed be the churches of Christ. "Go" is the greatest and most imperative word for the Christian in the New Testament. Christianity is the only religion that goes! The chief characteristic of the new dispensation is flashed forth in the word "go." The bugle blast, "go," startles the nations, and its gentle peal shakes the gates of every hermit empire of the earth. The word "go" carries with it the germ of a new creation, the seed of a new kingdom, the conflagration spark that shall set the kingdoms in a blaze. Another important matter: it is much easier for us to go than for those to whom the command was first given. It was easier for E. E. Faris and Dr. H. N. Biddle to reach the banks of the Congo than it was for Paul to reach those of the Tiber. It is easier for the modern church to illuminate the "Dark Continent" than it was for the early Christians to kindle the fires of gospel light on the heights of Athens or the hills of Rome. It is easier to win the Fiji from the degradation of his cannibalism than it was to woo the cultured Athenian from his worship of the beautiful. All this, and much more, the enterprise of modern missions has helped to teach us. Daniel March says, "The only effectual safeguard against deadness and indifference, against worldliness and materialism, against vain speculation and false doctrine, against positive unbelief and renunciation of all faith, is to be found in keeping the divine commission to disciple the nations ever before the church and the world. Give that its due place in all doctrine; in all preaching, and praise and prayer; in all plans and organizations for church work; in all training of the young, and in all collections for the treasury of the Lord, and then there will be little danger of letting down the standard of Christian living and consecration; little danger that many will cease to hold fast the form of sound words, or drift away from the firm anchorage of faith."

During the century now closing no less than one hundred and sixty million copies of the Word of God have been printed in about three hundred and sixty different dialects. At the beginning of this century the Bible could be studied by only one-fifth of the earth's population; now it is translated into languages that make it accessible to nine-tenths of the world's inhabitants. The missionaries have been the great translators. The task of spreading the Scriptures abroad would never have been attempted by the trader, nor could it have been done by the scholar. Only the missionary of ripe scholarship, and with experience in the heathen land, was equal to the undertaking. The foremost missionaries have been the foremost translators. The Burmese version of Judson, the Persian of Henry Martyn, the Sanscrit of Carey, the Bechuana of Moffat, the Chinese of Morrison, are all monuments of the highest talents and the most patient perseverance.

The best book that has ever been written on China and the Chinese was written by a missionary. The commentary on the Koran was written by a missionary. The best manual of original authorities on Buddhism, the best and almost the only translation of the Chinese classics, are the work of missionaries. The best authorities in regard to plants that grow and animals that live, and the minerals that are found, and the phenomena of nature that attract attention in the most remote quarters of the earth, are missionaries. The men who do most to enrich science and promote education and enlarge the area of human knowledge, as the indirect result of their life's labor, are missionaries.

Foreign Missions have changed the map of the world. The indomitable courage of the missionary has enabled him to pierce the very heart of the most exclusive nations of the globe, and has revealed lakes, and rivers, and mountains, and peoples, as well as cities and civilizations before unknown to Christendom. He has enriched every known science—biology, philology, zoology, etc. Missionaries have been called the architects of a new civilization, and the knights of a new chivalry.

The missionary has transformed the commerce of the world, increased its variety and enlarged its volume. The annual net profit of commerce with heathen lands, opened by missions, is estimated at no less than $20,000,000. In a century this amounts to $2,000,000,000. The total expenditure for missions, in this period, does not exceed $300,000,000. The net profit, therefore, amounts to $1,700,000,000. A century ago the commerce of India was almost nothing, now it is estimated to be worth $600,000,000 a year. In about a quarter of a century Japan has advanced so swiftly as to cause leading commercial nations to fear she may become a serious rival for the supremacy in industrial pursuits. Each year a New York publishing house sends 50,000 school-books into the "Sunrise Kingdom." The commerce of the Sandwich Islands is now worth $15,000,000 yearly. These islands paid for exports at a single American port, in one year, more money by $367,000 than it cost to Christianize them.

Missions to the ends of the earth have increased man's moral character and culture, and prosperity, and happiness. From the time messages of peace were carried from Rome to the British Isles, to the last missionary that embarked for a heathen land, there have been uniform results. Every truly happy home, in which is to be found Christian influences, is debtor to world-wide missions. All our schools and universities, every institution of beneficence, are the results of Foreign Missions coming to our ancestors and leading them to a better character. Not the Anglo-Saxon alone, but the Anglo-Saxon spirit touched with the gospel, is what has enlarged human knowledge and increased human happiness. We must not be blind to the power and value of Christian missions; on the contrary, we must show a living interest and a fitting gratitude for all that has been done, and for all the promises of the future.

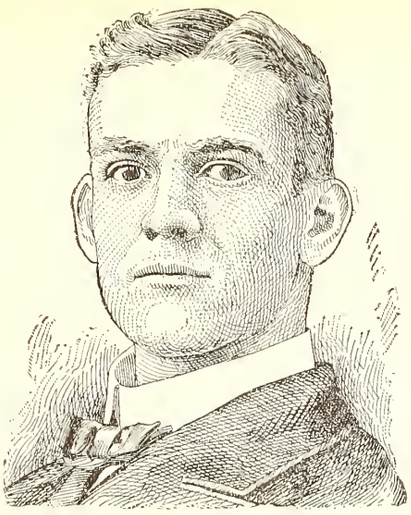
The shafts of gospel light are now piercing the darkest corners of every benighted region. Only initial steps have so far been taken. The whole human race is ready to receive the heralds of the cross. Missionaries and preachers and churches must now move forward in one concerted effort upon the kingdom of darkness. What has been done is a sure promise of Messiah's reign in a still wider domain.



Let us be encouraged. The whole round world is being blessed with the gospel, and the dark cloud of heathenism is melting into day. Africa is being filled with gospel light, every valley and river and plain is being made a highway for the ransomed of the Lord. The swarming millions of China and India and Japan are being raised from ignorance and degradation to start upon a new millennium of power and prosperity. The work is no experiment, but a glowing and a glorious success. No difficulties can arise greater than any which have been already met and overcome. Preparatory work has been well done. Every zone of the earth is inhabited by the missionaries of the cross. They are living among heathen of rude manners and of vile habits and of gross speech, with no word of complaint about giving up the delights of civilization and the sympathy of cultivated society. They keep the fire of faith burning in their hearts, and they utter no word of discouragement. The simple story of the cross is preached every day of the year in more than twenty times as many languages as were heard in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost. Thousands are yielding to the claims of the gospel. The past is filled with success; the future is full of promise.

The campaign for the conquest of the world for Christ is now well begun. There have been skirmishing and reconnoiterings and taking of outposts in many lands, but this is not enough; only an unconditional surrender of every false faith will suffice. This our Lord demands. The camp of the enemy has been well explored and its strength ascertained and the weapons of warfare have been tested and its methods of attack have been found out. Now is the time for a swift and resistless advance along the whole line. Every member of the Christian Church should now heed the call, which comes from the captain of our salvation, "Go forward!" The responsibility of those at home is the same as that of those in the forefront of the battle on the mission field. We serve the same Master together; we have enlisted in the same campaign and upon the same terms and conditions. There is no rest or release until every idol is destroyed. There is no neutral ground for any Church of Christ; no half-way covenant can be made. Every Christian must march under the banner of the cross against the kingdom of darkness if he would hear the call to glory and to victory. And when at the judgment we shall see the scar of the cross on the hand that offers the crown, we shall rejoice to have served in the ranks of the sacramental host and to have borne an honorable part in the toils and sacrifices of the great conquest.

On to Manila!

Chaplain Williams, of the 51st Iowa Regiment, calls for workers for the Philippines. He has been in Manila for some time. He writes that a great and effectual door is open there. There has been no such opening on these islands since the world began. There will never be such another opening. Paul in his vision saw a man of Macedonia and heard him say, "Come over and help us." He concluded straightway to go into Macedonia, believing that God had called him to preach the gospel in that province. It is a man of flesh and blood that now calls. May it not be that this is a call of God to us to enter the Philippines with the gospel? The Executive Committee of the Foreign Society has decided to do this. It is believed that the churches will respond more liberally in the March offering when they know of this enlargement of the work and of the additional obligations of the society. The spirit of enterprise will appeal to the hearts of thousands of Americans and they will respond with larger and more numerous contributions than they would otherwise.

Taking the Offering.

The first Sunday in March has arrived. Thorough preparation has been made. Taking the offering is now the crowning act in the campaign. It is a crisis, requiring all the skill and tact of the most resourceful preacher or leader. No man will succeed here without an interest. The size of the offering is usually a correct measure of the preacher's or leader's interest. Take it with enthusiasm. The fire has been kindled, the forge has been blowing a strong blast, and the iron is now at a white heat. Now is the time to strike! Take the offering with snap! The match has been well made. Now strike it quick! Make the fire fly! Do not sing immediately after the sermon. Go directly from the sermon to the offering. This is no time for little, commonplace and unimportant announcements. The deacons should have the March offering envelopes ready in hand when the sermon closes. At a word an envelope should be given to every one present, saint and sinner, old and young. Have plenty of pencils ready for each pew. Ask all to be in readiness, and wait until the word is given from the pulpit to write the name and the amount. Let all write at once. Just before the writing a suitable word should be spoken as to the importance of the work and what God is expecting of his children. Take the offering with a lofty purpose. Be determined to succeed. Make the church feel that mighty things are being done. Remember, sister churches throughout the whole land are making the same offering at the same time. Feel the thrill of a mighty movement. Assure the church that she is in direct line with the divine purpose in making the offering to send the gospel to the ends of the earth. Make the church realize that she is never any closer to her Lord than when making such an offering. At the close let there be thanksgiving for the unspeakable privileges of the day.

F. M. RAINS.

State Mission Notes.

The latter part of last week it was my privilege to visit two places where I had not been for a long time. One was Forestell, in St. Charles county, and the other Warrenton, in Warren county. The Forestell church is an old one. They had a good audience which listened attentively while I told them of the cause. It was a delight to go there and meet with the dear friends of the past. Of course I stopped at Bro. Pringle's, for that is the preacher's home. At Warrenton I found the church hopeful indeed. They have had many ups and downs, but now they think they see the dawning of a brighter day. This is one of the county-seats we have entered recently and is an important field. Bro. J. E. Donovon is their preacher and is full of zeal in the Master's service and all of them seem to have fallen in love with him. One thing I think that I see is the need on the part of the church to get a larger, broader view of things and if they will follow the leadership of Bro. Donovon it will come. I was sorry to learn that J. W. Coggins, the pastor of the church at Forestell, had broken down and had gone home to North Carolina for a rest. All are hoping that he will soon be back all right again.

Sunday morning I was at Two Mile Branch tand at nigh I was at Jonesburg. I am always sure of the kind of reception I will have at both these places. They are inseparably bound up with my early struggles as a preacher of the Word, and it is a joy to me that after years have gone those who knew me best are the ones who give me the heartiest welcome. As long as the Clares, Palmers and Mudds live at Two Mile, and Uncle Jas. Skinner, Tom Mason and their families and a host of others whom I love are at Jonesburg, they will always see that mission work is held high in the estimation of the church. I was booked to be at Martinsburg on Monday night, but an urgent message from home caused me to disappoint them.

I found C. C. Hill at Montgomery City, serving them three Sundays in the month and the Jonesburg church the other Sunday. Bro. Donovon has taken his place at Two Mile. Bro. Hill is suffering much with rheumatism, but I hope that it is but temporary. His brother, Claude E., is in a meeting at Clark. H. A. Denton is soon to hold a meeting with Bro. C. C., at Montgomery. That is a safe and a strong team.

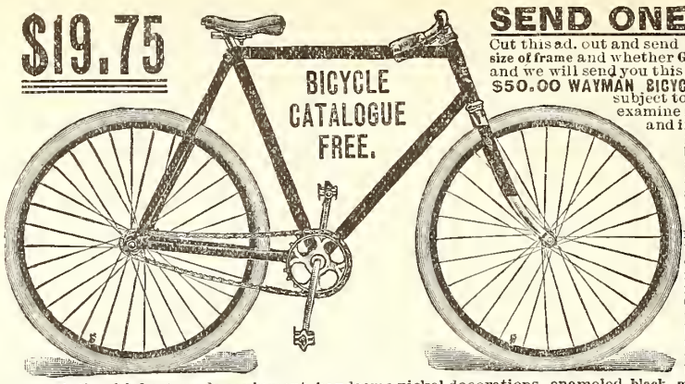
Bro. W. N. Porter has moved from Lamar to Pierce City, taking charge of the work there. He has two other Sundays and they ought to be engaged at once.

Bro. F. M. Hooton writes me that he is getting hold of his work at Bolivar in a good way and that he is ready to do anything that he can for us. Thank you, sir; may the Lord increase your kind. They are going to have a preachers' institute there before long. That is a good idea. Get together.

If any brother who is a good man, and at the same time a good dentist, and is seeking a new location, will write to me I think I can help him. He must be a brother, a good man, and a good dentist.

Granville Snell's work at Memphis is opening up well indeed. He i s a good man and is following a good man, J. T. Boone, so the work done ought to be fine.

Young Bro. A. J. Williams is doing a fine work at Granger. He found the work there in a bad shape indeed, but he has moved it up until in place of hardly being able to raise the money for him one-fourth time they have raised $400 for half time. That is the way that growth ought to be evidenced. I am sure that Bro. Williams will soon bring them to contribute to mission work. Unfortunately they have no house of worship, but they will be compelled to build soon.



Several years ago it looked as though we had a fine chance at Tolona, and the expenditure of a little money then would have insured a good church. The field is exceedingly difficult now, but Bro. E. A. Newby is not deterred by this, but has gone in there to win. May the Lord help him to gain the victory.

But there are many Tolonas over the state, places where we have the opportunity now but which will soon be gone. If we had the means we could seize the advantage and the work would be done. But for lack of means these open doors are not being entered like they ought to be and the result is a distinct loss. Now that the first day of March has about come and will soon be gone we ought to have great attention to the matter of state missions before the call for General Home Missions comes. Will not the county superintendent begin to take hold of the matter and work up state missions? I am ready to give a premium to the county superintendent who will bring an offering from every church in his county to state missions. What say you?

Yours in His name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

God's Messages About Missions.

If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain; if thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not; doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it? And he that keepeth thy soul, doth not he know it? and shall not he render to every man according to his works? Prov. 24:11, 12.

How shall they call on him in whom they have not believed, and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard, and how shall they h ar without a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent? Rom. 10:14, 15.

Go ye, therefore, and disciple all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the age. Matt. 28:19, 20.

Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. Mark 16:15.

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come. Matt. 24:14.

Yea, so have I strived to preach the gospel not where Christ was named lest I should build on another man's foundation, but, as it is written, To whom he was not spoken of, they th t have not heard shall understand. Rom. 15:20, 21.

The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he would thrust forth laborers into his harvest. Luke. 10:2.

Curse ye Meroz, said the angel of the Lord, curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Judges 5:23.

Some day
Those who have spent their lives
In piling up wealth,
For wealth's sake,
Will stop to ponder over their folly,
And wonder why they had not stopped
At the point of sufficiency,
And spent their remaining days
In better pursuits.

Some day
Those who have spent their lives
In piling up wealth,
For the love of it,
Will stop to ponder over their folly,
And wonder why they had not
Devoted larger means
To the relief of the suffering
And to the higher wants of man.

Some day
Those who have spent their lives
In piling up wealth,
From selfish motives,
Will stop to ponder over their folly,
And wonder why they had not
Consecrated it all—and self—
To the cause of righteousness
And the kingdom of God.

Some day
Those who have spent their lives
In piling up wealth,
All to be lost,
Will stop and ponder over their folly,
And wonder how they had been deluded
Into giving this world
In exchange for their souls.

Will Brown, Missionary.

BY ALBERT BUXTON.

"Bro. Brown a missionary!" cried Mrs. James, in tones of dismay. "Why, he will die in a year. Look at his hollow chest. He ought to be resting now instead of preaching."

"A missionary!" ejaculated Mrs. Dale, the young bride, poising her needle on its orbit. It was the monthly sewig circle.

A dozen voices in chorus, from alto to falsetto, echoed the question, "A missionary?"

"Yes," wisely responded the informant, the oracular Mrs. Beach. "I saw it in the Missionary Gazette. He's been appointed for India, but—"

"Well," broke in the bride, "I think it is just an eternal shame. When we were at school together we all thought that Will Brown had no right to go crazy on the ministerial call business as he did. Prof. Boynton said he would make a brilliant lawyer. It's bad enough to bury his genius in the ministry. But this is just insane—to starve himself over there among those sepoys."

"And he loves music so," chimed in Sister Gates. "He can't pack his piano over there. I once heard him say that earth would be a Sahara Desert without music."

"But his wife!" suggested Miss Stone, youthful only in dress, and hence apparently less so in face. "If he wants to kill himself, he has no right to murder her."

On the way home Mrs. Dale and Miss Stone called at the parsonage. The young minister met them at the door, and before he had time to call his wife from the supper preparation, Mrs. Dale began:

"Bro. Brown! Is it really true—"

"That I am about to resign my pastorate here?" smiled the parson. "Yes. I had not yet announced it, for I did not want to provoke talk until I were fully decided. I have now decided."

"To go to India?"

He nodded.

"Why, Will Brown!—I can't always think to say Reverend Sir—I sometimes imagine we are at school again, and not all so old and wise." The young wife assumed a look of sternness, ill-matching her bridal appearance. "But, Bro. Brown," in tones of remonstrance, "you have such prospects in our own country—even buried in the ministry. Have you never had a vision of what you may be and do?"

"Yes; that's it. It was a vision—real and vivid—startling—again and again. I cannot shake it off."

"A startling vision!" It was Miss Stone this time. She was the town authority on sensations, and opportunities were few. This approached her specialty. "Tell us of your remarkable dream."

"A dream! No! I see it the most vividly when I am most awake. I see two hundred well-dressed, well-fed Christians, listening listlessly, comfortably, to a wonderful story of a wondrous love. They have heard it so often, and have realized its wonder so little that its repetition must be in some new eloquence to interest them. In the shadowy background I see multitudes stretching away in throngs beyond the reach of counting. I see half-starved—some wholly starved, body and soul—brothers and sisters of our same family. No look of hope, however faint, illumines their face. They grope. They cannot find the way. They have no leader in their blindness. They can only guess—and they have guessed wrongly—that there is no love except the momentary selfish flashes in their sad lives, that all without is hate, an infinite hate shutting them in, pressing hard upon them and stifling even the little gleams of love in their brief lives." He turned a moment in silence and looked out of the window. But he really saw nothing. He did not turn to see. It was that they might not see.

He resumed: "I have decided to leave those who have heard the story of divine love so often and tell that story where it will be their first gleam of hope to the listeners. I have seen for many weeks that background every time I have been before an audience."

"But it will be such a horrible life!" Mrs. Dale tried to make her voice thrilling, but it was soft and gentle.

"Even Christ pleased not himself."

"But you might die!" Mrs. Dale's voice was no longer in remonstrance. It seemed more like a gentle approval.

He smiled gently. "Not 'might,' but 'must,' sometime, somewhere, in his own time and place. I would rather it would be there."

"In India?"

"Yes. 'Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life.'"

The other one, the specialist, took her turn.

"But there are others at ease who could better go." There was no lack of remonstrance in her tone.

"'What is that to thee. Follow thou me.' Their disobedience makes my obedience all the more urgent."

ASTHMA

BY THE

Kola Plant

The Kola Plant.

Free. A new and Positive Cure for Asthma has been found in the Kola Plant, a rare botanic product of West African origin. So great are the powers of this New Remedy that in the short time since its discovery has come into almost universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America for the cure of every form of Asthma. The cures wrought by it are really marvelous. Among others Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, West Va., was cured of Asthma of thirty years' standing and Mr. Alfred Lewis, the editor of the Farmer's Magazine, of Washington, D. C., testifies that after eight years continuous suffering, especially in Hay-fever season, the Kola Plant completely cured him. He was so bad that he could not lie down night or day, for fear of choking. After fifteen years suffering from the worst form of Asthma, Mrs. A. McDonald, of Victor, Iowa, writes that the Kola Plant cured her in two weeks. Rev. S. H. Eisenberg, Centre Hall, Pa.; Rev. John L. Moore, Alice, S. C.; Mr. Frank C. Newall, of the Market National Bank, Boston, and many others give similar testimony of their cure of Asthma, after five to twenty years suffering, by this wonderful new remedy. If you suffer from Asthma in any form, in order to prove the power of this new botanic discovery, we will send you one Large Case by Mail entirely free. All that we request in return is that when cured yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. It costs you absolutely nothing. Send your address to THE KOLA IMPORTING CO., 1168 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY.

"I see," responded the unconquered Miss Stone, "that you are determined to throw yourself away. But have you the right thus to dispose of your wife's comfort?"

"No, indeed! Your question is entirely to the point."

He opened the door into the diningroom and called, "Mary!"

The dominie's wife, with her apron on, bustled in.

"Excuse me," she said, after greeting the guests. "I was getting supper and did not notice that we had visitors. Lay aside your wraps and stay to tea."

"No," replied Miss Stone. "We just ran in for a moment to labor with Bro. Brown on his delusion. We want to save you at least from this insanity if he persists."

"But what if I do not want to be saved?" asked the young housewife smiling. "And besides, I do not think it insane. 'God hath chosen the foolish things to confound the wise.'"

"But you are giving up all privileges and friends."

"My best Friend will be all the closer. And the next best friend," throwing a proud glance toward her husband, "will be all the dearer."

"But you are leaving so much"—

"'Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple.'"

"Well, I believe in missions and gave $3 at the last March offering."

"And he gave himself." There was no bitterness of reproof in the tones. It seemed a thought that rose to the lips unbidden.

It was time for Miss Stone to interpose and clinch the argument.

"You have always been such a home girl. Your father and mother live near by. As long as they are living don't you think—"

"That 'he that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me?' Yes, indeed!" Again the interruption was not of conscious remonstrance. It was rather a meditation, unconsciously uttered.

"If you want a more spiritual life," it was the gentler voice of Mrs. Dale, "could you not find it right here? Every one says that our prayer-meetings are growing more glorious each week."

"It may be my duty to sacrifice selfish spiritual enjoyment—and it is my highest joy—that others, dying, dying, yes dying in spirit," and her eyes filled with tears, "may find at least bare spiritual life. I love to be on the mountain top with my Lord. But it may be his will that I live in the valley, that I may there tell to some who have never been out of its fogs what a glorious vision is above."

"I cannot for my life see," impatiently ejaculated the specialist, "how you can have the heart to bid good-bye to your friends here forever. It is heartless heathenism."

In reply the "little preacher," as her husband called her, wheeled on the piano stool on which she was seated, struck the chord, and began to sing softly—

"'Yes, my native land I love thee,
All thy scenes I love them well,
Friends, connections, happy country,
Can I bid you all farewell?
Can I leave you
Far in heathen lands to dwell?'"

At the sound of her voice, her husband's clear, flutelike tenor had blended. It was a hymn they had often sung. As they sung further there was a noticeable tremolo—not of the piano. But the last verse had no waver, no flutter. It seemed the song of those who had conquered—

"'In the deserts let me labor,
On the mountains let me tell
How he died—the blessed Savior—
To redeem a world from hell!
Let me hasten
Far in heathen lands to dwell.'"

Before they left the March offering for Foreign Missions intervened. The young missionary received occasional encouragement during the week preceding.

"Bro. Brown," said one of the deacons, "I gave $1 last year; I am going to make it $3 this year. We are going to show the brotherhood that we appreciate sending a real missionary ourselves. I would give more, but this has been a bad year in my business."

A faint smile was the minister's response at first. Then he said:

"It is not for me to dictate. It lies between you and him that bought you. I am glad you have decided to increase your offering."

He did not commiserate him, however, on his "poor business." He noticed that he still smoked three cigars a day, and had not been forced by "poor business" to substitute a pipe. He mentally calculated that this man, in his increased offering, was giving as much for Foreign Missions for the whole year as he spent for cigars every two or three weeks, even if he always took the cheaper brand.

One of the elders met him.

"Bro. Brown," he began, "I know how near the March offering is to your heart. I was absent, at home with a bad cold, last year when it was taken and so could not give anything. I have decided to sacrifice some this year. You know the strike on the railroad has crippled us. We merchants had to "carry" several of the men at our loss. But that won't hinder me. I have decided to give $5 this year. I presume no one here has ever given more than that at a missionary collection."

He looked with pride for the minister's approval.

The answer was a smile. It was not rapturous. The embryo missionary was thinking that one cent and a half a day was the most any one there ever gave to meet the last command of the Savior, "Go ye into all the world." And he thought of the new piano in the elder's home.

The Sunday-school superintendent has a surprise in store for him.

"Wife and I have talked it over, and we have decided to give all we can hope to save next month, that is after we have paid a lumber bill of $60. We want to get our addition paid for as soon as possible. It costs a mint of money to enlarge a house. I reckon we can allow about $10 for this collection. I would give more, but it would not be honest to run behind or get in debt in order to make a present."

The dominie smiled sadly and gladly. Gladly, for that was a large amount from that man. Sadly, as the thought that it was not a "present," but a trifling payment on a debt—a debt of honor to One whose love freely gave self, in pain and death. And then the language sounded strange: "Did not believe in getting in debt?" That is, it was right for him to get in debt for a larger, finer house for himself, but it would be dishonest to raise ready money on his fixed property for his Lord.

The March offering was past.

"One hundred and sixty dollars," said the treasurer with pride, "and it would have been more but for the debt on the church. When we get that paid we shall be the richest church in our fellowship in the South. No such church among us this side of the river, nor pipe organ, either. Charity begins at home."

They were standing where the square towers of the "finest church" loomed up in profile against the afternoon sky. Far beyond, in his prophetic gaze, the young man saw a rude roof on posts. In this he was to preach for years on the other side of the wide world. The echo of the words sank as a sob in his heart, "Finest church," "we must get it paid for soon," "charity begins at home."

An open room. A mere roof supported on posts. The other side of the world. Wayfarers were passing and casually looking within—casually, and then curiously. For they were all dark and the chief occupants were fair.

One was a slender man, apparently of middle age. But it was only apparently. For though his chestnut hair was flecked with gray he was still young. It was Will Brown, and but five years have passed since our last scene.

Beside him, with face grown more sober and thinner, but illumined with a spiritual beauty, sat his wife.

They talked with all who stopped and would listen—talked earnestly. They gave little booklets to all who would receive them.

"Mary," he said, "I am so tired. I feel feverish. We will leave for home early to-night."

"Yes," responded the wife, as she felt his heated brow, "you must not come down so early to-morrow. If you do not stop working so hard you will be down with fever. The heat and work and worry are wearing on you."

Just then a gruff voice attracted their attention. A stern countenance was looking at them eagerly. There was agitation in the tones.

"Teacher, little Thu-gal is asking for you."

"How is he to-day?"

"Wose. Come with me."

"But you forbade my visits."

"It is a whim of his. He is suffering and I must humor him."

They quickly strode beneath the hot evening sun to one of the poorer huts of the village. A cry of delight greeted their entrance—faint, plaintive, but joyous.

"Oh, teacher! I've been so lonesome since pa took me out of school."

A little boy of nine, worn with pain, wasted with fever, lay on a coarse pallet on the damp, earthen floor.

The man of God sat on the ground beside the pallet, stroked the heated brow and said:

"We, too, have missed our little questioner."

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful discovery and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail, address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

"Tell me some more about Jesus." The childish voice was eager, the pleading look hungry.

Involuntarily the servant of Jesus glanced at the bowed father. He quickly raised his head.

"Yes, yes," he said petulantly. "Tell him those silly tales. Anything to satisfy him."

And the teacher took the frail form in his arms and walked back and forth in the low hut and told him a wonderful story. That God once took the form of a man, with a voice wondrous sweet and a face of shining love, and walked among men. And where he walked there was joy. But his portion was pain. And not only did he bring joy to grown people, but he took little children in his arms and made them happy. And he asked no reward for all this. He chose death rather. He only asked that those he loved should in return love one another and love and trust him, following closely in his footsteps.

"Oh teacher!" The breath was tremulous and the voice was broken with pain, but there was joy in the tones. "I do love him. Tell me more."

And again in other words the teacher told the wondrous tale. The pain seemed to ebb, and the head sank as if in slumber. The "Jesus man" laid the little burden back on the couch to go, but the voice slept not. "Oh, don't leave me! Tell me the story again even if I am asleep. I can sleep better. And oh! don't leave me. It is so lonesome. Mother is dead and father is cross and will not let me speak of Jesus."

A sob in the corner was the only other sound.

The preacher sang a tender song of the Lamb, and sat on the ground through nearly the whole night.

'Twas near morning. The child stirred again as he had often done through the night. He whispered, "Father, father!"

The father took the frail form in his arms and folded it to his breast.

The childish voice whispered faintly:

"Father, may I say Jesus?"

"Yes, yes," said, or rather sobbed the father.

"Jesus"—the word was breathed so softly that the father bent low to catch it—"took little children in his"—only a soft inarticulate breath closed the sentence. But the smile on the face, even in the gray light of morn, told the rest. And as the breath slowly ceased, the smile deepened. His sleep was to be wakened by a "new song"—the song of the Lamb.

Again we are in the place of our first scene. Again the sacred sewing circle sits and sews and speaks.

"Well, I expected it."

"I just knew it all the time."

"I told him he would die."

The voice of Mrs. Dale, more matronly, but gentler still, stemmed the tide, "Be thou faithful unto death."

"But death is all he got out of his foolishness."

And again the gentle voice, "And I will give thee a crown of life."

"And he caught it nursing a little beggar."

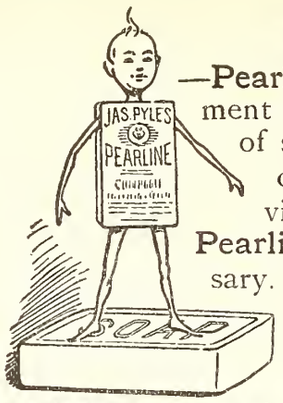
"Yes. They all throw away their health and time and lives on such worthless material."

Again the gentle voice of Mrs. Dale, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least, ye have done it unto me. The child died happy and the father professed Christ the next week."

"The Evangelical Standard says that Mrs. Brown is due here the middle of next month. She will at least have a good home now with her parents."

Again the church. Again a collection, and it is not March.

"Eight hundred dollars," said the minister, after a hymn, during which the deacons had counted the offering. "You see, Mrs. Brown," turning to the widow, "that we believe the laborer is worthy of his reward. We present it to you with our heartfelt appreciation for your sacrifice, and our love for your worth, and our tender memories of your loved one. It is a mere pittance. But, I trust, it will make your life among us less thorny."



She rose. Tears glistened, but she restrained them from falling.

"I will take it with grateful appreciation, and may God bless you." She spoke slowly, with increasing emotion. "But I want to take it back there with me. The scene of his labors—of our labors—of his grave." At last the tears came. After a moment she found voice again: "I want to use this money to start a building, healthy for body and soul, where the little children there can learn of Jesus."

She is over there again, alone now. No! not alone. One is with her, "a friend that sticketh closer than a brother." Nearly a hundred little ones are her sweet companions. She tells them in their own strange language the ever-fresh "Jesus story." A new house is there, wholesome to body and soul. A grave is there; she visits it daily. Its headstone has a name, a triple date—his birth, their marriage, his death—and an inscription. It is from an old book:

"HAVING LOVED HIS OWN, HE LOVED THEM UNTO THE END."

Largest Natural Bridge in the World.

This beautiful wonder of nature is situated twenty miles southwest of Douglass, Wyoming, where the La Prele Creek breaks through the foothills of the Laramie Mountains. The stream here flows, or rather tumbles and pitches, through a narrow, ragged canon about 1,000 feet in depth. Near the lower end of the gorge a ledge or wall of solid rock, about 150 feet in height, stretches right across the canon. In time long past the water has plunged over the top of this rock wall, which was then a natural dam; but finally the water found a way underneath and the result is this bridge. In span of its arch it exceeds anything of its kind in the known world. From buttress to buttress the bridge is 180 feet; highest point of arch about seventy-five feet above the water, and breadth of under side, up and down stream, eighty feet. As will be seen in the accompanying illustrations, the arch is almost as perfect as though built by man's hands rather than formed by the action of water. Not alone for this remarkable bridge does it pay the tourists to visit this spot; the wild, grand beauty of the canon is well worth seeing, and added to this is a "Crystal Cave" in which may be seen countless numbers of beautiful quartz crsytals of various sizes and shapes.—*S. With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

That Night.

Uncle Tom maintained a deep silence while George was telling about the letter he had written for the robber. Sometimes he glanced at Mr. Pump, but that gentleman stood like a statue, staring at George with open mouth. "I think he is a nice robber," said George. "At least there are good streaks in him. I'm sorry I scared you by slipping off, but if I hadn't come, he would have stolen a lot of things, after all."

"That's right," said Mr. Pump. "But while we're talking here, what's to hender that robber from making a raid on our camp? I'd better go back and guard it the rest of the night, while you two watch over this house." Uncle Tom approved of this plan, so Mr. Pump ran back to the hut. Uncle Tom nailed up the pantry window, and having obtained a solemn promise from George that he would not slip away, they lay down on the company bed to pass the rest of the night.

Hardly had Uncle Tom fallen asleep when George, who had not been able to sleep, said, "Did you hear that?"

"Hear that?" repeated the other sleepily. "Hear what? I wasn't hearing anything."

"It was a gun," said George, shuddering.

"Gun? Gun?" repeated his uncle, only half awake. "What gun? Did you say 'gun'?" he added, becoming more alive to the situation.

"A gun went off," said the boy. It sounded like it came from our hut in the woods."

"Mr. Pump has killed the robber," said the sleepy uncle, settling down once more.

"Or the robber has killed Mr. Pump," the boy suggested.

"I hadn't thought of that!" exclaimed the other springing from the bed. "I must go down there at once. You can stay here till I come back."

"I'd rather go," said George. "I might as well say that I'd be afraid here all alone. The robber might come back, and while he is my friend, he is mighty changeable." Uncle Tom made no more objection and they set off toward the woods. When they came in sight of the hut, they saw Mr. Pump just entering the building with his gun on his shoulder. "Did you kill him?" called Uncle Tom.

"Yes, I've done for him," replied Mr. Pump. "But what brung you two here?"

"Where is he lying?" demanded the other quickly. George had turned very white.

"Down in the timber," replied Mr. Pump, coolly. "I stood him as long as I could, and then I jest up and shot his head off. He jest naturally screeched and screeched, till there was no living in the same worl' with him."

"Oh," said Uncle Tom. "Then it was a—a—"

"Yes, sir, a screech-owl. But I've done for him."

"I see," said Uncle Tom, who wore a relieved expression. "I didn't understand at first. But since George and I have come down, suppose you go up to the house and stay there till daylight." Accordingly, Mr. Pump departed. "It seems hardly worth while to go to bed," observed the uncle as he and George entered the hut. "But we will do so simply as a matter of form." However, they were soon soundly asleep. In about an hour Uncle Tom leaped up so quickly that he woke George. As soon as George was awake he became conscious of a noise from the direction of the farm house. "Do you know what that is?" demanded Uncle Tom, as he pulled on his boots.

"It is a sound," said George, also getting up.

"It is a sound," said his Uncle. "And it is made by our dinner-horn!"

"Sure enough," said George. "I see that it toots."

"Are you ready to go back?" inquired the other in a resigned tone. George stumbled behind him to the door, but the cold night air soon restored the use of his faculties. "It must be Mr. Pump calling us," he suggested. "My! Isn't Mr. Pump long-winded, though!"

"If the robber were there," Uncle Tom reasoned, as they sped through the gloom, "he would hardly let Mr. Pump make all that noise, unless Mr. Pump has overpowered him." As they drew near the house, the dinner-horn continued to sound forth with impassioned blasts.

"It makes me hungry to hear it," said George. The doors were all locked, and their knocking was drowned by the din within. Uncle Tom shouted, but it was no use. He ran for his ax and broke away the boards with which he had fastened up the pantry window. Then both climbed into the house. They found Mr. Pump sitting on the front hall floor, blowing with all his might. "I thought that would fetch you," he remarked with evident pride, as he laid aside the horn. "I don't know how I come to think of it, but I did."

"What's the matter?" demanded Uncle Tom.

"Well, you see, Mr. Weston, I was sitting on that there cheer—no that one over yonder. See it?"

Uncle Tom examined the chair carefully. "I don't see anything the matter with it," he answered.

"No, they wasn't. But I got off that cheer, and I went to git a drink at the well. You see I 'lowed to sit the night through on that there cheer. But I went to git a drink. After I had drawed the water, I drunk and I says to myself, 'I'll jest let this bucket down in the well, agin,' which I done, Mr. Weston. I didn't want no cats adrinking out of it. Then I started for the house. I come in the house. So I sit on that there cheer agin." Uncle Tom began to look at the chair suspiciously, trying to discover some trap about it. "Then I says to myself, 'Did I put that bucket back in the well?' I went to see. It was dark outdoors. As I come back, I slipped, and fell, and my arm struck agin the edge of the rock step. And I've bruck it, Mr. Weston; they is a bone that jest moves around independent like, as if it was avisiting, and not at home!"

Uncle Tom hastily examined the arm, and finding that it was really broken, he put Mr. Pump to bed and hurried to the lot to catch his saddle-horse, to go for the doctor. George assisted his uncle, since the saddle-horse belonged to that variety of his race which is popularly known as "hard to catch." After they had run from corner to corner with their arms outspread, as if they were practicing a new way of flying, and had forgotten how to get up into the air, the horse was caught, and George was left with Mr. Pump.

George Weston returned home the next day, shortly after dinner. He did not consider his camping-out a success. There had been no hunting. His uncle was obliged to stay with Mr. Pump till his family returned, and so George had to be content with shooting at an old gatepost, that couldn't get away. But, after all he had a thrilling adventure with a robber, to tell the boys; and perhaps he crowed over that robber more than he should.

Four o'clock of this Saturday evening had been appointed as the time for the first Advance Society to meet. George had persuaded three boys to join, and Jennie had secured Tattie Marsh and her cousin, who was very fond of reading. They had not decided what they would do at their meeting, except that they would meet. Before the appointed time, seven boys and girls sat in Mrs. Weston's parlor.

Next week, letters from members—but not the pet-stories. In two weeks, the first meeting of the Advance Society will be described, which took place at the home of the Westons. I hope you have liked the Robber; anyway, he will turn up again in the course of this story, in a most unexpected manner.

Here is our first HONOR LIST. The following have every day read a verse of the Bible, every week 30 lines of poetry and five pages of history, and each week have memorized a quotation and recorded work done in notebooks, during a period of 12 weeks: F. F. Evans, Ethel Mae Taylor, Julia Cox, Lina Pike, Clara Moses, Lily Gooch, Florence Belle Beattie, Florence Smith, Myrtle Sims, Mrs. Dever, Gerald Dever, Burleigh Cash, Della E. Durham, D. M. Shafer, Grady Maxfield. All of these have sent me a full report of their work—what they have read, and in some cases the very quotations they memorized. Two of these persons missed a day or two, and then made up. They sent excuses which I admitted. There are just a few cases that make it allowable to miss a day, then "make up," and I must be the judge of these. I hope all these people will be again reported in 12 weeks. Perhaps next week there will be more to announce, since a name reaches me, with report, nearly every day. Here is another name now: Luella Evans. Some write that about the only poetry they have to read is that which is published in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. This should encourage our poets, and make them write ever better, ever more cheerily and lovingly. And it ought to reconcile editors to the advent of spring.

THE BLIND MAN.

The necessity of keeping in mind an entire section of the Scriptures while fixing special attention upon a particular paragraph is well illustrated in the present lesson. The entire chapter must be studied in order to appreciate the significance of the blind man's experience. Indeed, it is usually the case that the study of a mere fragment of the Bible, disconnected and solitary, as the International Lessons too frequently are, fails entirely to achieve the result intended, and the knowledge which comes from such a study is quite too likely to be haphazard and miscellaneous, rather than consecutive and definite. No teacher can do justice to a series of studies in the life of Christ who does not join them one to another in some rounded scheme of the entire ministry of our Lord, and also give them with their entire setting of preparation and results. It is the clearest violation of the purpose of such a narrative as this that one portion should be torn apart from the rest and studied as a unit. The real purpose of this narrative is to exhibit the growth of faith in the man to whom sight was given, and this alone affords the evangelist reason for selecting this one sign from many which must have been equally important as a mere act of healing. No study of a particular episode can be unitary and consistent that does not include some reflection upon the reasons which gave the narrative its value in the mind of the writer, and back of that made it important as a part of the earliest Christian teaching.

Perhaps no malady is more common or distressing in the East than blindness. Travelers in the Orient see the afflicted on every side, and they usually supply the large contingent of beggars who infest city and highway. While Jesus was in Jerusalem during the celebration of the Feast of Tabernacles he and his disciples passed one of these unfortunate people, who, as was known, had been blind from birth. The speculations of the Jews at this period were often characterized by Eastern elements of thought, the result of contact with other races during the exile. One of these speculations which has also prevailed in later days among people of a certain type of mind, was that regarding the supposed successive existences of the soul through different incarnations. As is well known, this speculation is affected by certain religious faddists in our own day who only need to be assured that a particular theory comes from India, or Persia, or Arabia, to be instantly seized with a desire to appropriate it. Much of the leaning toward theosophy, Buddhism, Islamism and kindred cults to-day receives its explanation from the disinclination of certain types of mind to accept the simple and demonstrable truths of Christianity, and to prefer some new idea which comes with however slight credentials from the Far East, and bears just enough of the air of mystery to influence minds of very moderate capacity. Human nature is much the same in all ages, and in Judea there were those who speculated regarding the possible truth of the doctrine of transmigration of souls, even if they did not accept it outright. That suffering was the penalty of sin was the historic belief of the nation, and when one suffered from birth the doctrine made only two explanations possible: either the parents were sinners or the person himself had sinned in some previous existence. It was a question suggested by these speculations which the disciples asked of Jesus as they passed the man born blind.

*Sunday-school Lesson for March 12th, 1899—Christ Healing the Blind Man (John 9:1-11). Golden Text—One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see (John 9:25). Lesson Outline—1. The blind man (1-4); 2. Sight given (5-7); 3. Questisn and answer (8-11).

His reply was characteristic of his direct and practical method of teaching. It was useless to seek to trace the causes for the misfortune suffered by this man, which might run in any one of a dozen directions. The doctrine that sin is the cause of suffering is certainly true, and it is sometimes true that parents are directly responsible for the afflictions which befall their children. As to the doctrine of Pythagoras regarding transmigration and the possibility of prenatal sin, he did not even choos to dignify it with refutation. A much more practical method was open to him and this he at once chose. Jesus' reference to the works of God as manifest in the blind man does not refer to his condition of blindness as one of the works of God, though this meaning has been forced upon the passage. Nothing could be farther from the truth than that the suffering of any individual is a visitation of God. This is a doctrine that is unscriptural and immoral. Jesus means, of course, that the blind man's condition presents an opportunity for the works of God, which he is about to manifest in the miracle of healing. It is the office of sin to work suffering and death. It is the work of God to heal and restore to life. Jesus refused entirely to discuss the questions of casuistry presented by the case, and directed attention to the patent fact that here was an opportunity for doing good. He used this method again and again. Sometimes he answered a question only to show its importance and point out the deeper truth suggestad by it; as when he told the woman at the well that regarding the mere question of the right place to worship, the Jews held the truth, but that a much more important consideration than place was the attitude of the worshiping soul toward God. In the present lesson he does not answer the question save to show that it does not apply in this instance, and immediately directs the disciples to the appeal which the blind man's condition makes upon their sympathy. Many a man stops to speculate on the origin of evil, who thereby only wastes the time which might be employed to some purpose in alleviating that evil. This was ever the method of Jesus. He brushed aside the inconsequential things and went at once to the heart of every problem. If we wait till every perplexing question is answered we shall never strike a blow toward the uplifting of humanity. It is enough to know that there is need and that we have ability. Other things may well wait.

The urgency with which Jesus felt himself always impelled toward the performance of good is beautifully illustrated in the words which Sir Walter Scott took from the gospel to engrave on his dial: "I must work while it is day; the night cometh." Life is too solemn and wonderful a possession to be wasted even in its smallest fragment. A wise economy of time does not imply that hurry and excitement which characterizes some natures, and which may rather be the mark of dissipated energies; but rather such a disposition of duties as that the hours move forward, each occupied in some manner that is worthy of one whose life is so precious and who does not pass this way again. There is every obligation upon us that there was upon Jesus to do the work of our Father while the daytime of opportunity is ours.

This miracle and the attendant words of our Lord fall into that discourse or group of discourses in which he describes himself as the light of the world, and his conduct here exemplified the truth. The opening of the eyes of this man was as much a miracle as any which Jesus performed, and yet he chose as so often to use as far as possible the means commonly employed in similar cases. Diseases of the eye were frequently treated in that age by the application of moistened clay, and saliva was also considered a medicinal agent, and as such used by Jesus on this and other occasions (Mark 8: 22-26; 7:32 35). Jesus always honored the means of cure as far as they were known and his time permitted. It is a total misunderstanding of his teaching that disregardes the proper use of remedial agents and depends wholly on prayer or any other agency for the restoration of the sick. Even in the first century, the age of miracles, the great brother of our Lord recommended to believers the use of oil, a well-known and almost universally esteemed remedy of the age, and bade them accompany its application with prayer for the recovery of the sick (James 5:14, 15).

But Jesus did what no remedy could accomplish—he gave sight to a man who had never seen. Calling forth the expression of whatever confidence the man had in him, he bade him go and wash in the Pool of Siloam, and obedience brought its reward. His appearance was so changed that the people who saw him failed to recognize him at first, but he asserted the marvel of his cure, though he could not point out the one who had healed him. Then began that long inquisition by the Jews arising from the fact that the miracle was performed on the Sabbath, and resulting in the development of the blind man's faith in so striking a manner that the chapter is a most interesting example of the growth of courage and confidence and a willing suffering of affliction for the sake of the truth. From his assertion that Jesus was a prophet (v. 17), he rose swiftly through a bold defense of his friend which cost him his synagogue rights, to an open declaration of faith in the Master.

Rheumatism Cured by a Simple Remedy that you may Try without spending a cent. Cured many cases of 30 and 40 years' standing.

If any reader suffering from rheumatism will write to me I will send them free of cost, a trial package of a simple and harmless remedy which cured me and thousands of others, among them cases of over 40 years' standing. This is a grand remedy, and I want every afflicted reader to learn by actual test, what marvelous power it has, and therefore will gladly send a sample free, even if more than 15,000 invalids should apply. Distressing cases of rheumatism, among them bed-ridden and crippled persons, were completely cured, of which I mention a few: A lady in Denham, Ind., writes that this remedy cured her, and she then cured 15 neighbors. In Lyon, Mo., it cured an old gentleman at the age of 82, who had been a sufferer for 40 years. In Seguin, Texas, it cured a case of 41 years' standing. Hon. Jacob Sexauer of Fountain City, Wis., was cured after suffering for 33 years and after having employed seven physicians. Miss Emma Callender at 30 Oak St., Vincinnes, Ind., was cured after she was given up to die. Mr. Jas. C. Atchinson, Justice of the Peace of Cape Island, N. S, states that this remedy cured his son who was to be taken to the hospital for an operation. Thousands of similar instances could be mentioned showing that here is a remedy that can be relied upon. Write at once for a trial package, for it is an honest remedy which you can test before you part with your money. Address, John A. Smith, 982 Summerfield Church Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.

Christian Endeavor.

By Burris A. Jenkins.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 12.

FELLOWSHIP IN CHRISTIAN SERVICE.

(Neh. 4:6, 16-23.)

It is a beautiful picture, this, in Nehemiah, of the building of the temple, one hand of every builder holding his weapon against the enemy. So should every Christian, while toiling to build up all Christian enterprises, take arms against all evil.

This picture reminds us very much (does it not?) of the way our American fathers worked, one hand upon the plow, and one upon the rifle, and standing close together always, retiring into the blockhouse at night, where all made common defense against common foes.

Behold how good and how beautiful a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! What a happy thing it would be if all Christians of every sort could forget their differences, unite their forces, and go forward armed thrice against common foes. What a pitiable thing it is to see those who should be united in sympathy and love and fellowship of service, divided into factions by personal or other enmities.

In numbers there is strength. No man can stand alone. He is unwise, indeed, who seeks to lead a religious life out of touch with others who are seeking to lead the same. Possibly a man may be a Christian outside of all churches; but possibly, also, may a camel pass through a needle's eye. The first thing for one to do who would be strong in the Lord is to touch shoulders with others who are strong.

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

One beautiful thing about the negro people is their loyalty to one another, and their fondness for each other's society. In a certain Southern town a baptism was taking place in a pond, and an aged colored preacher offered a touching prayer, closing it with these pathetic words: "Take us all home at last, O Lord, to that land where it's all howdy and no good-bye!"

There is a stimulus in the contact of one person with another. Mind acts upon mind, as chemicals upon chemicals. Thought and action are both begotten of contact with others. "We go the ways of life too much alone, we keep ourselves too far from all our kind."

There is by actual statistics, more insanity among farmers' wives than among any other class of people. Is it because they are kept so much alone?

BETHANY C. E. READING COURSES.

England and America and the World.

By W. J. Lhamon, Director.

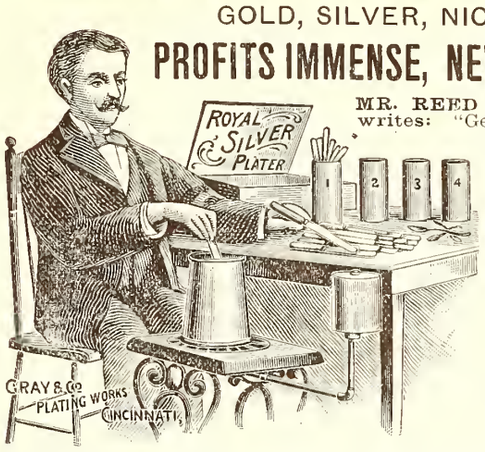
(The first sentence of my last article stands as follows: "A missionary tells us that Mohammedans are asking, 'Who is this Jesus that makes the Mohammedans so brave?'" This question should read as follows: "Who is this Jesus that makes the Armenians so brave?" A very significant question for Mohammedans to ask.)

On page 55 of our handbook there is the following sentence: "To cause England and America to see the Christ as he presents himself in the Gospels is ultimately to bring to the whole world a purer teaching, since God is using these two nations as his foremost evangelizing agencies." We think it well to enlarge upon this statement. The majestic missionary enterprises of the century just closing had their inception and have had their greatest expansion in England and the United States. It has been a century of wonderful progress in both these countries, and it may be said that the growth of missionary effort has kept pace fairly with the general growth. Wherever England has extended her empire, missions have been protected if not fostered by her government, and now the United States bids fair to become imperial, in her influences at least, and to carry her constitutional principle of the protection of all religions and non-interference with any of them around the world. To an American and a Protestant, with an eye upon the closing and the coming century, and the magnificent possibilities for Christian missions just at hand, nothing could be more thrilling than the history of the year 1898.

The growth of the English speaking peoples is a great inspiration when we reflect that our noble English tongue is freighted with Christly ideals and with a distinctively Christian literature, and that it is leavened through and through with the New Testament conception of human life, with its duties and destiny. At the beginning of this century the English-speaking peoples stood fifth numerically ascompared with the German, Russian, French and Spanish peoples, the Spaniards standing first. Now the Spaniards stand last and we first, while our nearest rival is 55,000,000 behind us in the race. We believe that this magnificent growth from 21,000,000 to 125,000,000 in a single century is due to the Christian elements in our civilization, working in a thousand ways to build us up. There are now those who express the bold belief that our English will become the "final language of the earth." This does not seem to be a rashly expressed hope, but what a wonderful prospect it brings before the thoughtful Christian! We are English-speaking, Christ-loving people, we Christian Endeavorers and Bethany readers. Are we praying and giving that our Christ may be known and loved wherever our sweet English is known and spoken?

"Already," says Rev. D. L. Leonard, "for more than half a century the striking spectacle has been looked down upon of missionaries by the score and hundred toiling with heroic faith and fervor for the restoration of of the gospel in Bible lands, and sent forth to their mission from a country on the opposite side of the globe, a country of whose existence Bible saints had never dreamed. How altogether wondrous are the ways of God with his people and his kingdom!"



What Dr. George Smith says of Scotland is true of all our Western lands and doubly true of America. "From Scotland by the Mediterranean and the Red Sea to the Himalayas and and the Pacific Ocean, is one missionary highway. Japan and China are bursting with the buds of promise like the forests of an arctic springtime. The great Islands of Borneo and New Guinea are being dragged into the mighty march." This was written fifteen years ago. Now we can say, from the Golden Gateto Honolulu and Yokohama and Canton and Manila is one missionary highway, and that islands and peoples then unthought of are being dragged into the mighty march.

In missionary matters we should all be expansionists of the most pronounced type. Hundreds of American boys have recently put themselves in sacrifice upon the altar of our country: but the altar of Christ is greater and dearer, and by our confession and baptism we are already devoted to it. Whether we live and give at home or abroad makes, perhaps, little difference, but let us live and give with the thrill of Christly love and high human hopes. Let us, moreover, thank God for the opportunity afforded both by our foreign and our home societies of offering our help where our hearts are enlisted, but where our hands cannot reach.

These delightful little books are intended for supplementary school reading for third and fourth year pupils and for the home They contain bright, attractive stories and poems that will readily correlate with the lessons in nature work, history and literature taught in elementary schools under the general head of "language lessons." Choice literary selections culled from the best standard authors, together with bright and crisp original articles, make up the charming collection to be found in these two books. Such books as these are well designed to relieve the burden of both teacher and pupil in the schoolroom. They create an appetite for good literature.

"ORGANIC EVOLUTION CONSIDERED." By Prof. Alfred Fairhurst, of Kentucky University. Christian Pub. Co., St. Louis, Mo., publishers. Price, $1.50.

This work reveals a profound and varied reading and research. It contains an amount of interesting information which only an industrious and painstaking student could have collected. The style is lucid, and, considering the complex matter with which the author deals, remarkably simple. Nevertheless, the book is not to be read as a novel, but studied as an algebra. The logical power displayed in the work shows not only native strength of mind, but severe mental discipline and training as well.

The fairness of the author is manifest throughout the whole discussion. He is as fair and honest a controversialist as Darwin himself.

Perhaps a critical opponent might suspect that he does not fairly and ingenuously face the question at issue in Chapter XXI—Genesis and Geology; but this criticism, if made, would probably arise from the brevity of treatment of the much-debated question whether the account of Creation given in Genesis conflicts with the geological record.

There seems to be more display of feeling in his discussion of Agnosticism than in any other part of the argument. He is particularly severe on Herbert Spencer, and, perhaps, not without reason, yet there is certainly an element of truth in Spencer's conclusion that the power that confronts us in nature is an "Inscrutable Power." I have long thought Spencer illogical when he declares God utterly unknowable. Certainly God is, through the wisdom of the world, unknown. But if God is unknowable, then Spencer cannot know that he is not a personal spirit.

But if he is a personal spirit, then he can reveal himself dogmatically to personal spirits in so far as they have capacity to receive such revelation—and this possibility I understand Herbert Spencer to allow.

Prof. Fairhurst's chapters on Force and Instinct interested me very much. Darwin in considering the hive of the honeybee evidently felt that the difficulty that confronted him in that marvel of mechanical engineering threatened his whole theory with utter wreck, and I think his desperate effort to save it was hardly successful. Prof. Fairhurst states the argument o existence of the Divine Mind from the instincts of animals with great cogency.

After reading the book of my friend and brother I am strengthened in an opinion which of late years I have entertained, viz., that a thoughtful man has as much reason for believing that there is a personal God as he has for believing in the reality of the material universe—I will go further and express the opinion that he has a stronger reason for believing in a personal God than he has for believing in the existence of the material universe, for the senses may reveal only the phenomenal—only appearances, but the intuitions of the mind, which reveal the existence of the mind and spirit, bear the stamp of necessity—of eternal necessity.

He does a good work for his fellowmen who, in a skeptical age, confirms their faith in the living God, whom we would vainly see with our weak mortal eyes, but who is truly revealed only to the pure in heart. The benediction of Heaven is breathed in the ever-hallowed words of Christ: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." JOHN SHACKLEFORD.

LIFE OF JESUS. BY FERDINAND PIPER.—The reading of "The Life of Jesus," by Ferdinand Piper, translated from the German, by Wm. F. Clarke, has given me much pleasure for various reasons. Perhaps I ought to give as the chief reason the fact that the translator is a college mate and a warm personal friend, admired so much for his goodness of character that he could not be sacrified as a friend and brother beloved in spite of great differences of opinion in later years. Second, I enjoy the book because it is a translation. To get in a language I can understand that which would otherwise be a sealed book to me, is a pleasure. God bless the translators and multiply their number. Third, I enjoy the book for its title. No books in my library are more prized by me than those treating of "The Life of Lives." While I have several volumes on that subject, I would have many more were it not for limited means. Fourth, I enjoyed the book for its vigorous thought. The nineteen men who have essays in the book upon events in the life of Christ are every one men of brains and culture. There are no crude thoughts or careless expressions in the work. Fifth, I find not a few opinions and views that are not in accord with what I have heretofore held as true. After careful thought and investigation I may change my mind and accept some of them; some, I am sure, I can never accept, and yet I beieve it does me good to read the views of those with whom I can never agree. Antagonism of mind with mind is as good an exercise for the intellect as wrestiing is for the body, even if one's intellect must occasionally be "thrown down." I could give other reasons for enjoying the book, but these are sufficient.

A. T. Schroeder, of Salt Lake City, Utah, has issued a tract, book size, 24 pages, setting forth some facts concerning polygamy which many may have use for in these days of research. Mr. Schroeder is a lawyer and has made out a strong case against polygamy from its own defenders.

MAGAZINES.

The Bookman, New York, for March, begins a story of the time of the American Revolution, by Paul Leicester Ford, which will run to the end of the year. The story is entitled "Jannice Meredith," and promises to be one of the most readable and popular stories of the year.

Few magazines present a more notable list of writers or treat more up-to-date topics than Self-Culture. Each succeeding number of this new magazine challenges the attention of every lover of good literature and easily competes with the best of the older and more pretentious magazines. It is published at Akron, O., and may be had at $1.00 per year.

In the March number of the Century Major-General Greene describes the voyage of the second expedition of troops to Manila, which he commanded, and their landing and intrenchments on the mainland. Also the plans of Admiral Dewey and Gen. Anderson to meet the crisis which would have been precipitated if Admiral Camara's fleet had reached the Philippines.

In the Atlantic Monthly for March Dr. John Fiske, in "Some Cranks and their Crotchets," details at length and most entertainingly some remarkable phases of what he denominates insane, or more mildly as eccentric literature, the manifestations of which are as startling in their variety and number as they are entertaining in Dr. Fiske's descriptions.

With the January number of this year the Record of Christian Work began a series of articles on some of the most absorbing questions of the day. Their author is the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of London, England. The first two, "Self" and "Environment," have already appeared, while "Heredity" is published in the current issue. The whole series, entitled "Life Problems," comprises six papers, those mentioned above and three others, "Spiritual Antagonism," "Influence" and "Destiny," which are to appear in April, May and June, respectively.

Born in Indianapolis, April 23, 1836; baptized by Ara Hollingsworth, 1849. Her faith never faltered and her death was a triumph over "the last of foes." PRICE.

Mrs. E. J. Price departed this life January 30, 1899, at her home near Benton, Iowa. Havilla B. Burnett was born in Ohio, Dec. 29, 1845. Was married to Emerson J. Price in 1866. Nine children were born to the union, four sons and five daughters. All survive except one, son who died in infancy. Sister Price leaves her mother, now 82 years old, her husband and the children to feel the loneliness in the home being bereft of child, companion and mother. In the local community where they had lived 21 years, Sister Price was known as a faithful wife and mother, a truly consecrated Christian, and a friend loved of all who knew her. The minister of the gospel was always received a welcome guest in her home, and it was a very pleasant home to visit. To the brotherhood of the Church of Christ she was known as one of its most loyal members, and as the mother of one of its most able ministers, our beloved brother, Edgar Price, pastor of the Church of Christ at Shenandoah, Ia., where he is now serving in his fourth year. The funeral services were conducted in the Church of Christ at Benton, by the pastor, Lewis P. Kopp, assisted by J. R. Johnson, who served as the first pastor of the Benton congregation and was a personal friend of the family. L. P. K.

A large concourse of people followed his remains to the grave. The funeral was conducted by Bro. Chilton, pastor of the First Christian Church, of St. Joseph. Mo.

THOS. B. MYERS.

Agency, Mo., Feb. 14, 1899.

ROSCOE.

The death-angel has taken our dear little boy and left us to mourn our terrible loss. Roscoe was born Jan. 5, 1894, and died Feb. 9, 1899, having been sick just one week with cerebro spinal meningitis. His fair complexion, white hair, large, brown eyes, very prominent forehead and his gentle, sweet disposition made him a very attractive child and gave us large hopes of his future. We purposed to educate him for the ministry, but Providence has ordered otherwise and we must bow to his will.

H. W. ROBERTSON.

TUTTLE.

Nancy T. Woodside was born in Washington Co., Va., Dec. 18, 1820. Died Feb. 12. 1899, being 78 years, one month and 24 days old. She came to Illinoise with her parents in 1833, and was marrid to T. F. Tuttle May 19, 1842. She united with the Old Bedford Christian Church in 1852. She died at the home of her brother, Wm. Woodside, near Blandinsville, Ill., where she had made her home since her husband's death, which occurred Dec. 23, 1892. She was the oldest of a family of eight children, of which all are now dead, except Wm. Woodside. Funeral services by the writer.

Many Bible students delight to study what is sometimes called the "Sealed Book of the New Testament," Revelation. J. G. Encell has given his idea of the meaning of this sealed book in his late work which he entitles, "The Exiled Prophet, or What John Saw on Patmos." The author gives to the public his conclusions, reached after many years of careful and patient study. The writer of this book believes that Revelation is something revealed, and would not be called the Revelation of Jesus Christ unless it reveals something to man which God intended would be good for man to know. An interesting feature of this volume is that about seventy pages in the first part are devoted to an Essay on Daniel, by the well-known Bible scholar and writer, Dr. D. R. Dungan. A careful study of this essay will prepare the mind of the reader for the main body of the book. A book containing D. R. Dungan's explanation of the Prophecy of Daniel and J. G. Encell's interpretation of Revelation, will certainly interest and instruct those who desire to know more about these two wonderful books of the Bible. The volume embraces 245 pages, neatly bound in cloth, and the price is $1.25, postpaid.

In many places where Mormonism still flourishes many do not thoroughly understand the teachings of their peculiar doctrines. To those who want to know all about Mormonism we suggest that they prucure a copy of "Mormonism Examined and Refuted." The author of this work is D. H. Bays, who was for many years an advocate of the cause of Mormonism and was a man of much power and influence among people of the Mormon Church. This book is truly an exposition of the teachings of Mormonism, presented by one whose knowledge has been gained from the inside, with rare opportunities for obtaining such knowledge. This work is a book of 460 pages, and the price is $1.50, postpaid.

A bound volume containing the Sunday-school lessons for the year 1899 is quite handy for use by teachers and superintendents. It can be placed at a convenient point in the home and taken up for the study of the lesson at odd times. By frequent reference to the book during the week the teacher will come before his class equipped for thorough teaching of the lesson. The Christian Lesson Commentary, edited by W. W. Dowling, will give the teacher a full exposition of the entire lessons for 1899. It is a book of more than 400 pages, and the price is $1.00 per copy, postpaid. Supt. of Subscription Department.

Our rates for 1899, subject to change without previous notice, are as follows:

The Christian-Evangelist, one year,	$1.50
The Christian-Evangelist, one year, and The Life of Alexander Campbell,	2.00
The Christian-Evangelist, one year, and The Genuine Oxford Self-Pronouncing Teachers' Bible,	2.50

Good Alike to Renewals or New Subscriptions.

Our cause is growing, and the Christian-Evangelist is growing with it. Never was the outlook for pure and simple New Testament Christianity so encouraging as now.

"I regard a good religious paper like the Christian-Evangelist as an assistant pastor in every home it enters; a silent but powerful minister." E. Everett Cowperthwaite.

El Dorado, Kan.

Bro. C. believes what he writes, and if he keeps on in his present earnest work there will be few families in his congregation in which the Christian-Evangelist is not read. Is El Dorado a more encouraging field for introducing good literature, or are you, my brother, lacking somewhat in interest?

We have not been able to complete arrangements for our new quarterly publication, The Christian Portrait Gallery, as early as we had hoped, and the first issue will be delayed a few weeks. We are certain that all who have subscribed will be patient, and that their patience will be rewarded. If you have not subscribed, do so now and receive the first number. The price is one dollar per year. Sample copies twenty-five cents each.

"The spirit of the Christian-Evangelist is certainly very near to that of the Great Teacher. Would to God that all might obey its precepts and follow its example."

H. Clay Whaley.

Uva, Mo.

Do you know W. J. Russell, pastor of the church at Rushville, Ind? Have you ever read his little book entitled, "The Wonders of the Sky?"

In this beautiful bit of literature Bro. Russell writes entertainingly and profitably of the God of Nature and Revelation, showing the harmony of all his works. You cannot well afford to overlook this small but useful volume. Every one, from the professor to the child, will be pleased and helped by reading it. It is 6x4 1-2 inches, contains 82 pages on first-class paper, and is exceptionally well bound in an illuminated cloth cover, in color and design appropriate to the title. The price is only fifty cents. You may obtain it free by paying your subscription to Christian-Evangelist to 1899, and sending $1 50 for a new subscriber. If you are not already a subscriber, send $3.00 for yourself and one other new subscriber. Mention this promise in remitting. The book will be mailed postpaid.

"The Christian-Evangelist is our model Christian paper. It has no quarrels with the brethren. It lets a sectarian down effectually, and yet with evident sympathy for his misfortune. The editor is always genial, pious, level-headed and noble-hearted. Long may it continue to bless the homes where it always meets with a joyous welcome."

J. A. Seaton.

Garden City, Mo.

Whoso doth not keep up with the march of truth is a "backslider." To be entitled to be thus designated, it is not necessary for one to actually take backward steps, but to remain stationary, if that is possible, and the world will move away from him and leave him as a "back number." Applicatory: If you have not paid up your subscription within a year, you are not "up to date." What saith the little yellow monitor?

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

GOSPEL MELODIES

REVISED AND ENLARGED.

First Lines of Some of the Best Songs in this Excellent Book

Praise Him! Praise Him!
I love to steal awhile away.
Delay not, Delay not.
Softly and tenderly.
If God has riches given you.
Oh, I want to be still nearer.
Where the billows roll the highest.
There is a land beyond somewhere.
Oh, would to me were only given.
The Bible reveals a glorious land.
The voice of the Savior says come.
The path is set with many a thorn.
Oh, the love of God to me.
List to the song of the reapers.
Night with ebon pinion.
In the presence of our God we meet again.
Preaching Jesus on the way.
I ask not earthly treasure.
Oh, bless the Lord. Oh my soul.
There'll be room enough in heaven.
I am going to Jesus.
Broad is the road that leads to death.
There is a home, a beautiful home.
Attend young friends while I relate.
Peacefully lay her down to rest.
In thy name, Oh, Lord, assembling.
Toiling for Jesus day by day.
How sweet 'tis to know.
When our earthly life is ended.
Just beyond the shad'wy valley.
The Lord's our Rock, in Him we hide
Far beyond the rolling Jordan.
Lead me gently home, Father.
How firm a foundation.
Go on, you pilgrims.
Oh, how lovely! (Anthem.)
List to the voice of the Savior.
In our Father's home above.
There is one thought that cheers my way.
Make channels for the streams of love.
I've found a friend in Jesus.
It is the hour of prayer.
When storm-clouds arise in the sky.
I wonder if any poor sinner will come.
Oh, the wondrous love of Jesus.
See the ranks of sin approaching.
A thousand lords had gathered in the palace of Belshazzar.
Glory and praise to the Lord who died for me.
See! on the cross, the Savior bleeds.
There's a city of light 'mid the stars, we are told.
Just over the river are palaces grand.
Christians, are you growing weary?
There is a rock in a weary land.
O pilgrims, look forward to glory.
When the day is full of gladness.
There is a precious fountain.
Beyond the golden sunset sky.
Do you know a soul that's fainting?
Yes, we have a friend in Jesus.
Come now and let us reason.
When the waves are rolling high.
There is a house not made with hands.
Gone from our home.
I am on my journey to Canaan's happy land.
In thy temple, Lord, we gather.
Christ is knocking at my sad heart.
Let me sing the old song o'er again.
I will tell you an old simple story.
I'll rejoice in the love of Jesus.
There's a beautiful land far beyond the sky.
There's a hand ever ready to lift up all the fallen.
All for Jesus, all for Jesus.
There's a city that is far, far away.
When the trump of God shall sound.
Where are the ones we love fondly?
Teach me thy way.
God of our salvation.
Oh, there is joy in believing.
Praise Him, praise the name of God most high. (Anthem.)
Great is the Lord. (Anthem.)
One sweetly solemn thought.
Make a joyful noise unto the Lord. (Anthem.)
Hear the call to labor for the Lord.
Savior while my heart is tender.
Of the old time I'm thinking.
Twilight is stealing.
At home or away, in the alley or street.
Mother, tell me of the angels.

GOSPEL MELODIES contains several good easy anthems that will please choirs and singing societies. It is the only church music book of its class that does.

REFORMATION OF THE 19th CENTURY

OR NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

A Series of Historical Articles to Run Through the Christian-Evangelist During the Year 1899

I. Introductory Period—1809 to 1819.

BY PROF. CHARLES LOUIS LOOS.

This will include those stirring events which occurred in the formative period of our reformatory movement with which the present generation should be thoroughly familiar.

II. From the Organization of the Christian Missionary Society to the Outbreak of the Civil War—1849 to 1861.

BY DR. B. B. TYLER,
Contributing Editor CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

This period of our history, embracing the first decade of operations under the American Christian Missionary Society, with Jerusalem and Jamaica missions, will be full of interest to readers of to-day.

III. The War Period, rom the Firing on Sumpter up to the Death of Mr. Campbell—1861 to 1866.

BY DR. W. T. MOORE,
Dean of the Missouri Bible College, Columbia.

This is a turbulent period in our country's history, and one that tried most severely the principle we had adopted, of unity in Christ, in spite of differences of opinion. It ends with the death of Mr. Campbell, an event which opponents of the Reformation thought would practically end the movement.

IV. The Period Between the Death of Mr. Campbell and the Organization of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society—1866 to 1875.

BY T. W. GRAFTON,
Pastor Christian Church, Rock Island, Ill.

This period covers one of those turning-points in our history in which our whole future was involved. The conflict between Christian liberty and strict constructionism, and the conception and trial of the "Louisville Plan" of mission work, enter into this part of our history.

V. The Period from 1875 to the Close of 1899.

1. AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
B. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec. A. C. M. S.

2. FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The closing period in our analysis is the period of expansion. Liberty has triumphed in its contest with legalism, and it manifests its power in the formation of new organizations through which to carry on a more aggressive work. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society came to birth, and the old Mother Society through their aid, soon comes to the consciousness of its own mission. The history of these societies will be given by their respective corresponding secretaries.

CURRENT EVENTS.

At noon on Saturday, March 4, the Fifty-fifth Congress finished its work. A glance over the list of its achievements shows that it has been a busy Congress and that it has dealt ably with some of the most difficult problems which have yet confronted American legislators. Less than two weeks after his inauguration, President McKinley convened the Fifty-fifth Congress in special session. It met for the first time on March 15, 1897. The immediate demand was for tariff and currency legislation. The former had the right of way and the greater part of the special session was spent in consideration of the tariff bill presented by the House committee, of which Mr. Dingley was chairman. The outcome was the enactment of the high-tariff Dingley law. Schemes of monetary reform were formulated by Secretary Gage and the committees, and were discussed at length, but currency legislation was first sided-tracked in the interest of the tariff and later had to make way for the emergency legislation necessitated by the war, and the monetary and banking system is still unreorganized. Of the other bills which were passed by this Congress, aside from those immediately connected with the war, the most important are the national bankruptcy law, the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands and the necessary provision for the twelfth decennial census. This body of regular legislation by itself represents a fair amount of work for a Congress to accomplish, and the inauguration of the new tariff law and the return of prosperity would have made the period important. But the chief interest in the work ot these two years, both for ourselves and for the future historian, lies in the congressional action which was connected with the Spanish war.

The work of preparing for war, declaring it, conducting it, and making peace, in so far as it was legislative work, has been entirely the work of the Fifty-fifth Congress. From the outset the policy of the administration prevailed. The first congressional action was the declaration that the people of Cuba are free and independent, without recognition of the Cuban Republic as the opposition urged. The appropriation of fifty million dollars, to be used at the discretion of the President, was the first step in preparation for war. It was followed by the legislative enactment providing for the enlistment of a volunteer army. Three days after the latter event, on April 24, 1898, came the declaration of war against Spain. Hostilities had no sooner begun than Congress began the work of providing the sinews of war. The war revenue act was the result. The second session was devoted to making appropriations rather than to providing revenue. Of the $900,000,000, which was appropriated during the second session, over $350,000,000 went for war expenses. Within the last few weeks some of the most important work of this Congress has been done. The ratification of the treaty of peace by the Senate; the passage of the navy personnel bill and naval appropriation bill, by which the navy is reorganized and enlarged to meet the new requirements; the army increase bill, which in its final form puts at the disposal of the President a force of one hundred thousand men until July 1, 1901, but makes no provision for remedying the crying defects in the organization of the army—these are the measures which Congress has enacted during these last few weeks as the direct result of our recent war. Taking it altogether, it has probably done more important work than any other Congress since the days of reconstruction. Its total appropriations amounted approximately to $1,600,000,000, but these two years of our history, from March, 1897 to March, 1899, are as well worth their price as any we have yet seen.

In three important American industries there has been a considerable increase in wages in the last two weeks. The steel workers in the Illinois and Wisconsin district were the first beneficiaries; 15,000 men receiving an average increase of about ten per cent. To the Illinois steel company alone this means an annual increase of a quarter of a million dollars in wages. The American Tin-plate Company, a trust organized last December and controlling nine-tenths of the tin-plate plants in the country, has announced an increase of from five to ten per cent. in the wages of all its employes who work by the day or week. About 10,000 will benefit by this raise. An increase in the price of tin-plate is expected very soon and by the agreement with the Amalgamated Tin-workers' Union, this will mean a corresponding raise for the higher grade of labor which is paid by a tonnage scale. Many of the cotton mills of New England, beginning with the Fall River manufacturers, have decided that the prosperous condition of business warrants a return to the schedule of 1897. This means a ten per cent. increase, and April 3 has been set as the day on which the new rate shall go into effect. The mills which have already made this decision employ 90,000 operators, and the movement is still spreading among the other New England mills. We would rather, any day, chronicle an increase of workingmen's wages than a military victory. It is more certain to be a genuine contribution to the welfare of humanity.

The Illinois Legislature, on the eve of its adjournment, undid one of those things which it ought never to have done. The infamous Allen law, passed at the last session, had for its object to deliver the valuable franchises of Chicago in the hands of the corrupt Chicago council so that they could be disposed of for a term of fifty years in a manner highly lucrative to the said councilmen. It happened, however, that the opposition in the council was always a little too strong, for a great deal of sentiment was created by the discussion of the Allen bill at the time of its passage. The legislature has now repealed the law. In the House there was but one vote against the repeal and that was cast by Mr. Allen, the author of the bill. Many of the senators solemnly affirmed their belief in the wisdom and beneficence of the law, but explained at length why in this particular instance they were willing to waive their own judgment. The real reason for their abandonment of the law, be it said to the honor of their constitutents in that noble commonwealth, was that every man knew that a vote now in favor of the Allen law would be the last nail in his political coffin. The vote in the Senate was unanimous. The Allen law has run its course. An ignoble birth, a shameful life and an ignoble death at the hands of its former friends—such was the career of this bit of monopoly legislation.

Dewey is now the successor of Farragut and Porter in the rank of Admiral of the United States Navy. He not only therefore stands at the head of our navy and holds a rank equal to that of the highest naval officer in any navy, but he outranks the commanding general of our army by two grades. The ranks of Admiral and Vice-Admiral correspond respectively to General and Lieutenant-General, which latter positions in the army at present do not exist. Gen. Miles is only a major-general and was therefore on an official equality with Dewey as a rear-admiral before his promotion. Dewey's promotion places his name in the very select list of our military officer in either branch of the service, gives him a right to fly the admiral's flag (four white stars on a square blue field) and carries with it and increase of pay from $6,000 a year to $13,500. These honors and emoluments are but a slight an inadequate token of our appreciation of his services and of the place which he holds in the hearts of the American people. Republics are proverbially lacking in gratitude, but ours is not ungrateful to Dewey. Promotion has come also to Lieutenant Hobson. A promotion from the position of assistant naval constructor with the rank and pay of lieutenant to that of naval constructor with the rank and pay of captain, does not on the surface, appear to be anything remarkable. But considering how strictly promotion follows the lines of seniority in the army and navy, there is good ground for considering this one of the most remarkable promotions in the history of the navy, since it advances Hobson two hundred and fifty places on the list. The ground of the promotion is stated as "extraordinary heroism;" whether at Santiago or Kansas City, not specified.

The resignation of Premier Sagasta and his Cabinet is not a surprising occurrence. The surprising thing is that it did not occur sooner. It has been momentarily expected since the signing of the peace treaty at Paris, and has once or twice been prematurely announced. The trouble is that the Cabinet fears defeat in the Cortes on the proposition of ceding the Philippines to the United States. Sagasta was urged to retain the office of premier and undertake the formation of a new Cabinet. After his refusal the place was offered to Rios, president of the Peace Commission, who also declined. Both made the immediate dissolution of the Chamber the condition of their acceptance, and the condition was not met. The premiership has been accepted by Silvela, and he has organized a Cabinet consisting of Senors Dato, Villaverde, Duran, Pidal, Polavieja and Camara. The resignation of Sagasta and his ministers does not mean the defeat of the treaty, but that the Cabinet was reluctant to stand responsible for it and bear the odium which would come from supporting it. There is little chance that ratification will be seriously opposed in the Cortes, for there is doubtless a very general realization of the fact that to refuse the terms offered in the treaty would be to lose both the islands and the indemnity. Pending the decision of the court which is to try him for being defeated at Santiago, Cervera is not allowed to occupy his seat in the Cortes to which he has been elected. The Spanish Government is setting to work in good earnest now to investigate the conduct of its unfortunate commanders, with a view to punishing them for their failure. The prosecution of General Linares, who surrendered Santiago, has been ordered, and Admiral Montejo, who commanded the fleet which Dewey destroyed in Manila Bay, and the commander of the Spanish arsenal at Cavite, are now in prison awaiting trial.

The death of Lord Herschell, in Washington, last Wednesday, removes one of Great Britain's most eminent and most useful diplomats and statesmen. His mission in Washington was to serve on the recently adjourned Anglo-American joint high commission for the adjustment of trade relations between the United States and Canada, and the determination of the boundary line between Canada and Alaska. The late Congressman Dingley was also a member of this commission. Lord Herschell, the son of an English clergyman, was knighted about twenty years ago and a few years later raised to the peerage. He had been twice lord high chancellor and at the time of his death held many high offices and honors, among them being those of privy councilor and chancellor of London University. He was a member of the tribunal for the arbitration of the Venezuela-British Guina boundary dispute in 1897 and was considered one of the most valuable members of the present commission for the adjustment of relations between the United States and Canada. He was a genial gentleman with little formality and reserve, and with an appreciation of American humor which is not common among his countrymen. These qualities made him a favorite in the society of the capitol, and his death will be sincerely mourned, not only in his own country, but by all who had come in contact with him socially or officially in this.

The most recent indications in the Philippines are decidedly of a more pacific nature. The large island of Cebu has been formally taken possession of by United States forces, which encountered no resistance. The provisional government, established by the Filipinos on the Island of Negros, has voluntarily accepted American sovereignty over that island and has sent a deputation to Manila to make its submission. The inhabitants of Negros have shown their good sense by refusing from the first to have anything to do with Aguinaldo. The government which they have established represents only the cities on and near the coast, and their acceptance of American sovereignty is still no guarantee that the wild tribes of the mountainous interior may not give trouble later on. Aguinaldo himself, grown wise by the failure of his recent schemes for annihilating the Americans at one fell swoop, has assumed a more friendly air. There are some things which Aguinaldo does not learn rapidly, but he is beginning to learn not to do the things which he cannot do. The persistent rumors of German hostilities to American expansion in the Orient are dissipated by the official declaration of approval of our course, accompanied by the recall of the German warship, "Kaiserin Augusta," from Manila, and the request that the American authorities shall protect the lives and property of German subjects there. This act is at once a guarantee of friendliness and the best possible expression of confidence in our ability to deal efficiently with the situation which the Philippines present. Admiral von Diedrichs, whose conduct in Manila Bay gave rise to most of the rumors of German hostility, has been succeeded in the command of the German squadron in Chinese waters by Prince Henry, of Prussia, he of the "mailed fist." The "Kaiserin Augusta," leaving Manila, will join this squadron.

The North Carolina Legislature, following the example of South Carolina, Louisiana and Mississippi, has adopted a constitutional amendment imposing educational and property qualifications for the exercise of the right of suffrage, but with the important exception that this qualification is not to be required of those who were legal voters or whose ancestors were legal voters prior to 1865. In other words, illiterate negroes are barred from the ballot box, but illiterate whites are allowed to vote. In North Carolina this measure will not become a part of the constitution until it has been ratified by popular vote, and there is some doubt whether the requisite two-thirds can be obtained. Even if it is, the opposition is strong enough to carry the case into the courts, and an impartial court would probably nullify the amendment as being contrary to the Fifteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution, which provides that the right to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any state on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude. The proposed North Carolina amendment is clearly at variance with this Fifteenth Amendment. It proposes to disfranchise illiterate blacks, not on account of their illiteracy, but on account of "race, color and previous condition of servitude." That is evident, because equally illiterate whites are to be allowed to retain the franchise. The Charleston News and Courier sees the inconsistency and gives vent to this editorial utterance: "The weak point in the North Carolina amendment is that it discriminates in favor of the ignorant and illiterate white people of that state. We do not believe that the negroes have any constitutional or moral right to vote, and we do not believe that illiterate white men should be allowed to vote. The best way out of all our troubles would be to submit an amendment to the constitution repealing the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, which were designed only to accomplish the political subjection of the South to the Republican party, and were not fairly ratified by the states. The repeal of these amendments would establish the status of the colored people in this country beyond further question, and would free the Southern states from the necessity of seeking to accomplish a most desirable purpose by extraordinary means." "Establish the status of the colored people!" Yes, we should say it would. It would establish it altogether too much like it was before the war. The trouble is that the News and Courier occupies an ante-bellum standpoint. Its idea would have been excusable in 1859, but they are a hopeless anachronism in 1899.

The Nicaragua Canal bill failed to become law. It passed the Senate, but the House committee would not agree to the Senate measure, and could not get a vote on its own bill either as an independent measure or as a rider on the sundry civil or the river and harbors appropriation bills. So the matter goes over again. But as a compromise, and to avoid adding several millions more to the already vast total of appropriations, a new survey was ordered in such terms as to commit the government somewhat more definitely to the scheme of building and controlling the canal. If it really means that—and Senator Morgan says it does and that he is satisfied—it will be worth the million it will cost. But so far as the survey itself is concerned, it does not seem that there ought to be any special need of a new one. There have been nine Nicaragua Canal surveys at the expense of the United States Government in the last quarter of a century. The two most recent are those of General Ludlow and Admiral Walker. The report of the latter is not yet in, but so far as its results are known it confirms General Ludlow's report, on which it was designed as a check. We want a canal, and of course it is not worth while to undertake the work on an inadequate survey, but it does seem somewhat farcical to go on ordering survey after survey at a million dollars each just to keep up the interest, when, of these two most recent surveys, there is no reason to suspect the first of inaccuracy, and the report of the second has not yet been published.

FELLOWSHIP IN SERVICE.

The inequality that exists among men in this life constitutes one of the problems whose solution must await the light of the hereafter. One man is burdened; another is at ease. One man bears the brunt of adversity, of criticism, and often of persecution; another glides smoothly along amid the applause of his fellowmen, cheered, supported, appreciated. When the psalmist thought on these things he said his foot almost slipped; but when he went into the sanctury and looked at the problem in the light of God's ways and dealings with men he understood it.

It would seem, however, that at least in the kingdom of God these inequalities ought not to exist, at least in the same degree. Here the low are exalted and the the high are humbled, and we stand together on a common plane. But take an average congregation and you will find that a few are carrying its burdens and performing its service, even at great sacrifice, while the many are at ease in Zion. It is not the will of God, as both reason and revelation teach, that one man should be burdened and another eased, but that there should be equality. This is the very meaning of the term "fellowship." It is rejoicing together, toiling together, sorrowing together, and bearing each other's burdens, and so fulfilling the law of Christ.

These reflections have been awakened by recent letters from faithful ministers who are struggling to maintain their families and their work in the ministry, and are doing it at a tremendous sacrifice. Some of them have confessed their inability to pay even the reduced price for which the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is offered to ministers. This is not because these men are incapable or unworthy, for their services are gladly accepted by those to whom they minister. Nor is it always lack of ability on the part of the congregations to suitably compensate their preachers. It is oftener the result of that lack of fellowship in Christian service which is an essential feature of Christianity. How few church members feel called upon to share in the burdens which the minister and his faithful wife are carrying, to the extent of making some self-denials that they may increase his salary and enable him to pay his honest obligations and provide himself with such books and papers as will render him more efficient in his ministry!

It is often the case, as in that of a preacher whose letter is now before us, that there are wealthy members in the church for which he preaches, and yet he is compelled to deny himself the assistance of his favorite religious journal, because he is unable to pay for it and meet his honest obligations on a salary that reaches but little above $300. This must be pure thoughtlessness, but it is not excusable on that ground. Why should not well-to-do members of the congregation acquaint themselves with the condition of their preacher? Knowing his income to be very small, why should they not ask occasionally if he finds it possible to avail himself of such assistance as he needs in the way of books and papers, or to meet his honest obligations? Why should the preacher be expected to make all the sacrifices for the church, carrying the spiritual welfare of its members on his heart, day and night, with the additional burden of not knowing how he is to meet bills that are coming due? Is this Christian fellowship?

We plead for a closer bond of sympathy between the preacher and his congregation. We plead for more Christian fellowship in Christian service. We make this plea especially in the interest of the preachers who receive small salaries, and who preach for the poorer congregations. They are held to the ministry by conscientious convictions. Should there not be some conscientious convictions also on the part of those for whom they labor, in seeing that they are better supported? We know the familiar complaint: "We are too poor to support our preacher as he should be supported." But do you see to it that he lives as well as the rest of you? If not, why not, if you are in partnership together? A preacher would hardly ask for anything more than to be enabled to live as well as the average family in his congregation, with a little margin for books and periodicals. In the South, in the West, almost everywhere, there are preachers struggling along under burdens which none but God understand. Many of these write to us occasionally and unbosom themselves, until our heart aches for them and their families. With all our advancing along the line let our churches see to it that they advance the salaries of their preachers, when such advance is necessary in order that they may maintain their self-respect and hold up their heads among their brethren.

The editor of this paper has a keen remembrance, in his earlier ministry, of having gone without meat or other proper food on his table, not because the church for which he was preaching was unable to pay, but because of sheer indifference or ignorance of the preacher's condition and need. This is not Christian fellowship. We are fully persuaded that our churches can never be what they ought to be until they perform their obligations more fully to the ministers who serve them, in giving them both financial and moral support; until they learn what that Scripture means which says, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

TWO IMPORTANT FACTS.

Bishop William Taylor, in his great book on Africa and African missions, says it was not his habit at first to antagonize or denounce the native customs and practices, however hideous and abominable they might be, for this would have caused an irritation and led to disputes that would have defeated his purpose. His sole method was to pour the light of God into their darkened souls, leaving this divine instrument alone to do its work, which it did with marvelous results.

On one occasion, he tells us, a chief came forward among the penitents and, after a painful struggle of about two hours, was enabled to surrender to God and receive Christ as his personal Savior. His face all aglow with the new light in his heart, he sprang to his feet and began to give expression to his new-found joy. At the first pause in his speech, "Hi! hi!" shouted a heathen voice in the crowd, "what are you going to do with your wives?" This was a center shot, and the great crowd listened almost breathlessly for the answer. It came without a moment's hesitation, and as the Bishop remarks, was an object-lesson in the marvelous working of the Holy Spirit in the human heart. "I will show you what I will do with them," the chief responded. He had six wives, and they were all in the audience. He called them to come to the front, and they immediately came, not daring to disobey him. Addressing them, he said: "You know how much you have cost me, and how valuable you are in tilling my fields, gathering my harvests, and how large a part of my wealth you represent, and you know that yesterday I would not have given one of you your liberty to save your life. Then I had a wicked heart, but to-day I have met the God-man, and he has changed my wicked nature so that now I want to do that which is right in his sight. You are all strong and able to do well for yourselves, and I now set you free, retaining only my first wife." He then took each one by the hand and, after exhorting her to seek the Savior, said, "Now you are free."

This chief is still faithful, and for many years has preached the gospel to his people every first day of the week. This dramatic piece of missionary history helps to answer the question, Are heathen converts any good, and do they hold out? We heard a Western man make the assertion, a few years ago, that he would not give one Illinois farmer, as Christian material, for a thousand Chinese coolies or African "niggers." This was his argument against Foreign Missions. With all of the acknowledged greatness of Illinois as a civilized state, and the superiority of her farming population, it is not an impertinence to ask, Can she, or any other American state, furnish more conclusive evidence of the power of the gospel to change the human heart and transform human life than that afforded in the regeneration of this savage chief? Thousands of native believers in Madagascar were thrown over a precipice, nearly two hundred feet high, and dashed to pieces on the rocks below, because they declined to renounce their faith in Christ. They were first lowered fifteen or twenty feet over the cliff, then drawn up and asked if they would save their lives and escape this horrible death by giving up Christ. Not one of them answered yes. Bishop Taylor joins with all other missionaries in testifying that the regenerating Spirit does his work quite as effectually with heathen sinners as with those who profess to be civilized. The most of them stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made them free.

The other fact in this illustration of the power of the gospel on heathen soil is a confirmation of the truth that when the light of God penetrates even the darkest soul, evil habits and bad practices are rooted up and cast out, and when this result is not produced it may reasonably be denied that the new birth has taken place. When light comes in darkness goes out, when God inhabits the soul evil ways dissolve and disappear. That is the final and the single test of reality in conversion. When a man has been regenerated by the Spirit of God, you need not specify to him that this sin or that is to be left off; the light from God that effects the change reveals that to him. A man traveling through the mountains was overtaken by night and caught in a thunder storm. He took refuge in an old blacksmith shop. The constant flashes of sheet lightning revealed a huge rattlesnake lying a few feet of him, and a panther reposing under the bellows. The same light that revealed the panther to the man revealed the man to the panther. The animal sprang through the window and disappeared in the forest, but the snake he dispatched with a piece of iron. There are sins that disappear before the light, others have to be dispatched. The light that brings God in drives the devil out and the truly regenerate man knows instinctively what it is that has to go.

A lady said to us recently that it always had been a surprise to her that church members would attend dances and card parties on prayer-meeting nights or during a protracted meeting. In itself it is no worse then than at other times, and there is nothing surprising about it. It is what you might easily know would take place. Unconverted people in the church act in the same way as unconverted people outside of the church; they follow their natural inclinations. If these have not been changed they love the dance and the card party, but the best prayer-meeting in the world is a bore to them. If, on the contrary, their hearts have been touched and their dispositions renewed by the Holy Spirit, they enjoy the prayer-meeting, but have no taste for the things that worldly people delight in. The light of God coming into a man's soul knocks worldliness out as it did polygamy and other vices out of that heathen savage. If this were not true conversion would be but a name and the Christian religion of no practical value to mankind.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

In a second editorial in the Christian Standard, on the question of Christian Endeavor, our esteemed contemporary finds it convenient and politic to narrow its attack down to include the editor of this paper and our national superintendent, J. Z. Tyler. The other brethren who expressed themselves more radically than the editor, in our columns, are excused on the ground that they were deceived by us, and uttered themselves without a full knowledge of the facts! Perhaps these brethren would prefer to rest under the censure of "breaking faith with the convention," rather than accept the implication of the Standard's defense. And yet each of their statements was based on the clear, full resume of the history of the case given by Bro. Tyler in his letter to the editor in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. If any of these brethren care to hide themselves behind the excuse of non-information to escape the Standard's wrath, as we infer from the Standard's editorial that some have done, they are welcome to whatever shelter that excuse contains.

Since the discussion has descended to a personal attack on myself and Bro. Tyler, and a letter signed by the two secretaries of the Acting Board disclaims any official responsibility for the Standard's utterances, there would be no call for any further reply on our part but for the fact that a brother, misled by the Standard's charges, asks us for information both for his own sake and for the sake of others who, he feels sure, will misinterpret the Standard's language.

If our readers will excuse me, therefore, for dealing with matters personal in these columns, I will rise to a question of privilege and give the information called for.

The Standard charges us with (1) "breaking faith with the convention, and (2) in "seeking to nullify the action of the Board." In its specifications the Standard says, "These brethren [J. H. Garrison and J. Z. Tyler] agreed to abide by the decision of the Board." That sounds exactly as if there had been a dispute at the Chattanooga Convention as to whether J. Z. Tyler should be national superintendent, and that the question had been submitted to the Board as arbitrators, each party pledging itself to abide the decision; or, if not that, then the question as to whether any voluntary contributions from societies or individuals to aid in Bro. Tyler's support would be permissible, was so referred to the Board. It is concerning this statement that a brother asks for information. As a matter of fact, as every one knows, no such questions were raised before the convention or referred to the Board. What was referred to the Board and "left wholly" in its hands? The matter of the Board's providing a salary for Bro. Tyler for his whole time, either directly from its treasury or through the Endeavor Societies—only that and nothing more. So the minutes will show. In what respect, then, has either Bro. Tyler or myself "broken faith with the convention?"

When the Board decided it could not, directly or indirectly, aid in providing a salary for Bro. Tyler, I acquiesced in that decision and told Secretary B. L. Smith, in conversation with him, that on reflection it seemed to me wiser, unless all the boards could agree to join in his support, that Bro. Tyler's salary be provided independently of the missionary boards. He never suggested that this would be "breaking faith with the convention." I was unsophisticated enough to suppose I was helping the Board in seeking to relieve it of this burden, and at the same time was aiding in carrying out the express wish of the convention, that Bro. T. be secured for his whole time. Imagine my surprise, therefore, to find myself gibbeted before the brotherhood by the Christian Standard on the charge of "breaking faith with the convention" and in seeking to "nullify the action of the Board!"

What action of the Board is it that I am charged with seeking to nullify? Its action declining to become responsible for Bro. Tyler's salary? Certainly not. Does not this charge assume that the action of the Board in declining to provide for the support of Bro. Tyler carries with it the denial of the right of anybody else to provide for his salary? Suppose some generous-hearted individual, acting spontaneously, as Gen. Drake did in his donation, had offered to furnish the salary? Would this gift have nullified the action of the Board? Not unless it was the intention of the Board, by its action, to prevent the employment of Bro. Tyler in any way, which would have been contrary to the expressed wish of the convention. If not, why should the voluntary gifts of a large number of individuals for that purpose be so regarded? But perhaps it was the action of the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in asking the brethren to freely express themselves on this subject through its columns that constitutes the crime of attempted nullification. If so, are we to understand that the editor of the Standard, by virtue of his official relation to the Acting Board, claims the right to control the policy of our other religious journals on missionary and Christian Endeavor topics? If so, let us know the worst. Who will define the nature of my sin, that, when found guilty, I may cry, "Pecavi! pecavi!"

Having now entered my plea of "Not guilty," to each of these charges, I submit my case without argument, further than this simple explanation, to the great jury whose verdict, whether of approval or of condemnation, will command my profound respect. I ask no consideration on the ground of past devotion to the cause in whose service I have grown gray, nor on account of previous good character. If I have sinned, as charged upon me by my brother and fellow journalist, let me receive the merited penalty, whatever that may be.

As for Bro. Tyler, who had nothing to do with the action of the Chattanooga Convention, nor with the agitation of the subject in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST except to answer my letter to him, he needs no defense. The charges as applied to him are absurd. A man who has almost sacrificed his life in unrequited service for the cause of Christian Endeavor deserves something better than this from his brethren.

I will only add, in conclusion, that thoughtful brethren who have read this discussion will hardly fail to be impressed with the fact that a matter much more vital than the employment of a national superintendent of Christian Endeavor, important as that is, has come to the surface. If this little electric storm shall serve to purify the atmosphere so that certain obstacles to our missionary work may be more clearly perceived, it has not occurred in vain. J. H. GARRISON.

Hour of Prayer.

CHOOSING A MASTER.

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, March 15, 1899.)

(Matthew 6:19-24; Romans 6:16-23.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: It is choice that decides character, and character determines destiny.

The subject for the lesson this week presents before us the greatest question that ever confronted a responsible human being. It is at once man's glory and peril that he is a free agent, clothed with the power of making choices and determining his destiny. Two great and opposite classes of interests or types of character present themselves before us and we must choose between them. "No man can serve two masters." We must choose and serve the one or the other.

Here are the higher and the lower natures in man. Each makes its appeal to the will, and seeks to dominate the life. Conscience makes its appeal for the right, for the truest and highest; the flesh makes its appeal through the appetites and passions. These two forces, the one from above and the other from below, play continually upon our lives, and character is the resultant.

In the passage first quoted above Jesus condemns a certain type of religion common in his day, and not yet extinct, which was satisfied with externals. He taught that true religion consists, not in the outward appearance, but in the condition of the heart; that it is not what men see on the outside, but what God sees in the secret chambers of our heart that determines our standing in His sight.

He saw men eagerly engaged in amassing wealth, and he taught them it was not wise to lay up treasures upon the earth, but that they should be laid up in heaven, because the heart would follow the treasure; that it is not wealth hoarded up, or selfishly used, which blesses man, but wealth used in harmony with the will of God and in carrying out the purposes of heaven that availeth to our eternal happiness.

He saw men disobedient to the higher vision of life, and to the mandates of conscience, and warned them against the awful darkness that must come to them if the light that is within them be rejected and made darkness. The great peril of every individual is that he will not be true to his best knowledge of right and duty, and will thus weaken and ultimately extinguish the light that is in him.

There be many who are seeking to compromise between these two types of life and character, but Jesus teaches that "we can not serve God and Mammon." We must select our master and be true to him.

The same lesson is presented in another form by Paul in the second passage cited above. A man, he says, becomes a servant to whatever he obeys, "whether of sin unto death or of obedience unto righteousness." He reminds the Roman brethren of the fact that though they had been at one time the servants of sin, yet they had "obeyed from the heart the form of doctrine which was delivered" unto them and had been made "free from sin" and had become the "servants of righteousness." Having made this exchange of masters he urges the same degree of fidelity to righteousness which they had hitherto yielded to sin. This exhortation was the more reasonable because their former service to the old master had yielded them nothing of which they were not now ashamed, while the new service to righteousness would lead to everlasting life; "for the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Here are the two masters, Sin and Righteousness; the wages of one is death, of the other life everlasting. Choose you this day which you will serve. Righteousness may exact more self-control, more self-denials, more self-sacrifices, at the first, than sin, but at last it yields peace and joy and eternal blessedness. Can we hesitate between such alternatives?

PRAYER.

Our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee that Thou didst create man in Thine own image, and endow him with the power of choice. We thank Thee that Thou hast set before us motives so high and holy to win us to the service of truth and righeousness. Especially do we bless Thy name that Thou has embodied all virtues and graces in Jesus Christ, Thy Son, who appeals to all that is noblest and best within us, and asks us to follow Him. Help us, we pray Thee, to choose Him for our Master, and give us grace to be loyal to that choice, even unto death. For His Name's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

The ups and downs of an editor's life, if fully portrayed on canvas, would present a kaleidoscopic view. The mail he receives daily from all sections of the country presents a most interesting study of the different phases of human nature. What delights one reader annoys and angers another. What one regards as extremely radical another challenges as tamely conservative. Here is a brother who thinks the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is leading its readers too fast along new ways of thinking and is dangerously indifferent to the antagonisms he is developing by his course. Here is another brother who diagnoses this same editor in a very different way. According to this latter view, the editor never takes any position of his own on any subject until he finds out which is going to be the popular side, and then he gets down off the fence on that side! Surely, these two opposite views cannot both be correct. Perhaps neither is exactly true to the facts.

Here is a sensitive brother who is offended at a harmless little witticism which he thinks is a grave offense against Christian courtesy. Everything in a religious paper, according to his idea, should be as solemn as a graveyard. "Did Paul ever joke?" We dare say he did, and we know that he was capable of very biting irony. But here is another reader who cannot understand how a man who writes such "lovely meditations" in the Easy Chair should rise up and utter a word of stern rebuke against what he believes to be a great wrong, even among his own brethren. Why not continue the pious meditations and omit the rebuke? Because in our judgment it is more pious sometimes to rebuke religious arrogance and the manifestation of popery than it is to indulge in pious reflections. It is not near so pleasant to reprove the wrong as it is to approve the right, but it is none the less the duty of even a religious journalist.

And then, there is another class of readers, growing beautifully less, however, who resent the right which an editor of a religious paper sometimes exercises of expressing an opinion upon current political or governmental issues. "Stick to your last," is their advice. "Don't meddle with things that you do not understand." It takes politicians and editors of city dailies and country weeklies to understand the intricate problems of statecraft. It is generally the man whose political idol or hobby is interfered with that rails at religious journals for transcending the scope of religious journalism. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is nonpartisan on all merely political issues, but it claims the right of giving such interpretation as it thinks wise to the great facts of our current history which have to do with the progress of the kingdom of God and with the moral welfare of the people. No man can rob us of this right.

There is another class of objectors with whom we must confess a great deal of sympathy. They do not like personal controversy in religious journals. They do not think such controversies contribute to the edification of the readers and to the good of the cause. We are quite of this feeling and opinion. Whenever a discussion of any subject descends to personalities it deserves to be referred to another tribunal for settlement, but careless readers sometimes do not make proper discriminations as to what is necessary to be said in the interest of righteousness and what belongs to the category of mere personal spite or revenge. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is ready to go to trial before any impartial tribunal on the general fairness of its discussions and its steadfast insistence on discussing principles and measures without indulging in unbrotherly epithets. These are only a few of the things that come in a single edition of an editor's mail, from which there are scarcely ever absent voices pleading for help, for advice, for suggestion, for sympathy. "Who is sufficient for these things?" Thank God for a Christ broad enough in his sympathies, strong enough in his nature, loving enough in his heart, to take the whole sorrowing world into his arms and give it rest, if it would only come to Him.

A reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST sends us some excerpts from an address by Mr. Whitelaw Reid, delivered at the Marquette Club in Chicago, recently, on the Philippine problem. Our correspondent thinks Mr. Reid's views of the meaning of the Paris Treaty are not the same as those of President McKinley's, given in a late issue of this paper. This is probably true. Mr. Reid lays special stress in his speech upon the commercial advantages the United States will derive from our possession of the great Philippine Archipelago. There is no question, nor has there been, in our mind, but that there are many Americans to whom the commercial argument appeals most strongly in deciding the question of our relation with these islands. We do not believe, however, that this is the controlling motive with the administration or with the large majority of the American people. We believe their motive to be, primarily, one of fulfilling our national obligation, and, secondarily, if there be any advantage to this country growing out of the fulfillment of such obligations, no one would certainly object to receiving it.

In a very interesting editorial in a recent number of the Union Signal on the use and abuse of wealth the following pertinent and striking distinction between contentment and happiness is made:

Civilization, the highest Christian civilization, is an impossibility without vast and ever-increasing wealth. The desire of the individual for the good things which that civilization produces is not blameworthy for that desire is the motive power which lifts mankind from a savage state. If civilization is better than savagery then let the individual exchange his tallow dip for a kerosene lamp at the first opportunity, the lamp for gas and the gas for electricity. Let him move out of his dugout into as spacious and comfortable a house as he can afford, fit up his house with all modern conveniences and adorn it with carpets, curtains and pictures. And Mr. Chamberlain is right; the people who live in comfortable houses, with the conveniences of modern life, are happier than the inhabitants of snow huts or dugouts. The digger Indian may be as contented as a Gladstone or James Russell Lowell, but it is a misuse of language to describe him as equally "happy." In that case the hog wallowing in his sty vies with the most fortunate human being in happiness, because, forsooth, he has everything he wants. Contentment and mere animal enjoyment are one thing, happiness is another; and happiness consists not in learning to want nothing, but to "covet earnestly the best things." It is here that people make the vital mistake and transform wealth as they do other good gifts of God into a curse.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

INTRODUCTORY PERIOD.

VI. Meeting and Organization of the Convention—It Begins its Work.

BY PROF. CHARLES LOUIS LOOS.

The convention assembled in the church at the corner of Eighth and Walnut Streets, Tuesday, October 23, "for the purpose of temporarily organizing the General Convention of the Christian Churches of the United States of America; this was the title given to this convention. Dr. L. L. Pinkerton, of Kentucky, was called to the chair, and John M. Bramwell, of Indiana, was appointed secretary. The following brethren were then unanimously elected permanent officers of the convention, to wit: President, A. Campbell, of Virginia; vice-presidents, D. S. Burnet, of Ohio; John O'Kane, of Indiana; John T. Johnson, of Kentucky, and Walter Scott, of Pennsylvania."

The committee on order of business was composed of Elijah Goodwin, of Indiana; Henry D. Palmer, of Illinois; William Morton, of Kentucky; John T. Powell, of Ohio; Samuel S. Church, of Missouri; Newton Short, of Virginia; Walter Scott, of Pennsylvania; L. L. Pinkerton, of Georgia, and Richard Hawley, of Michigan.

These names are given here that the reader may know what sort of men constituted this convention. This great assembly represented our apostolic host of preachers and private Christians of that day. Among them were the "prophets of Israel," the "fathers" of our reformation. Note this well.

The convention met for regular business Wednesday, 9 o'clock A. M. A. Campbell being absent because of sickness, the first vice-president, D. S. Burnet, took the chair. He presided during the entire convention and with admirable skill and judgment. In after years he usually filled this office in A. Campbell's absence.

After some discussion it was decided to enroll all the delegates present. Many congregations had sent regularly appointed messengers. Some brethren represented districts and co-operations of churches; others were delegates in a less formal way. The names enrolled showed, however, that these men were in the best sense the worthy representatives, not only of the brotherhood of the particular region whence they had come, but of our cause and people generallly.

There were enrolled 156 delegates, only 18 of whom were from Cincinnati and vicinity. The churches represented were 100, from 11 states. The minutes, however, show many names not in the enrollment. One state meeting sent messengers, that of Indiana, held at Indianapolis shortly before the convention.

The representation of our people was large considering our numbers at that time, and that the day of railroads west of the Alleghanies, where the great body of our brotherhood lived, was not yet. Many of the brethren came from long distances—from the Atlantic States, and from as far as New Orleans. Entire delegations made their journeys in the old-fashioned way, on horseback.

It will be of interest to record here the names of the most prominent men who constituted this memorable assembly, that the present generation may know who gave the first strong impulse to our organized missionary enterprises.

The messengers from the Indiana state meeting were John O'Kane, Elijah goodwin, George Campbell, J. B. New, L. H. Jameson, S.W. Leonard, M. Markes. There were besides from that state S. K. Hoshour, Milton B. Hopkins, Benjamin Franklin, John M. Bramwell. From the long list of churches I can note only a few represetatives: James Challen, D. S. Burnet, B. U. Watkins, James S. Mitchell, William Hayes, John T. Powell, J. J. Moss, James M. Henry, Jonas Hartzell, T. J. Murdock, William Pinkerton, from Ohio; Dr. John Shackleford, John Young, W. B. Mooklar, C. J. Smith, Dr. L. L. Pinkerton, William Morton, J. T. Johnson, R. C. Ricketts, H. T. Anderson, Carroll Kendrick, Waller Small, S. B. Bell, from Kentucky; Newton Short, Dr. J. T. Barclay, Prof. W. K. Pendleton, from Virginia; Robert B. Fife, W. H. Hopson, from Missouri; H. D. Palmer, from Illinois; Walter Scott, from Pennsylvania, and Richard Hawley, from Michigan.

Of such splendid material the convention of 1849 was composed. These names should not be forgotten. Brethren of the reformation, does our religious history know nobler men than this glorious company who came to represent you in this first national convention? Did these men understand the great cause for which we have now battled almost a century? Could any have had it at heart more than they?

An indication of the spirit of piety and of a deep earnestness of purpose that pervaded the convention is seen in the following resolution offered by the venerable William Morton, and passed with hearty unanimity, before any business was transacted:

"Resolved unanimously, That it is the duty of every member of this convention, in entering on the duties devolving upon him, to do so with the love of God in his heart, the fear of God before his mind, and with an eye single to his glory and the good of man; and that every personal and party feeling of pride, selfishness and worldly ambition be wholly laid aside."

THE WORK OF THE CONVENTION.

On Wednesday forenoon, Oct. 24th, the first report on the order of business was presented by Walter Scott. It was divided into three parts: 1. Evangelical matters; 2. Ecclesiastical matters; 3. Miscellaneous matters.

Under the first head the committee introduced three resolutions; the first recommended the American Christian Bible Society, now in the fourth year of its existence; it was organized in 1845. The second, "Resolved, That in the opinion of this convention the American Christian Bible Society should so change or arrange its constitution as to add a missionary department to be under the direction of its board, for the purpose of sustaining the proclamation of the gospel among the destitute in the United States and its territories first, and then in forign lands where its means will enable it to act officially in that department."

The third resolution was, "That this convention recommend to our churches, not to countenance as a preacher any man who is not sustained or acknowledged by two or more churches."

There had been much difference of opinion about the propriety of a separate Bible Society. In the judgment of many of our wisest men, among them A. Campbell, the American and Foreign Bible Society offered to us all we desired. A. Campbell was always on the liberal side of great questions like this one. The Bible, he held, was too universally the property of Christendom to justify a society for its safeguarding and distribution in our own hands. Yet such an institution had a strong support at that time among our brethren. The resolution was finally passed in the following form:

"Resolved, That the Bible Society, known by the name of the American Christian Bible Society, be and hereby is recommended by this convention to the cordial support of the brethren." In a few years, when the Bible Union entered upon its work, it was abolished, and we united heartily with the Baptists in this new enterprise. The Publication Society, likewise located at Cincinnati, met the same fate at last.

The third resolution, relative to unworthy preachers, expressed a widely prevailing concern among us at the time, and had been much discussed in our journals. Walter Scott said on this occasion, "I never feel so much like being angry, as when I am compelled to sit in the pulpit with men of doubtful character. I feel degraded by the contact." George Campbell, one of the delegates of the Indiana state meeting, said he had been especially instructed to try to secure the churches against such imposters and traveling vagrants. Carroll Kendrick finally offered this resolution:

"Resolved, That this convention recommends to the congregations, to countenance no evangelist who is not well reported of for piety and proper evangelical qualification; and that they be rigid and critical in the examination of such reports."

The convention, in discussing such questions and in passing resolutions on them, was extremely careful to assume no authority over the churches; this was constantly expressed. Nothing sets forth in clearer light the character of the men who constituted this assembly than their earnestness relative to the purity of the ministry. After much discussion the following preamble and resolution were agreed on and passed:

"Whereas, It appears that the cause of Christianity has suffered from the imposition of false brethren upon the churches; therefore—

"Resolved, That we recommend to the churches the inportance of great care and rigid examination before they ordain men to the office of the evangelist."

Immediately after this vote Carroll Kendrick's resolution was also passed.

As the question of unworthy preachers, from whom in our early years we had suffered much, was a matter not of local but of general concern, the convention from all quarters had been asked to consider it and offer its advice to the churches. Beyond all doubt the action of the convention had a very salutary effect on the churches.

An important fact should be noted here, as an instructive part of the history of this first national convention.

As stated in the introduction of this chapter, for a number of years the subject of organization, co-operation and edification had occupied with constantly increasing interest and urgency the minds of the thoughtful of our brotherhood. Many special questions, of more or less practical moment, had come to the front during this period of inquiry and discussion. Most, if not all of them, have long since been set at rest with the intelligent of our people.

When the subject of a general convention came to be discussed, many thought that such a convocation would be the opportune place to settle such matters, a capital occasion for a sort of morally authoritative deliverance on all subjects of dispute among us. And this effort was made at Cincinnati, but without any success.

It is gratifiying to me to be able to state here, that the admirable wisdom of the convention refused to entertain such questions, and confined the meeting strictly to the subjects legitimately before it—an admirable example to our national conventions to-day. Dr. Wayland bitterly complained in his day that the Baptist missionary assemblies were annoyed in the same way.

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

THE GOSPEL BY JOHN.

SAMUEL TRAUM.

The first six months of the Sunday-school lesson of the current year are taken from the book of John. To some of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the following observations may be of interest:

No criticism of the Gospels is more frequent than that of incoherency. With the possible exception of the book of Romans, the whole New Testament falls under ban for the same reason. The purpose of the present article is to show that no book is more orderly and logical in its development than the Gospel of John. The writer of the book declares his purpose in the following words: "These are written that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, and that believing ye may have life in his name" (Jno. 20:31). So clear are these words in declaring the purpose of this book that commentators generally have applied them to the books by Mathew, Mark and Luke as well.

Having found the avowed purpose of the book it only remains to retrospectively glance at its contents in order to test the author's fidelity to the task undertaken. It makes the test none the less forceful, should we learn that the purpose has been left undeclared until the end of the book has been reached.

Reverting, then, to the opening chapter, the divinity of Christ is openly affirmed. "In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God and the Word was God" (Jno. 1:1), "and the Word became flesh and dwelt among us" (Jno. 1:14). Since the book is thus to deal with divinity in the form of humanity, he submits such proof as the subsequent words provide.

He first gives John Baptist's testimony, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world"—a statement wholly unintelligible apart from Christ's divinity (Jno. 1-29).

The second chapter affords proof in his miracle-working power as evinced by this "beginning of miracles," but the same chapter shows Jesus' own testimony when, speaking of the temple of his body, he declared his power to raise it up three days after its destruction.

In chapter three, Nicodemus a ruler of the Jews says, "We know that thou art a a teacher come from God," yet Christ's own words (Jno. 3:16) are even stronger where he says: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life."

The fourth chapter is so manifestly plain that the merest mention of Christ's conversation with the Samaritan woman—especially his declaration, "I that speak unto thee am he"—carries with it the conviction that the Son of God has spoken, while in chapter five the verses 19 to 29 inclusive are so full of direct testimony to his divinity that the most cursory reader can but accept him as the Son of God or reject his words as blasphemy.

The miracle of the loaves and fishes in chapter six gives Jesus an opportunity to show forth the God that was in him, while on the next day when the multitude thronged about him he said, "I am the bread of life"—words meaningless apart from the acknowledgment of his divinity. "On the last day of the feast Jesus stood up and cried saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink" (Jno. 7:37), and again, "Therefore Jesus spake unto them saying, I am the light of the world" (Jno. 8:12), and again, "Except ye believe that I am he ye shall die in your sins" (Jno. 8:24). In asnwer to the question, "Dost thou believe in the Son of God?" the blind man who was healed said: "Lord, I believe" (Jno. 9:35-39).

"I am the Good Shepherd" and "I am the Resurrection and the Life," are Jesus' own declarations in chapters ten and eleven; whereas, in chapter twelve God says in answer to Christ's prayer to glorify God's name, "I have glorified and will glorify it again."

In the thirteenth chapter he appeals to his former power of prophecy: "I tell ye before it comes to pass that when it comes to pass ye may believe that I am he" (Jno. 13:19).

And then who but Jesus the Christ the Son of the living God could speak of the house of many mansions as in Jno. 14 shows? None other could say so truly as he, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." None else could claim the testimony of the Spirit so infallibly as he. And the prayer for union (Jno. 17) is in itself an incontestible proof of his divinity. Christ before Pilate says: "Thou sayest I am king," but "Christ and him crucified" as recorded in the nineteenth chapter, and the resurrection of Christ, narrated in chapter twenty, are in themselves the foundation of that gospel wherein we stand and whereby we are saved. There is no anti-climax here. God always saves the best for the last, so by his resurrection from the dead is Christ declared to be the Son of God with power (Rom. 1:4).

Meditating upon such a theme and knowing upon how firm a foundation the Christian's faith stands, is it any wonder that that disciple whom Jesus loved should give to others a reason for the hope within him, knowing that such testimony would in itself be the beginning of an endless life in others? Then, feeling how meagerly he had drawn upon the resources of an inexhaustible life, and how little, after all, he had told of that tireless energy that had for its object the manifestation of God, can we express any amazement at his conclusion that "there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written?"

Nevin, O.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC DOWN TO DATE.

FRANK G. TYRRELL.

Ministers sometimes blunder, both in choice of subjects and in manner of treating them; but is it a blunder to speak or write on any phase of the temperance question? Rather it is a blunder not to. In the first place, the Bible is aflame with warnings and denunciations. If, when liquor was mild and comparatively harmless, the prophets uttered their thrilling invective, what would they say to-day, when it has been adulterated and poisoned until it is literally fire-water? As teachers of Bible truth, ministers are bound to deal with this subject. The least they can do is to echo the voices of the prophets, and if they do this faithfully they will awaken the sleepy tipplers in their pews, stir the consciences of the license voters and, it may be, banish the wine glass from the sideboards of their parishioners.

Again, ministers should discuss this burning question, because it is a present-day evil. It is terribly aggressive. It fights for mastery. It is continually seeking out new victims, and Goliathlike, it defies the armies of the living God. Let the preacher who complains of empty pews grapple with this and other living issues in red-hot earnestness, and demand a settlement of them on the basis of righteourness, and his house will be crowded.

Once more, preachers should fight this business, because it is one of the greatest hindrances to evangelization. I do not believe it is such an obstacle as denominational divisions, but it is at least next in this particular in rank and power. It is itself a vice, and it inflames the vicious nature. It creates social conditions that make the preaching of the gospel well nigh valueless.

Like any other business, we may consider it from the standpoint of the dealer, the consumer and the state. As a business it is a copartnership between avarice and appetite. The manufacturer and the retailer are actuated by the same motives that inspire far too many men in legitimate business. It is the love of money, the desire to do, not the wise, the just, the righteous, but the gainful thing, that leads men into this business or that, and that leads the brewer and the saloonkeeper into their business. It is this baleful passion, greed of gain, that inspires the thief, the confidence man, the poker player, the race-track habitue, the stock gambler, the franchise grabber, the shrewd manipulator and the saloonkeeper. The only difference between the avarice at the manufacturer's desk or in the stock dealer's office or the merchant's store, and the avarice that smiles behind the bar and points triumphantly to a saloon license, is that the effects of the business promoted by the latter are worse than the former. I want avaricious men everywhere to see what a mean, contemptible, soul-shriveling thing avarice is.

The liquor dealer knows human weakness, and the fearful power of alcoholic drink to arouse and feed uncontrollable appetite. He sees that the business is profitable, and if he sees also the hellish results that must follow, he either closes his eyes to them or takes the absurd position that he is not responsible for the excesses of his customers. He knows that he possesses a sort of alchemy that will extract from the pockets of hard-working men their meagre earnings, impoverishing them and enriching him. He must know, too, that disease, insanity, pauperism, suicide, wrecked homes, slaughtered innocence, widows' sighs and orphans' tears are among the inevitable results of his business; but Mammon, "the least erected fiend that fell," has so far mastered and unmanned him that he can see all this and stand unmoved, like men inured to bloodshed in a slaughter-pen. Or he is benevolent (?).

No matter how abundant the supply, unless there is a demand for the goods, there can be no business, and hence no profits. Avarice on one side, the bar is socially harmless till appetite stands on the other.

Drinkers offer all sorts of excuses for the habit. At a meeting of Keeley-cured drunkards in New York, many of them explained how they had fallen. Here is a summary of their reasons: "Some had become drunkards because they had too much money, and others because they did not have enough. Some because they had to work too hard, and others because they were out of work. Some because they had gambled and lost, and others because they had gambled and won. Some because they had no children, and others because they had more children than they could support. Some because they were kept too closely tied to their mother's apron-strings when young, and others because too great freedom had been allowed them. Some because they had shrews of wives to drive them astray, and others because they had no wives to keep them straight. Some because they had no friends, and others because they had too many friends. Some because the weather was too hot, and others because the weather was too cold." Apparently, all roads lead to the saloon, and the saloon is the threshold to the pit! Abolish the saloon!

If strong drink contributes in any way to a man's strength, it corresponds, "not to the corn you give your horse, but to the whipping." There is stimulus in sitting on a wasp, but there is neither health nor comfort in it. "The drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty." The poorer the section, the plentier the saloons. Poverty, which is the result of this business, begs at our doors, preys upon our provident associations, fills the cheap lodging houses, snatches the lady's purse, assaults and robs the belated pedestrian, sneaks into unguarded homes, rails at the rich, curses the church, and finally staggers into the merciful oblivion of Potter's Field.

The moral consequences to the consumer are worse than the material and physical. He passes by slow stages from one degree of degradation to another, until he reels into a drunkard's grave and to the dark despair of the eternally lost, for it is written: "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God."

The license tax dulls the vision of some good people to the true mathematics of the situation. The amount of tax paid is a mere bagatelle compared to the enormous burden the business binds upon the state; that is, upon the industrious and productive taxpayer. A most effective method of prohibition would be to charge upon the business, not a license tax, but the entire consequences of the business, so far as they can be measured in dollars and cents. Drink shortens life. If a citizen dies prematurely through drink, let the business be charged with the support of his family for the remainder of his expectancy. If in a drunken frenzy a citizen commits murder, let the business pay to the state the cost of his incarceration, trial and execution; so with reference to all the crimes committed through drink, and the losses suffered, directly or indirectly. Here is business for the Liquor Dealers' Benevolent Association; let them take care of the widows and orphans, the idiots, imbeciles, lunatics and paupers their proud business produces, and we will excuse them from any license fee.

It would be entirely just and sane for the mass of sober, temperate citizens to claim exemption from all such taxation, and insist that the burden be placed upon the shoulders of the men who have profited by the business that rolled it up. This would eat up all the profits, and more; the business could no longer command capital and this age-long sore of political economy would be dried up.

All legitimate businesses are logically against the whiskey business. It impoverishes thousands of people; that means that it destroys their purchasing power. The earnings that ought to go for wholesome food, medical attention, warm clothing, hats, boots and shoes, books, pictures, well-furnished homes, etc., is all absorbed by the liquor oligarchy. Verily, great is Gambrinus! The more saloons the fewer sales and the longer the list of bad debts in any legitimate business. The family of a brewer or a saloonkeeper can never be as profitable customers as the hundred or the thousand families that have to support the liquor baron.

I have not mentioned the losses entailed on the business world because of drunkenness. Who can count the wrecks, the collisions, the disasters by land and sea? The center of political power in the community is always the saloon, never the church. The liquor dealer has more gumption than the average church member; he knows where his interests lie, and looks after them. A state in which nine-tenths of the citizens are professedly Christian elects drunkards to legislate for them—a sad case of the tail wagging the dog!

If want and wretchedness, disease, filth, squalor, the cries of the wronged and the anguish of the unavenged are lamentable, what shall we say of the business that produces them? If vice is abhorrent, if drunkenness is beastly, if robbery, bribery, lechery and murder are outlawed, what shall we do with the business that produces them? If grinding poverty, wasteful sickness, pitiful lunacy, and the pale terror of the rash suicide make the blood run cold, what must be the effect of contemplating the business that is chiefly responsible for these?

THE EXPANSION OF CHRISTENDOM.

A. MCLEAN.

The expansion of Christendom is the marvel if not the miracle of modern times. Three centuries ago 7 per cent. of the globe was under the rule of Christian powers and 93 per cent. was under the rule of non-Christian powers. Now the Christian powers control 82 per cent. and the non-Christian powers control only 18 per cent. One-fourth of the surface of the globe is subject to the control of Christian England. China is the only great nation that is outside the sphere of Christendom. China is certain to be partitioned as Africa has been partitioned unless she speedily adjusts herself to the requirements of the age.

The industrial expansion is as remarkable as the territorial. Manufacturers and merchants are pushing their wares in all directions. There is no speech or language where their agents are not found. There are steamboats on all the lakes in Central Africa. The same is true of the rivers of China. The day is not far distant when a railway will extend from Alexandria to Cape Town. Japan and India are covered with networks of railways. In China three thousand miles of railways are projected and will be built in the near future. In remote provinces people are wearing clothes that came from Christian lands. They light their homes with American lamps and oil. Watches and clocks and plows and machinery of all kinds are being imported by peoples whose existence was not known a century ago.

The intellectual expansion is no less remarkable than the territorial and the industrial. In India three millions of youths are in school. Calcutta has more students in her institutions of learning than any other city in the world. Newspapers are issued in English and in the vernaculars. These are widely circulated and widely read. Japan has opened schools in all parts of the empire. The desire of the rulers is that there shall not be an ignorant family in any village or an ignorant member in any family. A century ago Japan did not have a single newspaper; now she has seven hundred; Tokio alone has seventeen dailies. China is awakening from the slumber of ages. She has made more progress in the last two years than in the millennium preceding. Western science is taught in her schools. The Bible is used as a text-book. Papers are printed and read as never before. Books are bought with unprecedented avidity. A new day has dawned upon that land and people. The reforms proposed by the Emperor have been modified somewhat, but they must go on. The Empress might as well try to arrest the tides on the sea or the sun in his course as to arrest these reforms. In all parts of the world schools are being opened and literature is being circulated.

The moral expansion is not less significant. All questions are discussed from the standpoint of Christian ethics. In Japan, for example, the papers are discussing the question of concubinage. They are discussing it as papers in America and Europe would. The fact that the Emperor and the great nobles are the main culprits does not affect the character of the discussion. The status and education of women are discussed, not from the non-Christian but from the Christian point of view. Questions relating to the criminal classes and the poor and the unfortunate, and questions relating to labor and capital and those relating to childhood are, in all lands where they are discussed at all, discussed from the view-point of the Christian moralists. The writers may not be Christian men; many of them are not; but they are under the control of Christian sentiment, and they write accordingly.

Now is the time to press into these lands with the gospel. Now is the time to set up our banner in the name of the Lord. Some of the leaders of thought in China are talking of making Christianity the religion of the state. In Japan the same thing has been suggested. A thoughtful man gives it as his opinion that India will accept the faith of her conquerors as she has accepted their commerce and industry. It is not likely that will be done; little if anything would be gained if it were done. But it shows the mental attitude of the people towards Christianity. The people of these lands recognize that their only hope is in accepting the gospel of Jesus Christ. They are inquiring about it as never before and are manifesting a degree of friendliness such as no one in the past dared to expect.

Christian people should see their opportunity and, as never before, send out competent workers and send them in sufficient numbers to help mold the new civilization of all these lands and win these vast populations to the belief and obedience of the truth. This is the nick of time. The workers in the field should be reinforced. The recruits should be thoroughly equipped for the high service to which God in his providence is calling them. The whole church should have fellowship in this great enterprise.

CAN THE BARRIER WHICH INFANT BAPTISM PRESENTS TO CHRISTIAN UNION BE SURMOUNTED?—V.

BY REV. JAMES M. CAMPBELL.

Something of this thoroughgoing work of religious education is imperatively demanded in the present day. In an age of intellectual activity an intelligent type of religious life is needed. Perhaps in no other thing is the church of to-day so weak as in the religious instruction of the young. There is virtually nothing done by the church for the religious education of her children beyond what is done in a hasty hour each week in the Sunday-school. The young people who outgrow the Sunday-school are left to shift for themselves instead of being thoroughly trained for religious work. When their minds are callow and their judgment unformed the work that belongs to those who are of mature experience, is put into their hands. They are leaders when they ought to be learners. The church ought to be a training school. No more pressing duty lies upon her than that of supplying this missing link of the education of the children under her care.

Cotton Mather in his day bewailed the neglect of infant baptism because of the neglect of the spiritual instruction of the young, which to his mind was manifestly implied in the right observance of that ordinance. He pathetically complains that "the old generation could not, without many uncomfortable apprehensions, behold their offspring excluded from the baptism of Christianity, and from the ecclesiastical inspection which is to accompany that baptism; indeed, it was to leave their offspring under the shepherding government of our Lord Jesus Christ in his ordinances that they brought their lambs into the wilderness." (Magnalia Vol. 2, page 277.) The ground which Cotton Mather sought in infant baptism for the enforcement of the duty of the religious instruction of the young is found in infant consecration. The parents who have brought their children to the church for consecration have a right to expect the co-operation of the church in strengthening them in the work of bringing up a godly seed, who shall serve the Lord when those who are now bearing the burden and heat of the day have passed on to their eternal reward. The responsibility of the church for the providing of adequate instruction and training for the children, who have been consecrated at her altar, cannot be lightly ignored or shaken off.

(8) The substitution of infant consecration for infant baptism would help also to re-emphasize one of the most neglected truths of Christianity, to wit, the relation of the family to Christian economy. The family is the social unit. It is not only the foundation of the whole social system, it is also the foundation of the Christian system. We have come to give so much prominence to individualism that the relation of the family to God's scheme of salvation is scarcely any longer thought of, and yet no Scripture truth shines out more luminously than that families in their corporate character sustain peculiar relations to God—relations which imply peculiar advantage and responsibilities. God is not only the God of individuals, he is also the God of "all the families of the earth." It is worthy of special note that the first gospel promises had relation to families rather than to individuals. To Abraham God said, "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." This idea underlies the entire Jewish system. With a Jewish parent it was a fundamental thought that his entire household was included with him in all the covenant blessings of the theocracy.

The law of the family covenant remains unrepealed. Evolution, and not revolution, is the principle according to which God's idea of a holy society is unfolded. Hence, to the Jewish mind the leaving of the family out of the Christian system would have stamped it as inferior to Judaism; and nothing short of an express declaration to the contrary could have led any Jewish convert to imagine that from the benefits of the new dispensation his family was excluded. Nowhere do we find a single hint of such a radical change. On the day of Pentecost the Old Testament pledge, "I will be a God unto thee and thy seed after thee," was reiterated in the words, "The promise is unto you and your children." Jehovah himself expressly declares that the end for which he ordained the family institution was that he might secure "a godly seed" (see Mal. 2:15), or a "seed of God," as the margin has it; that is, a seed that should bear God's image, be employed in his service and be devoted to his honor and glory. Out of the idea of the covenant relation in which the family stands to God grew the beautiful custom of family worship. The prime reason why the practice of family worship has of late years declined in truly Christian homes is not that the sons are less devout than their fathers were, but that they have come to have a weakened sense of the relation of the family as such to the Christian economy. There may be as much religion in the family as ever, but there is less family religion. The revival most needed to-day is a revival of home religion, leading to the rekindling of extinguished home altar-fires. Nothing will tend more to secure this result than a deepening of the conviction on the part of parents that their children belong to God, and nothing will tend more to deepen that conviction than to give it expression in some definite act of infant consecration.

It is in this covenant relation of families to the kingdom of God that many find their strongest support for infant baptism. They reason that if it were the divine intention that infants should be baptized, no express command was needed; whereas, if it were intended that they should be excluded from participation in the rite, some intimation to that effect was imperatively required. This argument is founded upon the assumption that the baptism of proselytes and their children was a Jewish rite. But in the face of the declaration of such an eminent authority as "The Encyclopædia Britannica," that the subject of the baptism of proselytes is one of the most hopelessly obscure in the whole round of Jewish antiquities, and can never be safely assumed in any argument (Vol. 3, page 349), it is hardly wise to build an edifice of dogmatic assertion upon such an uncertain foundation.

Of the same nature is the argument founded upon the New Testament instances of the baptism of households. Of these there are five, viz., the baptism of the households of Lydia, of the Philippian jailer, of Crispus, of Stephanas, and by implication of Cornelius. The question to be determined is whether or not there were children in any of these households. That there were children in some of them is highly probable; but this can never be established. In the case of the jailer it is said that Paul and Silas "spake the word of the Lord unto him, with all that were in his house." And after the baptism of his entire household it is recorded that the jailer "rejoiced greatly with his house, having believed in God." In the case of Crispus, the ruler of the synagogue, it is expressly stated that "he believed in the Lord with all his house." There is sufficient reason for the warning of Neander "against inferring the existence of infant baptism from the instances of the baptism of whole families." The possible fallacy of such a conclusion being shown, he thinks, by a reference to 1 Cor. 16:15, where Paul says of the household of Stephanas, whom he had baptized, that they "set themselves to minister unto the saints," his words implying that they had reached the years of accountability, and knew what they were about.

When the question of infant consecration is freed from entanglement with the question of infant baptism, we reach common standing-ground. That our children ought to be dedicated to God and brought up to his service we all admit. Surely, then, some place ought to be found in the public service of the church for the consecration of the child. There is no awkward hiatus in God's plan. Not a fragment of life, but the whole of it, is to be given to him. Until the sweet story of Samuel's consecration has been expunged from the pages of Scripture we will believe that he, who in ancient days claimed the firstlings of the flock, and the first fruits of the earth, claims the first years of our human life, and wishes to have his claim recognized in every possible way.

In the present day we have been providentially prepared for some forward movement in this direction. The coronation of childhood has taken place. The child is set in the midst. Childhood is recognized as the prophetic power in church and state. Corregio's picture, "The Holy Night," in which the light of the babe illumines the surrounding figures, is a true representation of the place of power which the child occupies. The wise men of to-day bow before the manger. The Christ-child rules the world. The Babe of Bethlehem—the type of unsullied purity—makes all other babes more dear. And that Babe in whom all other babes are blessed, like all other Jewish babes, was taken by his parents to the temple and consecrated to the Lord, with thankofferings. As he grew up he was instructed in the law and participated in the religious feasts, such as the passover, and in public acts of worship. Throughout his thirty years of silence and growth at Nazareth it was his wont to attend the synagogue and listen to the reading and expounding of the Old Testament Scriptures. He learned to fulfill all righteousness up to and in his baptism, when he assumed his priestly duties and entered upon his divine mission.

But remember that the initial point in his religious life was his consecration in infancy. And surely we cannot go far astray if, under our changed conditions, in ways deemed most befitting, we imitate the example of Joseph and Mary in the public consecration of our offspring to God.

(CONCLUDED.)

Our Budget.

—Now is the time of the harvest for the Foreign Missionary offering.

—All signs point to a generous outpouring of gifts for this holy work.

—We give elsewhere some good news on this subject. See what others are doing and do likewise.

—Remember, the time for the offering continues until you take it. If you missed it last Sunday, attend to it the next.

—Nothing is more remarkable or more gratifying in our history than the unmistakable growth of the missionary spirit. It means expansion.

—In response to a stirring appeal by Bro. Tyrrell, of the Central Christian Church, Sunday morning, $500 was offered for the work of Foreign Missions. And yet, the church needs a new building and several other things. Even this amount may grow to larger proportions.

—Among the offerings that made up this amount at the Central, $25.00 was from the Christian Endeavor Society, $25.00 from the Sunday-school, and $25.00 from the Ladies' Aid Society, neither of which organization regards itself as "co-ordinate" with the church.

—Let the whole country congratulate St. Louis. She closed her saloons last Sunday and put twelve of her saloonkeepers behind the bars for attempting to violate the law. This is the result of some practical work among the friends of temperance and prohibition.

—The fight, however, has only begun, for a determined effort will be made, no doubt, both in the state legislature and in the courts to defeat prohibition, even for one day in the week. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty from the thralldom of the liquor traffic.

—J. K. Speer, of Clinton, Mo., makes the following proposition to all ministers:

For the year 1899 let each of us send one-fifth of all our marriage fees to Howard Cole, Indianapolis, Ind., for the relief of our old preachers. I will do it. Will you? This will help replenish that fund.

—The C. W. B. M. will observe the last week of March as a season of self-denial and prayer preparatory to an Easter offering for the Lord's work in their hands.

—Concerning the Standard editorial we desire to say that it was in no way official nor semi-official, and we have asked Bro. Lord to say as much in this week's paper, which he has promised to do. This being true, the suggestion that the acting board or its secretaries would attempt to interdict the brotherhood from any independent movement the brotherhood might plan to make, is without foundation. The acting board has not had a meeting since the 19th of last December, and of course, have taken no such action.

BENJ. L. SMITH,
C. C. SMITH.

The above statement is the more important because many were led by the semi-official tone of the Standard's editorial to suppose it was an official statement of the board. One of the Standard's own staff of writers wrote us immedately after the appearance of the article saying, "I see from the last Standard that the board has submitted its statement of the case," etc. It is important to know that it is not the board that has attempted to throttle the efforts of the Endeavor Societies to secure Bro. Tyler's services.

—The storm that prevailed in many states on last Sunday has greatly interfered with the offering for Foreign Missions and renewed effort will be necessary to prevent great loss and serious embarrassment to our foreign board and the cause of Foreign Missions. Let every church that was defeated in making an offering or had their plans interfered with redouble their diligence to recover the loss. Do not fail to take the offering at the earliest date.

—It is not enough that an offering is made for Foreign Missions. It should be promptly forwarded to the treasurer. Sometimes money is given and the treasurer fails to forward it at the time. After a little the money is put into the general treasury or used for some special purpose, and the intentions of the donors are defeated.

—It should be borne in mind that the present year is to be a notable one in the history of our people. It is proposed to celebrate the jubilee of our organized missionary work by contributing more generously than ever before to all departments of it. The Foreign Society is enlarging its field of operations. Led on by what it believes to be a call of God, it proposes to enter Cuba and the Philippines. New workers must be sent to other fields to enter the open doors there. Every step in advance means an additional outlay. The friends of the cause of Foreign Missions should bear these facts in mind when they make their offerings. They should not only contribute to the work, but they should pray that the workers may be guided and prospered and made efficient.

—The Foreign Society has secured one man for Cuba. Melvin Menges, now of Stanford, Ill., expects to begin work in Havana within a few months. A suitable asscíate is needed. Cuba, as is well known, is in the tropics. Whoever goes there should be possessed of a robust constitution and the very best of health. Even then the climate will be exceedingly trying. Earnest and continual prayer to God should be offered that the right man may be found for that particular field, and that suitable men may be sent for the Philippines and for the other fields.

—A. I. Myhr, corresponding secretary of the Tennessee State Board of Missions, has started a paper of which he is the editor. The paper is called the Tennessee Standard, and is published at Cincinnati by the Christian Standard Publishing Co. Vol. I., No. 2, is before us and we find it an attractive, promising journal.

—Already, we learn through Secretary Baer, the program for the Detroit Convention is taking shape and a great meeting is expected. Only an outline of the program is yet completed, but we learn that C. B. Newman, of Detroit, is to represent the pastors in the principal address of welcome; Prof. Morehead, of Zenia, O., and Prof. Willett, of Chicago, will conduct two daily Bible study hours. Quite a number of our own strong men who have never appeared on a Christian Endeavor National Convention program will be heard at Detroit. There is to be an outing down the river to Belle Isle; there are to be rallies; there is to be a Quiet Hour each morning, and all the great features of an Endeavor convention with some new ones added. It is time to begin to get ready for Detroit.

—We print this week the concluding part of the address of Rev. J. M. Campbell, delivered at the Macatawa Assembly last year. We think our readers will agree with us that the paper is a most noteworthy one, coming from a scholarly, devout and widely known minister and author of the great Congregational body. The freedom from party spirit, the willingness to concede what is not bound upon us by New Testament authority, the desire for Christian unity, the love of the truth, are features of the paper, which cannot fail to commend themselves to our readers. We cannot hope, of course, that the great body of Pedobaptists will agree with Mr. Campbell in the position he has taken. We do not doubt, however, that if there were the same freedom to speak out one's true convictions among all Pedobaptist ministers, which Mr. Campbell has manifested, there would be very many more than we imagine who hold the same view. On the other hand, it is altogether probable that those of us who insist on believers' baptism as the only scriptural baptism—both Baptists and Disciples of Christ—have often failed to appreciate the feeling and motive which have led to the practice of what is known as infant baptism. That there is a tender and true sentiment lying behind it is not to be doubted, though we must hold, of course, that that sentiment has found expression in a way that antagonizes or neutralizes believers' baptism. Mr. Campbell says that this is not necessary; that we may give expression to this sentiment in a way that would be most wholesome and profitable without coming in conflict with any requirements of the gospel. Who can object to infant consecration? We believe the scene in which parents and friends, with the man of God, devoutly consecrating a young life to the service of God, the parents pledging themselves to the religious training of the child, would be one upon which heaven's blessing and benediction would rest. Surely, if this custom, as a free and voluntary act, performed in the exercise of our Christian liberty and in harmony with the spirit of the New Testament, would assist in the removal of an obstacle to Christian union, no one ought to hesitate. We thank Mr. Campbell for his paper, and commend its spirit and purpose, not only to our own readers, but to all who are seeking to promote the unity for which the Master prayed.

—Of all the pens now writing against Mormonism probably there is none more trenchant and drastic than that of R. B. Neal, of Grayson, Ky. This is evident from the effort that has been and is being made by Mormon leaders to destroy the force of his arguments in his articles, sermons and especially in his tracts. If you are at all alarmed at the presence of Mormonism and its fruits in our land, and since its shadow is now thrown over the entire nation by the election of a polygamist to a seat in the next Congress, every non-Mormon should be (so alarmed), we recommend to your carefnl reading tracts number one, two and three, written and published by Bro. Neal. The evidence compiled in these tracts is of the most convincing character as to the nature of Mormonism and the inner life of its leaders. These tracts are sold cheap for their size and contents, and should be scattered far and wide to counteract the renewed effort of Mormonism to gain renewed life and power in the midst of our nation and homes. Send for Bro. Neal's tracts.

—The 44th annual report of the board of education of this city, a copy of which we have just received, places the enrollment of children in the public schools of St. Louis for 1898 at 81,917 and the number of employed teachers at 1,601. The salaries of these teachers last year amounted to $985,884.97. It may also be stated that there has been less talk about corruption in the school board and fewer criticisms by the people and in the press of the city than for years previous. This together with the facts cited in the report leads one to believe that the schools of this city are now in good hands and in a prosperous condition.

—From present indications the members of the next Congress in every state will be strongly petitioned by the people to prevent the seating of Brigham H Roberts, polygamist elect from Utah. The Reform Bureau at Washington, D. C., Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent, is sending out petitions for this purpose to all parts of the country, but should any desiring them not receive one, a card to Rev. Crafts will bring as many as you want Or a letter to your congressman will do as well. This is not a persecution of Mr. Roberts on account of his religion, but an effort to prevent a forced recognition or endorsement of polygamy on the part of the nation by recognizing a polygamist and a law-breaker as one of the country's representatives in the halls of Congress. We do not believe that the people of the United States are ready to submit to such a comment upon its morals.

—The Register-Review, Kansas City, is now domiciled at 1123 Oak Street and printed on its own new press. We are glad of this indication of the R.-R.'s prosperity.

—The church news reported in the Kansas Messenger for March show that the Kansas churches are not behind in the renewed activities of the Jubilee Year. The Kansas Messenger is a well-edited paper, representing all departments and interests of the churches of Kansas. It has recently removed to 1221 Clay St., Topeka, where it extends a welcome to all visiting friends. This number of the Messenger contains an excellent picture of the lamented J. H. Bauserman, who for years was so closely identified with the work in that state.

—The 20th Century New Testament editorially mentioned in our columns a few weeks ago can be had of Mowbray House, Temple W. C., London, England. It ought to be in New York by this time. But forty cents sent to the above address will secure a copy by post. Bro. J. J. Haley says that it is well liked by all who have examined it. "They are delighted with it."

—Butler College and Depauw University held an intercollegiate debate at Greencastle last week, the subject being the permanent annexation of the Philippines. Depauw affirmed and Butler denied. Butler won the debate, and the students jubilated over the victory after their return home. A member of the Butler faculty writes: "Their speakers were better orators than ours, but ours were the better debaters." We think, too, the Butler boys had the better side of the question. The Fillipinos should have their independence as soon as they are ready for it.

—A Cuban correspondent in one of our dailies reports that, contrary to American expectation, Cuban sentiment is almost unanimous in favor of independence as soon as they can organize an efficient government. This is exactly what we would have expected. Why should they not desire independence? For our part we should think less of them if they did not prefer the political independence of their island as soon as they are capable of maintaining order and establishing justice under free institutions. It is the plainest common sense, however, for both Cubans and Fillipinos to co-operate with the United States in bringing about such a condition of things.

—In an article in Christian Standard, by H. W. Myrick, on the burning question, "What Ought Our Papers to Publish," the writer reaches the following conclusion: "Our papers ought to publish articles, written by brethren, setting forth and defending 'our teaching and practice.' If people want 'liberal' articles, both sides of questions, let them take papers of that character." The writer then cites a violation of this rule in the case of "one of our papers" which is actually publishing an "address by a Congregational minister on infant baptism, in which he advocates as a means of Christian union some form of infant dedication to take the place of infant baptism." Think of it! "Our papers," the writer adds, "should be conducted in the interest of our people." And this in the paper founded by Isaac Errett! If any one thinks the battle against sectarianism in our own ranks is over, and that there is no longer need for sharp reproof for bigotry and narrowness, let him read such utterances not infrequent now in some of our religious journals, and apparently welcomed by them. Thank God, there is an increasing host among us who are not ready to wall themselves in and become a miserable, narrow sect; who believe in the triumphant power of truth and are not afraid to hear "both sides;" who maintain the same love of liberty and independence which marked the earlier period of the Reformation. To this class the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST confidently makes its appeal.

—On last Saturday morning our city papers announced that "our" police board had decided to enforce the Newberry (Sunday closing) law and had instructed the police department to see that every saloon in the city was closed "fore and aft," top and bottom, star and larboard sides, from twelve o'clock Saturday night to twelve o'clock Sunday night. At this writing we cannot give results, but we can remark. In the first place, we wish to say that this action on the part of the police board was probably the result of recent complaints from the prohibition, anti-saloon and temperance organizations of the city and the approaching municipal election. But we are already told that the saloons will try the constitutionality of this law in our courts. What guardians of our constitution these liquor traffic men are, anyway! But we have another remark to make. It seems strange that our officials have not the sense, the honesty, or the moral courage, we will not say which, to enforce our laws in relation to good order, decency and temperance, until requested to do so by the decent people of the city. What were they appointed or elected for, anyway? But if requests will bring the enforcement of our laws, let us have the requests.

—The Christian Oracle is doing a good thing in stirring up the people of Illinois to the better endowment of Eureka College. A recent editorial urged the importance of this enterprise upon the Illinois brotherhood, and subsequently a number of writers have taken up the theme, and it is to be hoped that some practical steps may be taken to complete a work already auspiciously begun. It is rather a reproach to the brotherhood in the great state of Illinois that it has not given more generous support to this institution. No institution among us has made a better record with the means at its command, and under the administration of President Hardin the college seems to have entered upon a new and better era.

—At our preachers' meeting in this city, on last Monday, a petition was officially signed requesting our congressman to use his utmost influence to effect the unseating of Brigham H. Roberts, congressman-elect from Utah, on account of his confessed polygamy, and we trust such action will be taken not only by all preachers' associations in the United States, but by all good, law-abiding citizens, both men and women. We cannot afford to have this blot upon our national record. This country is not yet ready to exchange its homes for Turkish harems, nor even by silent recognition of this confessed polygamist seat in Congress to thus seemingly endorse or wink at this evil.

—The meeting at the First Christian Church, in this city grows in crowds and interest notwithstanding the inclement weather. Dr. J. Z. Tyler is doing excellent work in preaching the Word, and is awakening renewed spiritual activities in the church. They could hardly care for the people that came to hear him on last Sunday and Sunday night, so great was the throng. Of course Bro. Fannon knows how to second Dr. Tyler's work and to turn it to the best account for the cause of Christ in St. Louis. They have had 21 additions to date.

—The program of the Christian Ministerial Association, which meets at Huntsville, Mo., March 22, 23, appears in this paper. Do not forget that the Missouri Christian Lectureship meets at the same place during the same week.

—The Texas Baptist Herald displays good taste in quoting under "What We Contend For," our lines beginning—

"For the right against the wrong."

But it does not show the very highest shade of journalistic courtesy in failing to give the proper credit. Since the Baptists of Texas have gotten far enough along to quote from our platform of principles in making one for themselves, we may cherish the hope that the day of unity draweth on apace.

—By the way, we see the Baptist Herald is leading a fight against what it calls "the Board Party," among the Baptists of Texas. It quotes from one of the Board's champions this warlike statement: "It must be understood that if any man opposes the methods employed in the organized work the knife must be put to the throat!" That is very sanguinary language, even if we interpret it metaphorically. Let us hope that this internecine war among Texas Baptists may not prove infectious and involve other religious bodies.

—Memphis, Tenn., is following in the wake of Lexington, Ky., and other cities in the matter of municipal and social reforms. W. D. Rice, pastor of the Linden Street Church, of that city, recently preached a sermon on the morals of the city that created wide and deep interest. The sermon was published in the Commercial Appeal in that city on the Monday following, or Feb. 27th, and is a bold and strong presentation of the evils which are common to our cities. We are glad to see this agitation extending and hope for the day when the Christian people will rise up and demand better municipal governments and a purer society in our cities.

—I write to express my appreciation of Prof. Loos' contributions on the "Reformation of the Nineteenth Century." I regard them of especial value and feel sure that they will be read with deep interest by our people everywhere. I hope that you will encourage him to give us (at length) the benefit of his full knowledge and recollection of the men and events connected with the movement in its infancy.

I have great regard for him (and have had much cause to love him), but apart from that, I think that he is better qualified than any one else to write of the early fathers and their struggles. His unusual acquaintance with matters which the coming antiquarian will investigate should cause us to solicit his services to put them on record with the charm and vigor of his own style.

I should like a chapter or two also on the days of old Bethany—something of his experience as a student. I mention this because the college did not exist during the period you assigned to him (1809-1819).

Fraternally yours,
DAVID OWEN THOMAS.

Clergyman's Statement

Nerve Strength Gained by Taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

BRIGHTON, IOWA.—Rev. Bernard M. Shulick of this place, owing to weakness of the nerves, was for a time unable to attend to his duties. He makes this statement: "I have suffered for a long time from weak nerves. After I had taken a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla I became quite well again. The weakness of the nerves has now wholly disappeared and I am able to attend to my duties again. I am therefore grateful to Hood's Sarsaparilla and I recommend it to everyone who suffers from weak nerves."

—The editor of this paper spent last Lord's day in Chicago, and had the pleasure in the morning of attending the West Side Church, of which Bruce Brown is the pastor, and in the evening the Union Christian Church at the Institute, of which J. H. O. Smith is pastor. The West Side Church had just concluded a series of evangelistic services, in which the pastor was aided part of the time by H. A. Northcutt, resulting in 104 additions. The revival spirit had not subsided, for after a plain but earnest discourse by Bro. Brown, five or six others came forward and confessed their faith in Christ. The whole service—the singing, the communion, praying, Scripture reading and preaching—had in it the fervor of a live, religious church. Bro. Smith had a large company at the Institute. He, too, had been in a protracted meeting for several weeks, beginning with some outstation and concentrating at last at the splendid auditorium of the Institute. There had been, altogether, in all these meetings, near two hundred additions. We have seldom heard Bro. Smith make a stronger appeal than he did in his discourse that evening on, "Why a Christian Only?" Monday we met with our preachers in Chicago and vicinity, in their meeting in one of the palors of the Palmer House. About 25 were present—a wide-awake lot of preachers, too—and a fine paper was read by Prof. Barton, of the University of Chicago, on "The Interpretation of the Bible," and an interesting discussion followed.

—I regret very much that this controversy has come up over employing Bro. Tyler as superintendent of our Christian Endeavor Societies. Controversy is always unpleasant and causes much misunderstanding. But, my brother, you are free from censure in the position you have taken and in what you have written. As usual, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST breathes that catholic spirit which has always been one of its chief characteristics.

W. J. RUSSELL.

Thanks, Bro. Russell; but you cannot regret more than we the controversy to which you refer. It was not of our seeking or making. One of the well-known features of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is its occasional symposiums on subjects of current interest in the brotherhood. A few weeks ago we had a symposium containing expressions of opinion from brethren, pro and con, on the the subject of Christian Endeavor, and particularly on the point as to whether Bro. Tyler should be secured for his whole time. We called for no pledges. We asked for the freest expression of sentiment. This course of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has given offense to the Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, and its editor has seen proper to bring charges against the editor of this paper, which we have felt it our duty to deny. We hardly see how we could have done less. There needed to have been no controversy whatever, but we did not precipitate it, and we have written nothing in reply for which we can blame ourselves in the least.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Evangelist H. A. Northcutt will begin a meeting in Savannah, Ga., next Sunday, Feb. 28, 1899.

J. W. Lowber, of Austin, Tex., is now delivering a series of chapel talks at the University of Texas on "The Beatitudes of Christ."

Any church in need of a "young, wide-awake, energetic pastor," is requested to write immediately to H. W. M., Box 105, Cornell, Ill.

H. A. Easton, singer, is now assisting State Secretary J. Fred Jones in a meeting in Indianola, Ill. They hope to organize a church. Pastors or evangelists desiring his services, address him at Danville, Ill.

The Jessamine Journal, Nicholasville, Ky., highly compliments an address recently delivered in that city on the occasion of the 36th anniversary of the Knights of Pythias, by Elder Robt. G. Frank.

R. H. Lampkin, now pastor of the church at Clutesburg, Ky., speaks hopefullv of the outlook in his new field and hopes for a prosperous work this year. He will not forget to circulate the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in his new field.

J. W. Strawn has concluded a two years' pastorate with the church at Miama, Mo., and removes from there to Moberly, Mo. While at Miama a good church house was built. Bro. Strawn will supply preaching for congregations within reach of Moberly desiring a preacher.

Dr. Dickie, the pastor of the American Church in Berlin, is on a visit to this country to secure additional funds for the erection of a new church building in that city. In his absence Dr. H. L. Willett has been invited to occupy the pulpit a portion of the time.

The Christian Visitor, edited by J. W. Holsapple, and published by and for the Central Christian Church, Sherman, Tex., is instructive and newsy and will doubtless be of great help in church work. The contents of No. 3, Vol. I, just to hand, shows the marks of a careful hand at the helm.

Sister Boothe, of Mt. Vernon, Mo., whose obituary will be found in this paper, was widely known among our preachers for her devotion to the cause of Christ and her interest in the welfare of others. She has been a constant reader of this paper from its beginning, and as constant in her activities in the Master's work. She will be greatly missed, but she has gone to her heavenly reward.

Luther R. Campbell, Brookhaven, Miss., has begun the publication of a monthly magazine of twelve pages, called the Chart Instructor. No. 2 of Vol. I is just to hand and contains four charts designed to aid in the understanding of certain religious and biblical propositions. In addition to the charts there is considerable editorial matter, notes, etc. The Chart Instructor is published by Harry Jordan, at Mocasin, Tenn., at the price of 50 cents per year.

C. F. Thompson, who has been a preacher in the Baptist Church here for about ten years, united with the Christian Church at Mena, Ark., Feb. 26, 1899, and will devote himself to the ministry among the Disciples of Christ. He is commended for his work's sake by Frederick F. Wyatt, pastor of the First Christian Church at Mena, which is also the address of Bro. Thompson. Bro. Thompson will be glad to respond to any calls for help, either as a pastor or as an evangelist.

One of the most successful protracted meetings yet reported this winter, for the time, is that just closed at Evansville, Ind., by Charles Reign Scoville. In a meeting of 25 days he reports 234 additions; 134 last week, 57 last day and 51 additions at the last service. Evans' Hall with a seating capacity of "over 1,000" crowded and the whole city has been thoroughly arroused over the meeting. Bro. Scoville begins with Bro. Lynn, at Springfield, Ill., this week.

S. K. Hallam, now of Roswell, New Mexico, in a note accompanying a letter which will be published next week, says:

"Capt. D. H. Clark, a retired army officer, lives here. He and our late Japanese missionary, C. E. Garst, were classmates at West Point, and coming West as young lieutenants married the Colonel's daughters. Sister Garst on her sad journey home with her three children is now here visiting her sister. I had a brief interview with her when I called Lord's day afternoon. She kindly promised some facts from the missionary sermon next Lord's day. Her strong faith and heroic endurance of her great loss are an inspiration to any one in the cause of missions. But for her children that now need her care so much, she would have remained in the field to which she hopes to return when they are old enough to go with her. Bro. and Sister Clark are among our active workers."

Letter from Constantinople.

EDITORS CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I am glad to say that our first missionary journey with Bro. Chapman has been to the dedication of the house of worship of the Church of Christ in Giol Dagh, which took place on Lord's day, January 22d, in the peesence of nearly three hundred people. Giol Dagh, which means mountain lake, is wholly an Armenian village of about four hundred houses perched on one of the rocky hills of the broken country of Asia Minor about sixty miles east of Nicomidia. My first visit to this village was in May, 1883, from Bardizag, with Bro. G. Der Tavitian, resulting in the baptism of a man and his wife. The present membership of the church is thirty-two, of whom about two-thirds are sisters. I know no church where riches and poverty meet at such extremes. They are poor, in the full sense of the word, in this world's goods, as we have mentioned on former occasions, of which Bro. McLean also has been an eye witness during his visit to us, and since then they have been still reduced to greater poverty; but in faith and love towards each other they have grown so rich that, greatly encouraged by the small pecuniary help they received from the brethren of the executive committee, by great self-denial they succeeded in building their house of worship, in which they now meet and worship God. As the government by no means permits Christians to build any church or schoolbuilding, the house was built on the property of one of the brethren, in whose name the deeds are made. It is interesting to mention that this brother was the young man who had determined to kill me on my first visit to the place. He had long waited in the dark, with a rock in hand where I was expected to pass for the baptism of the two believers, but by some unknown cause being delayed a long time, his purpose was frustrated.

When we decided to go to Giol Dagh we found that it was not an easy matter to obtain Turkish passports, and to my great surprise the United States Minister told me that he could not help me in the matter, but through the kindness of the U. S. Consul General, Mr. Dickinson, we obtained our teskeres, and trusting in God we left home early in the morning of January 20th, took the train which passes through Nicomidia and arrived at Bilejik about 5 o'clock P. M., where we put up in a Khan for the night. On the following morning we had two horses ready to take us to Giol Dagh, where we arrived after seven hours' ride. The brethren received us with great joy and the same evening we held our first meeting in the new building, where over two hundred were present. On Lord's day morning, at the dedication service, there were nearly three hundred eager listeners present. Bro. Chapman's earnest exhortations, though spoken by interpretation at the close of the preaching in Armenian, were attended with great interest. We held eight meetings in Giol Dagh and every time we had the house full. Though there have been no immediate results, we felt sure that the church has been greatly built up. We left Giol Dagh on Wednesday morning and on the following afternoon we arrived at Nicomidia, and crossing the sea we reached Bardizag after sundown. I regret to say that we did not find the church in good order; they had grown cold and indifferent and a few of them had already gone over to Sabbatarianism, who are zealously laboring in these parts. We succeeded in bringing together about twelve of them and spent the Lord's day preaching and exhorting them, quite a number of outsiders also being present at our meetings. On Monday morning we went to Ovajik, another Armenian village about two hours' ride east of Bardizag, where I had visited some seventeen years ago three times, and knew that the people were most willing to hear the preaching of the gospel. The Sabbatarians had recently created not a little stir among them and had converted some eight or ten of the people. As we entered the town the people gathered around us and gave us a hearty welcome. Three times we preached in the coffee shops to a great crowd, and by the request of some of them we showed from the Scriptures that we were no longer under the law, but under grace; in this we found a number of strong supporters from the Armenians, among whom was a priest who was standing among the crowd outside listening with great interest to our preaching. These men would not have cared to expressed themselves as they did, had it not been for the Sabbatarian preaching among them. There was a Sabbatarian who stood up with Bible in hand to ask me some questions, but knowing the man and his character I refussd to have anything to do with him. When the time came for us to leave, the people expressed their thanks for our visit and some of them came to see us off, specially the priest who came to the edge of the town to bid us farewell. We rode to Nicomidia in a little over two hours and as I had been suffering from a severe cold, without stopping at Nicomidia, we took the train and returned home last night, thanking God for his guidance and protection. Soon we expect to start on a longer journey to visit the other churches if the Lord permit.

Yours in hope,
G. N. SHISHMANIAN.

Texas Letter.

Soon after the great naval battle at Santiago, in which the battle-ship, Texas, played so conspicuous a part, a movement was put on foot here for the Sunday-school children of this state to present Capt. John W. Philip, who commanded the ship, a sword and Bible as a testimonial of their appreciation of his noble conduct during and after the battle. It will be remembered that when the day was won the boys on the Texas began to cheer, when their brave and good commander, seeing the Spanish sailors being coesumed by flames and waves said, "Don't cheer, boys, those poor devils over there are dying." And when everything possible had been done to save them, he called his men together and asked them to reverently stand with uncovered heads and join him in thanks to God for the victory which he had given them.

Such a man deserves just such a token of appreciation, and it was a happy conception that the children of the state should present them. A sword to commemorate his faultless courage in the hour of danger, and a Bible to tell of his devout allegiance to God.

A vast crowd—many of them children—attended the ceremonies of presentation. Little Louise Jordan, of Victoria, presented the Bible, and Master Willie Embrey, an eight-year-old boy from Brenham, presented the sword, and both made appropriate speeches. Commodore Philip responded in a short, soldier-like speech, of which the following is a fair sample: "I prize this sword, and am an unable to adeqnately express my thanks. But for this priceless book—what can I say? I prize it above the sword. I prize it far above the sword. Most of you boys have seen a lighthouse, although there are none in the interior I suppose. The lighthouse is the best friend the sailor has. It may be surrounded by rocks and shoals and all manner of dangers, but if the sailor will pay heed it will guide him into port. So, too, this book is full of warnings, and is also filled with directions and truths which are given to us for guidance. If you will only follow its teachings it will conduct you all to that great port and haven of rest that we all hope to go to. You boys, as you grow up, will point to the sword in your country's honor and cause, but the Bible will point you in God's cause, and if you will but accept its teachings it will surely cause you to receive his honor and reward." During the speech there were frequent allusions to "our ship," which called forth much applause. But the climax was reached when he unfurled the flag which waved over the gallant ship during the battle and presented it to the children of Texas.

The Texas was allowed to leave Havana and come to Galveston in honor of the occasion; and during the ceremonies she was lying at anchor in the harbor near by, while Capt. Sigsbee, her new commander, and his officers, took part in the services on land.

Granville Jones speaks in high terms of D. R. Francis, baptized recently by W. H. Bagby. He used to be a Congregationalist preacher and colaborer of Sam Small in evangelistic work. Bro. Jones says: "I never heard a man who could preach more heart searching sermons, . . . and I predict for him a career in soul-saving that will maks him known far and wide in our ranks. He is a man of literary culture, deep spirituality, and a chaste but impassioned speaker. He and his wife are both fine singers."

David Walk is in a meeting at El Paso, and Bro. Shultz speaks enthusiastically of the preaching. Bro. Walk would like to hold several meetings before leaving the state, and the churches should keep him busy.

William Johnson is encouraged in his work at Wolfe City. Audiences are growing, the prayer-meeting improving, and an Endeavor Society of fifty members are enough to encourage him.

C. W. Worden goes to Lampasas. Bro. Worden has a fine record as a preacher, which it is hoped will be improved by his labors in his new field.

The C. W. B. M. of Forney has for some time been supporting an orphan girl at Mahoba, India, and now their hearts are made happy in her conversion to Christ.

H. W. Laye seems to be doing a good work at Temple, a field full of difficulties. The church is thinking and talking "new house," and it would not surprise us to see that house before another year passes.

What Will the World Say?

We believe it to be the duty of every wise and honest man and woman to cultivate and maintain as amiable a character in the presence of those around them as possible. It is vastly more pleasant to be honored, loved and respected, than to be ignored, hated and despised. But unfortunately, the great mass of mankind is not composed of the truly wise, the justly honorable and the religiously good. A sacred regard for the approbation of the Most High and the spirit and genius of Christianity are not always fashionable, hence to lay down the principle, that public approval fixes the rule of human action, and is the standard of duty and moral obligation, is to establish a variable and uncertain criterion. If this rule were the correct one, our moral and spiritual duties, our responsibilities and obligations, would be at the mercy of mere whims and fancies, and would be as changeable as the fashions and caprices of human society. It is on this rock that the feeble-minded and faint-hearted make shipwreck of their faith in the living Christ and his most holy religion. It is here they surrender themselves to be molded and fashioned by those around them. It is the fluctuating, timid, irresolute character that with a simple-minded yet criminal compliance defers to the opinions of others, and patiently surrenders to the public voice.

Feebleness of mind and weakness in springs of action cause many people to commit sin. They do not perhaps premeditate evil; they do wrong, not from a fixed purpose, before determined and planned, but from a weakness of mind. They have no stability of character. They cannot stand alone. They are too timid to tread a path that has not been well beaten before them. When the time comes that truth is to be defended, when uprightness of heart and honesty of purpose is to stem the current and opposition of public opinion, our feeble-minded world-servitor, either patiently and tamely submits without an effort to defend the right against the wrong, or cowardly surrenders to the enemy and joins in the laugh that is raised at the expense of what at heart he knows to be sacred and true. It would be a difficult matter to attempt to estimate the injury and disrepute a foundationless, feeble-minded, pusillanimous church member brings upon the church. Opportunities for doing good have been forever lost, possible victory has given place to ignominious defeat, the work of the church has been retarded and Satan has triumphed often, all because of the shameful cowardice of those who should be defenders of the faith. There is no principle of humanity that is attended by a train of more evil consequences than that ease of manners, that simplicity of disposition, that plasticity of soul, which is easily persuaded from its purpose and turned from its resolution. I know these characteristics are said to be the traits of good nature, but we incline to the view that they are marks of the weakest and worst natures in the universe, and probably cause more mischief and do more harm than that character which boldly and openly declares itself on the side of viciousness.

There is not a purpose of life that does not demand fortitude in planning and strength in resolving.

"What will the world say?" is not the Christian's standard. He has been taught this sacred truth: "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." The applause of fools who make a mock at sin and the contagion of worldliness he avoids and abhors. "Add to your faith fortitude," in Peter's second epistle, means something. It contains a lesson and an admonition many professed Christians have yet to learn. It evidently means that faith and courage when properly joined give nerve and vigor to the soul, strengthen the springs of action and make us superior to the foibles, the caprices, the frivolities and soul-chilling influences of worldliness. There is much said in our age about manhood and manliness. What was the opinion of the wisest of men on this subject? Let us hear him: "The righteous is more excellent than his neighbor." What is more manly, more generous and more honorable, and who can command a greater admiration than a devoted follower of the Lord, with that strength of character which alone a knowledge of God inspires. He rises above every appearance of trial, and no form of danger or fear of results terrifies him from doing his duty, which is God's will.

New York Letter.

The Cathedral of St. John the Divine being built by the Episcopalians of New York, on Morning Side Heights, has so far progressed as to allow holding of services in one of the crypts. Many handsome gifts, in the way of Episcopal paraphernalia, "the dry goods of religion," and such like are being presented by the rich people of the bishopric of New York to the cathedral trustees. Many of these donors evidently have more money than biblical knowledge, as is shown in some of the paintings; one of which, "The Baptism of Jesus," is particulary in mind just now. It is a large painting, and as a work of art doubtless has merit, but as an exponent of divine truth it is utterly and maliciously false. It presents Jesus as standing in the edge of the water ankle deep, and apparently shrinking and drawing back from John, who is not even in the water himself, but standing on some stones above the water, at the edge of the stream, pouring water upon the Savior's head. The misleading influences of such a picture are incalculable. When, oh when will all who love Christ in sincerity conscienciously and faithfully represent his truth to the world?

Religious work in connection with social settlements was the central theme at the last monthly meeting of the Charity Organization Society at the United Charities Building. Dr. Charles Cuthburt Hall, president of Union Seminary, and Dr. Josiah Strong were the chief speakers. The former told of the Union Seminary Settlement, through which the students of that institution are doing an excellent work on the Upper East Side of Manhattan. He said many of the people have a dislike for ordinary missions as representing "the churches of capitalists." And yet the recollections of the gospel have been brought back to many of these people and their first love for Christ rekindled in their hearts. Dr. Strong said Christ did not come to earth to go on a slumming expedition and then amaze the inhabitants of heaven with what he saw. He was not like some city missionaries who go about among the poor for a day. He tried to lift men up, and that implied spiritual as well as social instruction. It is time, is it not, that we urge upon the heart and conscience of social settlement workers the importance of religious features in their schemes for human betterment. Many men are talking much of social redemption. This is utterly impossible without spiritual redemption.

It was my privilege to visit the University Settlement, the College Settlement for women, and the St. Bartholomew Mission, a few days since, in company with two of our C. W. B. M. workers, in quest of local missionary information. At the University Settlement, in Risington Street, we saw a handsome new building, well equipped, and something of this good association's work starting off in its new quarters. We went through the buildings and had the operations of the institution explained by the matron and by the superintendent, Mr. Reynolds. But here no definite religious influences are brought to bear upon the hundreds of young men and old who frequent its halls. Jews, Catholics, Protestants, Agnostics, I suppose, and all work together for the educational (secular) and social elevation of the community, but each maintains a deathlike silence on all religious matters. We saw many things to commend at the College Settlement for women; their kindergartens, cooking and sewing schools, music and art classes, and social visiting, and such like, but here, too, we found the same religious defects as at the University Settlement, and to us it was indeed painful. Coming up town to 42nd Street and 3rd Avenue we visited the St. Bartholomew Mission in the hope of finding distinctive religious work. We confidently expected it here, because this institution is under the auspices of St. Bartholomew's Church on Madison Avenue, and its able minister, Dr. David H. Greer. But while we found a magnificent institution, with all kinds of educationa facilities, the Christian work is pitifully weak. It is true that religious services are held daily in several languages, but as one of the clerical staff put it: "We do not endeavor to teach any one a different way from that in which he happens to be walking. We would not turn a good Methodist, Presbyterian or Catholic into a poor Episcopalian. We simply try to strengthen all in their respective beliefs." We came away feeling that such work cannot accomplish the best results religiously. It seemed to be a case of all things to all men to please all.

Living on the Reputation of Others.

"Take everything that I have but my good name; leave me that and I am content." So said the philosopher. So say all manufacturers of genuine articles to that horde of imitators which thrives upon the reputation of others. The good name of

Allcock's

has induced many adventurers to put in the market imitations that are not only lacking in the best elements of the genuine article, but are often harmful in their effects.

The public should be on their guard against these frauds, and, when an external remedy is needed, be sure to insist upon having Allcock's Porous Plaster.

A Novel Proposition.

Just before the doxology was sung in a certain city congregation, old Bro. Faithful arose and said: "Beloved, I hold in my hand a resolution signed by myself, the oldest member of this church, and by Bro. Goodman the next oldest member. It is not to be discussed to-day, but among ourselves, between now and next Lord's day, when the vote on it will be taken." No one doubting the fidelity of these two men to the cause of Christ, consent was given, whereupon Bro. Faithful read as follows: "Be it resolved, that we do away with our weekly prayer-meeting."

A great wave of surprise swept over the large audience and the good pastor had scarcely finished the benediction when "What does it mean?" was on every tongue. Every lady went home talking about the prayer-meeting, and for once, at least, politics and fashions were in eclipse.

The different societies which met that week discussed the matter and agreed it would never do for the church to discontinue the prayer-meeting; many of these selfsame members being seemingly forgetful of the fact that they never attended the prayer-meeting, and had never felt the spiritual need it is intended to supply.

Even the rich Mrs. Hightone, who never refuses to give the opera and theater preference over the prayer-meeting, was heard to say, the following Tuesday, in Bro. Griptight's store, that "our self-respect, if nothing else, ought to force the church to keep up the prayer-meeting."

"Yes," answered Mrs Lightheart, "what will the people of this town think of our church? Why, Mrs. Hightone, people will say we have no religion, and I begin to think so too, if we do away with the prayer-meeting."

"Are not Mr. Faithful, and Mr. Goodman elders in our church?" asked Sister Hightone of Bro. Griptight.

"Yes, I think so," was his reply.

"That's what I thought," broke in Sister Lightheart, and I guess they are good men, too; but what they and our pastor mean by any such doings is more than I can understand."

"Well," says Bro. Griptight, who never eaves his store to attend prayer-meeting, "I reckon we had better go around next Sunday and vote against that motion."

And sure enough, next Sunday everybody was on hand. Even Mrs. Hightone and Mrs. Lightheart got in in time to hear the preacher read and pray. The pastor noticed the unusual attendance and punctuality. He also noticed some others who had not for months encouraged him with their presence; notably, Bros. Dolittle, Coldblood and Protest; also Sisters Proudfit, Uppity and Tonguely.

Bro. Griptight came at least ten minutes sooner than usual and occupied an unaccustomed pew well up to the front, determined that if there was any talking to be done "on that motion," he would have his say. After an unusually good sermon on "Love and Service," and a thoughtful, tender time around the Lord's table, Bro. Faithful was asked to read his resolution again, which he did, adding: "I hope all are ready to vote without any discussion." Quickly the pastor said: "Let all who favor the motion, vote Aye." No response. "Let all opposed, say No."

"No!" rang out all over the room.

"The motion is lost by a unanimous vot ," said the pastor.

Bro. Faithful then arose and with tearful and trembling voice, said: "Beloved, to vote for a prayer-meeting and then never attend or do anything for its success seems to me to be inconsistent. If your vote means anything, we ought to have next Wednesday evening about four hundred of you out, instead of thirty-five or forty.

"I am glad you have voted the motion DOWN; now please help us to build the prayer-meeting UP."

All saw the point. Do you, kind reader?

The Temperance Question.

I wish to say something on this very important question. And what I shall say shall be along the line of moral suasion. I have no fault to find with "legal suasion" so long as it is kept within its own province. It is not within the province of law to reform, but simply to restrain. I am always in favor of restraint by law, but when we attempt to do by law that which must be done by something else, or when we attempt to substitute law for something else, is where we make our mistake.

The great trouble with the Jewish nation was that they misunderstood the law of Moses. They thought to reform the world by law and rejected Christ because he taught the incompleteness of that law. This one point is the occasion for the greater part of Paul's writing in the New Testament. And if the law of Moses, the best law the world ever knew, could not reform men and women, I do not think it worth while for any one to-day to attempt to make a law that can. Paul's argument on law may be summed up in two statements as follows: First, it could not reform, but was all right as a measure of restraint. Second, it was incomplete and therefore God took it away. The most that can be truthfully said of law is to call it a measure of sentiment. And another very fundamental statement that I wish to make right here is that good laws are always the result of good people, and not as some claim, that "good people are the result of good laws." As a matter of course I have reference to man-made laws. Now if this statement be true it does seem to me the thing to do in order to get good laws is to get the people good. It is all right to vote against license, but no man has half done his duty if he stops here. To take whisky from a man, while I grant it does a great deal of good, does not of necessity reform him.

The saloon is a fixture of our civilization and will so remain till we bring forth a generation that will not tolerate it. And in order to get rid of it there have been three remedies proposed, as follows: First, the prohibition of the traffic as a political measure. And during the past thirty years some of the brainiest men and women of this century have advocated this measure. The most votes ever polled on this question was for John P. St. John, in 1884, which was, if I remember rightly, in the neighborhood of 300,000. This is not much more than the annual number of trained drinkers which immigrate to this country. And no difference how many logical arguments made for this method, time has proven it a failure. And time proves more things than all our logic.

Second. In the second place we have tried local option. This is still advocated by the Anti-saloon League." This is also a failure for more reasons than I shall attempt to give here. I do not say that these methods have been entire failures, for anything that will call attention to the curse of drunkenness is doing some good.

Third. The third method offered is to save the drunkard by moral suasion and the rising generation by teaching them to abstain from all intoxicants as a beverage. And to this end I have formulated a plan along this line. And I will say right here that if any of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are interested in this line of work let them address me and I will mail them a copy of my address on my "reasons for organizing a new temperance movement."

Very kindly,

H. M. BROOKS.

Letter From Persia.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: — I write these lines to give a sign of life to all my dearly beloved and gratefully remembered brethren, patrons and friends in the United States, who were no doubt surprised and alarmed at the news of my being murdered in this far-off corner of the world, referred to by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of the 8th of December, 1898. I am sure they will all be glad to hear that I am still alive and continuing to labor for Christ and poor, suffering and famine-stricken Armenians. In this field there are 50,000 souls needing help, not only to live, but also to hear the good tidings of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and I am the only Christian missionary to whom they have to look for their great and urgent needs. The importance of this vast misssonary field will be made clear by a glance at the map of Persia. The district of Salmas, where I am located, is situated between the Caucasus, Armenia and Azerbeidjan, with millions of various races and languages and different religions. It is the most strategic place from the point of missionary operations and aggressive efforts in the future. In view of this fact should we not do all we can to hold this fort for Christ and his cause? The old Armenian Church is rapidly advancing toward its fall. The religious stagnation that has been prevailing in it for centuries is producing an aweful state of demoralization, atheism and complete alienation from the national See at St. Etch Miadzir (near Mt. Ararat) that for 1,500 years held the Armenians to the same faith, doctrine and practice. Such being the deplorable case the time, I believe, has come for the Church of Christ to take these important events, which are occurring in the centre of the ancient world amid an old church and nation, into serious consideration. It is her supreme duty, I think, to make some heroic efforts to save these millions of souls craving the light and life of the gospel. Let us lay hands on this grand opportunity at once, and let it be our jubilee work! I am doing all I can to hold this fort in ancient Persia, and the people are highly appreciating my humble efforts to help them in church, school and relief work at this terrible time of general and great suffering in Salmas. But without the help of our brethren and sisters, who have sent me into this field as their own missionary, I cannot accomplish anything and must succumb myself with my family under the burden of heavy obligations, trials, sufferings and especially the dreadful famine overwhelming us at this time. Let all my patrons and the promoters of our "Iowa Armenian Mission" in Persia know that owing to lack of funds I can not keep a horse or donkey to fulfill evangelistic duties, and as there are neither railroads nor any other means of transport in this country, I must walk long distances from village to village to visit the people and to preach to them the good tidings of salvation through Christ. Now it is true that cruel hands failed to murder me, but famine will surely kill us this year if merciful help does not reach us from our brethren in America. May God in his abundant and continued love have mercy upon us in this dire hour of need, is my prayer.

Yours fraternally, MIHRON BAGHDASARIAN.

Preachers and Impressions—IV.

"And the common people heard him gladly" (Mark 12:37).

West Point educated Gen. Grant, and for his services a grateful people have placed his body to rest in a grand mausoleum.

Little schoolhouses educated the common soldiers, whom Grant commanded, and in consideration of their services, the same grateful people are protecting and beautifying the National Cemeteries. The Almighty draws long lines in human history. Do you see that small company of common men and women holding a prayer-meeting? That was over fifty years ago. That meeting is a general type of hundreds of such meetings held by our people at that time. They are in a private house; they all feel at home and are ready to take some part in the meeting. They are a lump of leaven, but you cannot see the measure of meal in which that leaven will be placed. They are pioneers with great faith in the future. They are giving their strength and energy to a small beginning which God will, in his own good time, enlarge. God is there laying the first end of a far-reaching line. The line is dim and shadowy at the meeting, but it stretches out toward the future. You watch that company as it moves along that line through years of joy and sorrow, laboring, increasing, leavening the community and gathering power until at the end of half a century you will see as the result of its labors a fine church building, a large congregation, missionaries in foreign lands and a strong university. Great leaders there must be, but the march and the battle must be the march and the battle of the common people. Half a league onward was a great distance through Balaklava's thundering guns. Half a century onward is a mighty march in the lives of heroic men and women. Some day some poet will feel the thrill, catch the fire and write the "March of the Half Century Brigade." Who will write our Jubilee Hymn?

In the early part of 1859 the little church had purchased a house in the village and had employed Peter T. Russell to preach for them for a period of one year. He was about six feet in height, straight as an arrow, and stepped as lightly and stealthily as an Indian. He had heavy, projecting eyebrows, black eyes, straight, raven-black hair, high forehead and a long, dark, forbidding face. He was retiring, timid and eccentric in private. His laughter seemed to be all to himself. His dark face and stealthy manner raised suspicions of coldness and deep designs. When the observer had passed those frowning barriers he found that the minister had a noble heart and was as gentle and tender as a woman. When he went into the pulpit he became a changed man. He had a forcible delivery, was well versed in the Scriptures, was eloquent, logical and combative. The work prospered under his ministry. He preached for a while in Northern Indiana, and while there published a paper called the Investigator. It was ably conducted and often contained articles from the scholarly Prof. S. K. Hoshour. I cannot say when it was published, but I saw several old copies in about 1858. I do not know of any copies now extant. If any can be found they ought to be preserved in the libraries of some of our colleges. It is the only record of which I know in which there will be preserved any of our early history in Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan. It may have been obtained by Butler University. He passed from my association in 1860 and I never saw him afterward. I have learned that he died several years since at his home in Iowa from the effects of a severe injury. From a friend to whom Sister Russell related the circumstances of her husband's death I learned that he and his wife believed that when dying the righteous see their departed friends.

As the death-pallor was slowly moving over his features his wife said to him, "When you pass away, if you see our son George, raise one of your fingers." The pallor crept on and deepened, the light of the eye went out, the breast ceased its gentle heaving, the beating heart was stilled, the moments were oppressive, friends felt that all was over, nature kindly began to remove from the face and its muscles the traces of pain; when on his white hand resting on his bosom one of the fingers was lifted. Who knows but what, as he stood on the prow of his wandering bark, God kindly lifted upon his vision the face of his beloved boy and a view of the lights which gleam over the eternal harbor? Their belief was a pleasing one, but it was a belief which in no way affected the conditions of their salvation.

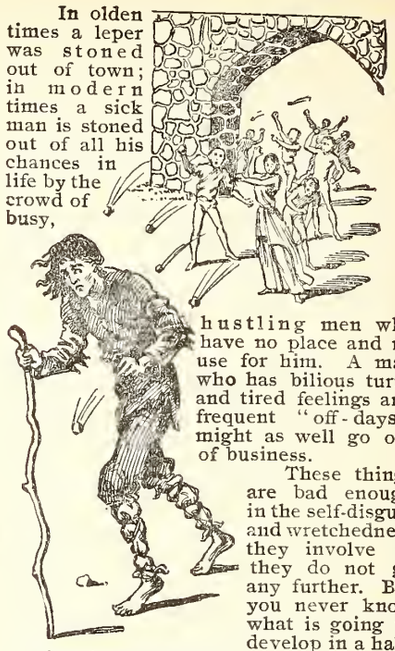
Kansas City Letter.

The series of evangelistic meetings in which we were helped by Bro. Carey E. Morgan, of Minneapolis, closed on January 27th, with a constantly increasing interest and great blessing upon the church. Twenty-four were added to the membership of our congregation and the souls of God's children fed with the true bread of life. Bro. Morgan won the respect and love of our people by his strong advocacy of the gospel of Christ, and his manly and courteous behavior. His presence and ministry have been a benediction.



On February 7th it became my pleasant duty to go to his assistance in a similar meeting at Minneapolis, from which I have just returned. So kindly did his good people receive me that labor became a delight, and the task of beseeching men to become reconciled to God was transformed into a gracious privilege. The results of this meeting Bro. Morgan will doubtless report. I think the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST would be interested in a few facts concerning our cause in the great "twin cities" of the Northwest, Minneapolis and Saint Paul.

I trust our Saint Paul brethren will not hold it as a grudge against me that I have named Minneapolis first. I had to name one of them first, and it seemed natural to follow the order I have, inasmuch as my special work was done in that city. But one must be careful how he runs counter to the rivalries of these "twins." It is told of a certain preacher who recently went to Minneapolis to preach a "trial" sermon for a pastorless congregation, that he had no sooner announced his text than the entire audience arose in a body and left the house, with the single exception of one good deacon, who kept his seat, albeit with sorely troubled countenance. When the preacher indignantly demanded the reason for this strange and insulting conduct on the part of the church, the good deacon replied, "Well, my brother, I'm very sorry this has happened, but you brought it on yourself. You ought to have known better than to come before a Minneappolis audience with a text from Saint Paul!"

Certain it is that there has been at strong rivalry between the two cities for many years, but this has doubtless resulted in larger enterprise and greater growth than would have otherwise been attained. The huge grain elevators, flour and lumber mills, some of them the largest in the world, tell the stranger what are the two greatest interests of this great Northwest region. The marvelous water power of old Saint Anthony Falls has been utilized at Minneapolis to a vast extent, and has doubtless done much to cause the growth of that city to surpass that of her sister community. I was told that, in the early days of these cities, when the location of the state capitol was in dispute, a compromise was effected by which Saint Paul was given the capitol and Minneapolis received the State University. If this is correct, Minneapolis got the best of the bargain. The University has become one of the most important educational institutions in the country, having magnificent buildings, a splendid faculty and an enrollment of three thousand students. This is worth vastly more to the city than the presence of the State House and the Legislature, with all due respect to the gentlemen who make the laws for that great commonwealth.

In these two great cities, with a combined population of about four hundred thousand, the Disciples of Christ are comparatively weak in numbers. The Minneapolis church has probably four hundred members, and is steadily growing under the ministry of Bro. Morgan. It has been rich in the ministry of good men, having numbered among its pastors such men as E. T. C. Bennett, John C. Hay, Enos Campbell, W. J. Lhamon and the present incumbent. These are all held in loving remembrance. The church in Saint Paul has not had so prosperous a history, I think, but has also been blessed with the labors of divers noble ministers of Christ. Bro. A. D. Harmon is their present pastor, and is greatly beloved. They hope soon to build a handsome and commodious church building, on a lot which they have almost paid for. While they number fewer than the church in their sister city, the Disciples in Saint Paul number among them some members of considerable wealth, so that their problem is not difficult of solution on the financial side. There is a second small congregation in Saint Paul, which is, I think, without a pastor or a house of worship. It ought to unite with the larger body, and help to bring about the greater results for which so many faithful hearts have long been praying.

We have two very feeble Scandinavian churches in Minneapolis, one of which has a small house of worship which it was helped to secure through the assistance of our Church Extension Board. I am convinced that we ought to begin aggressive work very soon among the Scandinavian population of that

In olden times a leper was stoned out of town; in modern times a sick man is stoned out of all his chances in life by the crowd of busy, hustling men who have no place and no use for him. A man who has bilious turns and tired feelings and frequent "off-days" might as well go out of business.

These things are bad enough in the self-disgust and wretchedness they involve if they do not go any further. But you never know what is going to develop in a half-nourished, bile-poisoned constitution. If a man as soon as he feels that he is not getting the forceful strength and energy out of his food that he ought to, will begin taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, he will soon put himself in the position where he can do a man's work easily and cheerfully.

His appetite will be sharpened; his liver invigorated; his digestion strengthened; an edge put on his whole nutritive organism. Those subtle poisons which debilitate the entire organism and invite consumption and a host of other diseases, will be driven out of the system; and he will gain plenty of pure nourishing red blood, muscle-power and nerve-force. In short he will be a man among men.

There are hundreds of delusive temporary stimulants, "malt extracts," sarsaparillas and compounds, which are more or less "boomed" by merely profit-seeking druggists; but an honest druggist will give you the "Golden Medical Discovery" when you ask for it. If well-informed, he knows that its sales have steadily increased for thirty years and that it is the invention of an educated, authorized physician who has devoted a life-time of active practice and profound study to chronic diseases.

state. There are over one hundred thousand of these people in the two cities alone. They have sixty churches in Minneapolis, counting Swedish, Norwegian and Danish. Most of these are Lutheran, but a few are of the Free Church, Swedish Baptist and other nonconformist bodies. The Scandinavians, both in the old country and in this, are becoming restless under the tyranny of their state church, and the time is ripe for our plea of spiritual freedom to be proclaimed among them. With a few strong preachers of their own nationality to go among them, backed by our missionary societies, hundreds could be enlisted under our plea for simple New Testament Christianity. If we raise our "one hundred thousand dollars for Home Missions," our home board can answer some of these calls in behalf of our foreign population. W. F. RICHARDSON.

"A People Laden With Iniquity."

There is much in the condition of China to-day that reminds one of a nation long ago, of whom it was said, "O, sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil-doers, children that are corrupters. . . . . Your country is desolate, ... strangers devour it in your presence."

The helpless condition of the country and people is manifest. One who has recently visited and reported on the condition of affairs says: "There is no hope for the country if she does not reform, and no hope of reform except by pressure from outside." The country is financially unsound and governmentally rotten.

This condition of affairs is due, I believe, to the fact that when "they knew God they glorified him not as God . . . but changed the truth of God into a lie and worshiped and served the creature rather than the Creator. Their ancient sages inculcated the worship of the Supreme Being, yet their lives were but the lives of men and their followers found the worship of the sages more agreeable than the worship of God, and their examples easier to follow than their precepts.

A national conscience is what China needs to-day. It is "governmentally rotten and financially unsound," because it is morally hopeless. From the sole of the governmental foot—where the thief-catcher gets his commission on thefts—to the governmental head—where the high officers of the empire are openly charged with selling their country for filthy lucre—the whole body politic is unsound. And deservedly so, for a country which pays its high officials a salary barely sufficient for the supply of such necessities as sharks' fins, bird's-nest soup and, probably, opinion, whilst demanding the retinue and barbaric ostentation of a pretty despot, deserves the little it gets whether of revenue or loyalty.

In all the arrangements made by outsiders for the regeneration of the country the lack of a national conscience is universally admitted, and though there are many syndicates willing to supply funds for the opening of mines, the construction of railways, etc., they will only do this on the condition that their interests are safeguarded by a foreign government.

The only hope for this country is in the exaltation that comes from righteousness that comes through faith in the Son of God. The old systems have failed, and more than failed, for they have admittedly left the people more debased than before. Queen Victoria is said to have made the remark that "the Bible is the secret of England's greatness." The fact of this remark having been made has been questioned but the fact itself can never be questioned and whether of England or America it is true and proves the truth of the divine promise, "They that honor me I will honor, and they that despise me I will lightly esteem."

A Book on Conversion.

If my old and much-esteemed friend and brother, B. F. Manire, will pardon my delinquency I will make the amende honorable, so far as possible, even at this late date, by tendering him my most cordial thanks for a very highly appreciated present received from him several months ago, in the shape of an excellent little volume of sermons on "Conversion," of which he is the gifted author. And while I have pencil in hand I desire, by the politeness of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST editor, to submit a few commendatory words touching the merits and contents of these sermons.

Having read the proof-sheets of these sermons very carefully, some eighteen years ago, during their publication in the Apostolic Church—a monthly periodical published from Mayfield, Ky., with which I was connected both as editor and publisher—and having had the pleasure of listening to them in a series of discourses which their author delivered during his pastorate at Mayfield, and now having diligently gone over them in their present form, I can truly say that while the familiarity with them thus acquired has enabled me to understand and appreciate them all the more thoroughly, yet they have not depreciated in my estimation, but rather, like God's eternal truth itself, whence they were drawn, every perusal only creates new interest and reveals new beauty and potency.

I cannot take space in this notice to take up these sermons seriatim and analyze them, but in order that my readers may have some conception of the scope, extent and different phases of thought embraced in these discourses I here transcribe the table of contents: 1. Conversion in its Scriptural Import; 2. The Agencies of Conversion; 3. The Instrument of Conversion; 4. The Rule of Conversion; 5. Conversion of the Three Thousand; 6. Conversion of Cornelius and his Household; 7. Conversion of Saul of Tarsus; 8. Conversion of the Samaritans; 9. Conversion of the Ethiopian Treasurer; 10. Conversion of the Philippian Jailer; 11. Household Conversions; 12. Cases Briefly Mentioned; 13. The Great Question, "What Must I do to be Saved?" 14. Baptism—What is it?

Thus you will see that the most important of all Bible subjects is considered in all its phases. Every case of conversion recorded in the New Testament is carefully and critically analyzed. Bro. Manire is an able, vigorous and scholarly writer and speaker, as well as a most pious, faithful and God-fearing Christian man. In my opinion this is the best, ablest, most thorough and exhaustive discussion of the subject extant. There is simply nothing left to be said.

The book contains fourteen sermons, making a volume of 328 pages, elegantly bound in the best cloth; price, $1 by mail, prepaid. Remit to B. F. Manire, Jackson, Miss. It gives me real pleasure to commend B. F. Manire's sermons on conversion to all, but especially to our young preachers, and more especially to the preachers and people of "other denominations." C. Notes and News.

The church at Rockwell City, Iowa, is building a new church house to cost $2,000, which they hope to have done in April. It will seat about 300 persons. Bro. Major is the pastor of this church.

Is the C. W. B. M. a Part of the Christian Church?

The diagrams which give $130,000 as the amount raised by the "Christian Church" for Foreign Missions wholly ignore the C. W. B. M. and its offerings, which would make the total at least half as much as much again. Is this fair to the C. W. B. M., the Christian Church and those we are trying to enlighten?

Watch for Time and Place.

Among other things now being planned for the advancement of the affairs of Eureka College, is the arrangement for holding a conference of our people in Illinois at an early day. Time and place not definitely fixed, but announcements will be made very soon. This conference will not be for getting money, but for counsel. No person will be asked to give anything at this meeting. It is desired that the brethren come in large numbers, and help to form a liberal policy for the prosecution of this great interest. Watch the papers for definite arrangements, and get ready to be present. J. H. HARDIN, Pres.

The Creston Institute.

Under the auspices of the Pastors' Alliance, of Creston, Ia., was held, Feb. 27-28, a Ministers' Institute for the benefit of ministers of all denominations in Southwestern Iowa. The purpose of the Institute, as expressed in the program, was to meet a felt want of the ministry—remote as they are in this region from scholastic and literary opportunities. The thirty-two ministers present were unanimous in the opinion that this want had been temporarily supplied. It is planned to hold similar institutes at stated intervals in the future, so the full purpose may be realized.

All sessions were held in the Church of Christ, where D. F. Snider ably ministers. Besides papers on vital topics by the local pastors, was given a series of lectures on "Biology and Revelation," by Prof. L. S. Ross, of Drake University. Rev. J. M. Wilson, pastor of the First Congregational Church, of Council Bluffs, preached the Institute sermon on the subject, "Latent Energy." An instructive and practical lecture was given by F. E. Samson, M. D., on "The Eyes and the Voice—Their Use and Preservation." The crowning feature of the program was a lecture on "Savonorola," by Dr. H. O. Breeden, of Des Moines. Dr. Breeden also delivered before the ministers his lecture on "Criticism and Christianity." The discussion which it occasioned was pointed and animated, yet good-natured and considerate. "Conservatives" and "liberals" freely expressed their convictions on all sides of the question of higher criticism. This interchange of ideas was helpful and broadening.

The promise of frequent institutes, such as this one, means much for the ministry of this section in social and intellectual culture, as well as in the development of that fraternal spirit which, should characterize brethren in Christ. W. D. RYAN.

Alma College.

To congregations, officers, preachers and members of the Christian Church in Southern Illinois:—There are lying on the south of the Wabash R. R., from Danville to Quincy, Ill., about forty counties; and in these counties over three hundred congregations of the Christian Church. There has not been in Eureka College an average of ten students per term from these counties. There has not been an average of three students per term from the nineteen counties lying on the south of the B. & O. R. R. Nearly one hundred students from families belonging to the Christian Church, in these counties, are in schools not connected with the Christian Church. The fact that Eureka is nearly 300 miles north of Cairo, 200 north of Centralia and 100 north of Springfield, explains these facts. There should be in Southern Illinois a school under the control of the Christian Church. From 1866 to 1870 Clark Braden built up in Carbondale the largest school then under the control of the Christian Church. When the brotherhood in Southern Illinois failed to do their duty in paying off a small debt on the school property, it was sold and transferred into the Southern Illinois Normal University, and the brotherhood allowed slip from their control what could easily have been made the strongest school in our brotherhood.

Three years ago brethren in Alma erected a building, and have maintained in it a school. Bro. Clark Braden has taken hold of the school. That ought to be enough to satisfy the brotherhood in Southern Illinois, that if they will do their duty in patronizing the school and in securing patronage for it, the school will be a success in instruction and management. We appeal to the brotherhood in Southern Illinois, not for donations, but for patronage. Will not each and every member of the church, each and every official in each and every congregation, each and every preacher, and the entire brotherhood in Southern Illinois, send to the school every pupil that should be in school; and try to induce all to attend the school that they possibly can?

Hand circulars to all who should attend school, and talk of the school, in season and out of season. Will not the brotherhood in Southern Illinois, by patronizing the school to the limit of their ability, and by doing all in their power to get others to do so, aid in our attempt to build up a Christian college in Southern Illinois? Relying on them for all the help they can give, we begin a new era in Alma College. W. S. Ross,
President Board of Trustees.

A New Congregation.

About a month ago Bro. Edward Beal, of Springerville, Arizona, came into our valley to find the strength of our brotherhood here. After visiting in the different neighborhoods and holding several meetings in schoolhouses and borrowed churches, it was decided to organize a Church of Christ four miles west of Solomonville, in the Lone Star school district. Sixteen members have been enrolled, and others will do so in the near future. One young man has made the confession, but has not been baptized. On last Lord's day the following officers were elected: Fred Dysart, deacon; Mrs. S. C. Leisering and Dora Wish, deaconesses. Thirty miles further down the Gila Valley there are enough of our people to form another small church, and a third congregation might be formed at Duncan, a mining town, about twenty-five miles in an opposite direction. A good preacher, able and willing to travel over the country to these three points, would find reasonable support and a good field for work. FRED DYSART.

Hiram College Jubilee Endowment.

Among the many encouraging things connected with our great Hiram Jubilee movement may be counted the many encouraging words we are receiving from friends all over the country. We get many expressions of sympathy and encouragement that show the appreciation of the people for Hiram and their approval of the movement it has inaugurated for the endowment of the college. Our hope is that this movement will gain ever-increasing momentum as time advances, until the consummation in June, 1900. It ought to widen and deepen every week. How wonderfully easy it would be for the great Disciple brotherhood to adequately endow Hiram on the occasion of its fiftieth anniversary, if even a respectable minority will lend a helping hand. If one in every four could be induced to join in this movement the result would be absolutely startling.

A WORD TO THE PREACHERS.

Dear brother, will you not lend this movement your support? It will not interfere with any local interests or missionary interests, but on the contrary will be a help to our people. If you will call the attention of your church to this matter and will offer to forward the names of any who will join the movement, it will be a great help. Why not do this at once? We believe that you appreciate the great work that Hiram has done and is doing. The opportune time has come for her endowment. Let us all join heart and soul in this matter.

All names should be sent to E. V. Zollars, Hiram, Ohio, that records may be properly kept.

We herewith submit just a few samples of the encouraging words we are receiving:

A FEW KIND WORDS.

"Count me among the number of those who wish to assist in Hiram's Great Jubilee Endowment Movement. I trust that the movement may prove a success, and that Hiram's usefulness may be greatly increased."

ELIZABETH ROBERTS.

Owasso, Mich.

"I am in full sympathy with your effort to endow Hiram College by general appeal, and at the proper time I hope to do the little part that may properly be mine." J. J. HOPKINS.

Benchley, Texas.

"I will respond at any time I am called upon for aid by donating one dollar or more. My heart and soul are bound up in Hiram's success." O. J. BRITTON.

Neapolis, Ohio.

"Put me down for a helper in the work of securing Hiram's endowment. I am sure the brethren here will help you to a small sum."

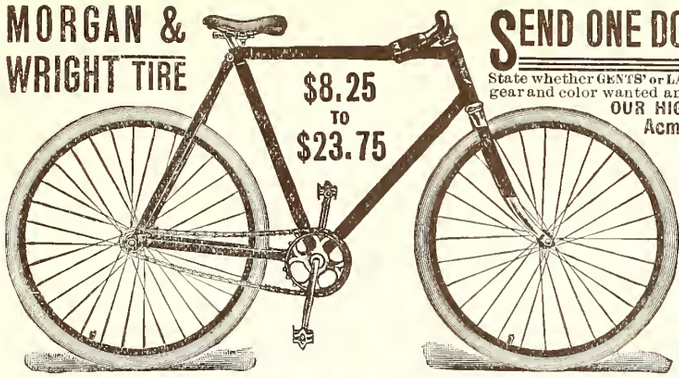
W. R. SEYTONE.

Everton, Ont.

"I want to be in the procession for popular endowment." H. D. CLARK.

Mt. Sterling, Ky.

Scores of such testimonies might be produced. It does not cost much to say such things, but it helps those who are engaged in this work very greatly. It is an inspiration to feel that the great brotherhood appreciates the mevement that is being made for Hiram's endowment. E. V. ZOLLARS.



An Unpublished Story of Goethe.

The egotism of Goethe is so well known that the following story, related by Dr. Hovey, of Newton Theological Seminary, will be enjoyed by all, whether readers of Goethe or not.

A German professor once told Dr. Hovey, with whom he was on friendly and intimate terms, that when he was a young man he was a great admirer and worshiper of the author of Faust. He was very anxious to see the great literary light of his time. After much correspondence an interview was arranged to his great delight, and he made a joyous pilgrimage to Weimar.

With heart beating strong in anticipation of the great honor and opportunity awaiting him, he was ushered into the presence of the great man. Goethe sat majestically upright in his chair, never changing expression or in any way recognizing the entrance of his visitor whom he met with an intellectual and strong stare. To say that the young man was surprised expresses it mildly. In a moment, however, he regained his native wit, and with a rare intuitive comprehension of the situation, he adjusted his glasses and drew near to inspect the phenomenon. He bent down and examined the face and front of the remarkable personage, then he went around to his side to continue his study, and at length proceeded to the rear to inspect the back. By this time Goethe began to show signs of astonishment and turned his face to watch the young man's procedure. Not a word was said, however, and the young man continued his tour of inspection until he came around to the front again, when, reaching into his pocket and drawing forth pfennig (a penny) he placed it upon the library table by the side of Goethe, saying, "Ich donke ihnen" (I thank you, sir), and bowing low took his departure from the presence of the great man, who was by this time covered with astonishment and confusion. ADVANTAGES OF DIRECT BUYING.

New innovations do not as a rule meet with prompt public approval. While the American people are famous all around the world for their business acumen and general aptitude to think out and bring into action new inventions and new methods, we often show a dispositson of positive lethargy when it comes to changing so-called fixed principles and methods.

Certain manufacturing institutions have in recent years inaugurated a new system of disposing of their products which is unqualifiedly to the advantage of the consumer. It took courage to make the change, but they did it. Among the pioneers in this new method of doing business was the Elkhart Carriage & Harness Mfg. Co., of Elkhart, Indiana, whose ad. appears on page 317 of this issue. These people began this plan of doing business twenty-six years ago and have adhered to it strictly ever since. The result has been so entirely successful that they are to-day the largest manufacturers of carriages and harness in the world selling to the consumer exclusively.

The advantages to the consumer are almost beyond estimate. He gets better goods; better and larger selection; better styles and finish, and finally he buys at a much more equitable and advantageous price. In dealing with the Elkhart people there is no risk to assume, as they ship either vehicles or harness anywhere for examination and guarantee every article they manufacture and sell. Then, too, one may deal satisfactorily from any distance. The Elkhart Carriage & Harness Mfg. Co. publish an extended illustrated catalogue, which they will take pleasure in mailing to all our readers who request it.

Missionary.

The Offering Started.

The great majority of missionary churches took the offering for Foriegn Missions last Sunday. Many failed to do so. May we not urge them to give attention to the matter next Sunday? Now is the time for the churches to act in this matter. We request the churches that took pledges to be paid in a short time, to collect and send in the offering at the earliest possible date.

The preachers that hoped to enlist one or more new churches in this annual offering are especially requested to do all they can to have such churches take the offering at once. It is hoped the number of black squares will be reduced.

If there is not a very considerable increase in the receipts, the work will suffer.

Remember the watchword of the Chattanooga Convention: $150,000 for Foreign Missions in this, the Jubilee Year.

Please send the offerings to F. M. Rains, treasurer, Box 750, Cincinnati, O. Give the name of the church when different from the post-office.

A. McLean,
F. M. Rains.

KANSAS.

Troy, Feb. 26.—Seventeen additions to date; 16 baptisms, large audiences and good interest. Will continue.—D. D. BOYLE.

Cleveland, Feb. 25.—Twenty additions to date in Dunham Avenue meeting. We continue with good interest.—M. J. GRABLE, pastor, R. W. ABBERLEY, evangelist.

Ada, Feb. 27.—Meeting closed last night with 25 additions; 45 added since September.—AUSTIN HUNTER, pastor.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Alexandria, Feb. 27.—I began a meeting at this place five weeks ago. This is the county-seat and a new field for us. There had never been a sermon preached here by our people. The result to date: A congregation organized with a membership of 56, 50 of them by baptism. A Sunday-school and Y. P. S. C. E. organized, salary for preacher raised and preacher located. They are self-supporting.—G. W. ELLIOTT.

OREGON.

Roseburg, Feb. 28.—Our meeting continues with unabated interest; 18 additions to date and more to follow. We are having a hard pull of it here. The people here have heard so much sectarianism that they had almost become disgusted with religion in any form. There were two very intelligent young men of the Baptist communion who said to me last night, after services, that we had taught them the way of the Lord more perfectly, and that they were going to rub off the name Baptist and wear the name Christian only. The future of this congregation largely depends on the success of this meeting. Pray for us.—W. V. BOLTZ.

MONTANA.

Whitehall, Feb. 27. — Our congregation is greatly strengthened by a one-week meeting in which six were added by baptism. I am now pushing the work at South Boulder, an adjacent point; have four confessions to date and a deep interest manifested. We are planning to build a church at Whitehall in the near future. Our congregations at this point have been meeting in dance halls, store rooms, etc., for about two years. — F. A. PARISH.

Corvallis, Feb. 28.—Our pastor, F. F. Grim, of Drake University, and one of its latest and best productions, preached a series of fine sermons in January, '99. Result: 12 added by hearing, believing, confessing and obeying. Our sympathies are with the great jubilee movement.—ED JAMES H. COWAN.

IOWA.

Moulton, Feb. 27.—Our meeting with home forces closed last week in the fourth week. There were 33 additions; 23 by confession, four from other bodies. Membership now over 300.—C. P. LEACH.

Ames, Feb. 27. — The church reports for February five added by letter and two by baptism. The average attendance at Sunday-school was 15 more than for January. Outlook good.—JAMES R. MCINTIRE.

Mingo and Ira, Feb. 25.—Just closed a five-weeks' meeting with these two churches. Forty added to the former, and at the latter gathered 30 for an organization; four confessions. These two railroad points, five miles apart, are planning to settle a pastor in connection with Baxter, equally distant from a central point. Any one wanting a fruitful field with lots of hard work, can write Bro. Jasper Watts, Mingo, Iowa. This is territory preempted 40 years ago by our brotherhood, but change of centers, occasioned by a new railroad, broke us up, from which we are rallying. —J. R. MOWRY.

Lake City, Feb. 27.—Meeting gains five additions to date.—F. H. LEMON.

Lincoln, Feb. 27.—Two confessions Wednesday night and one at yesterday's service. This makes 12 on our 100 additions for the Jubilee Year.—ALBERT NICHOLS.

Irving, March 4.—We will likely close here Sunday evening. Bro. C. D. Purlee is doing the preaching. He is a power in the pulpit; 22 added to date; 12 are heads of families; $100 added to yearly support of church. Bro. Purlee has accepted a call to preach for us regularly. He has purchased property here and will move with family soon. We hope to rebuild our church house in the spring. My next meeting is with J. V. Coombs at Flora, where Bro. McCoy ministers.—A. O. HUNSAKER.

Knoxville, Feb. 24.—Closed a four weeks' meeting at Cameron with 32 additions. I am interested in securing a preacher for a good, strong church. If some good brother wants to make a change I wish they would write me soon enclosing stamp.—MART D. SHARPLES.

Newman, March 1.—One of the greatest revivals ever held in the Christian church in Newman has just closed; 33 have been added to the church. R. Leland Brown, of Rockville, Ind., did the preaching. Bro. Brown has accomplished a work here far beyond the expectations of anyone. We were in great need of just such a meeting, and Bro. Brown proved to be the right man for us. Not a word has been heard against the meeting Members of the other churches rejoice with us and have expressed themselves as being delighted with the preaching.—M. B. SUTTON.

INDIANA.

The meeting at Lebanon closed with 34 additions. The preaching was done by the pastor, A. J. Frank.—W. O. DARNALL.

Valparaiso, Feb. 27.—One confession at Hammond yesterday and one not previously reported, besides six confessions; one from M. E.'s, one from Baptists and one by statement in a meeting held recently by Bro. F. J. Shuey.—WALTER L. ROSS.

Huntington.—The First Church concluded last Sunday night one of the most successful meetings ever held here. We began Jan. 25 and continued almost five weeks. Immediate results, 52 additions; 44 by baptism and eight by letter and statement. A. P. Cobb, Decatur, Ill., did the preaching for three and one-half weeks. Then he could stay no longer. We continued the meeting for 10 days and gained 14 more additions. This was Bro. Cobb's first visit to Northern Indiana. All who heard him were delighted with his strong sermons.—W. F. WELLS.

Evansville, Feb. 27.—Our union meeting here with the First Christian Church and its pastor, Bro. Ira Billman, true, strong and energetic, and with the Bethany Christian Church, continues with the greatest possible interest. We had the great hall crowded and packed full yesterday and had 27 added; had 20 added last Lord's day and 97 in the last eight days. Bro. Billman spoke at First Church and I spoke at Bethany in the morning, then we met at Evans' Hall at 3 P. M., and addressed one of the greatest audiences ever assembled in this city to a Sunday service. At night the galleries and all were crowded and we had to close the doors and admit no more. Have had 155 added to date. Can only obtain the hall up to Wednesday night, and we will close and go to Springfield, Ill. Bro. Billman will continue the meeting at the First Church, and we believe reach many more and win them to the "old faith." A majority of the additions so far have been from the denominations.—CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

A meeting of a few days with the Barclay Church, Jasper County, resulted in seven additions.—W. H. APPLEGATE.

Thorntown, March 4.—We are in a meeting with home forces. Meetings 10 days, with seven accessions. Will continue with prospects of many more.—LEE TINSLEY, pastor.

Evansville, March 2.—[Later word.—ED.]—Closed our meeting at this place last night with 51 added at the last service, and 57 added the last day, 134 the last week, and a grand total of 234. We were at the little mission church two weeks (it only had 33 members), and were at Evans' Hall (capacity over 2,000) exactly 10 days (in all three weeks, four days), and it was crowded. Not one corner, but the whole city of Evansville is thoroughly stirred up over this work. "Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever."—CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

God's Will on Earth.

W. W. H.

God's will on earth will not be done
While few are rich, the many not
Because of laws that men have made,
Or laws of God long disobeyed.

God's will on earth will not be done
Until saloons are overthrown,
And every license law effaced
That have the nations long disgraced.

God's will on earth will not be done
Until His people all are one—
All creeds and names be laid aside,
And Christ in every heart abide.

God's will on earth will not be done
Until all voters, one by one,
Shall cast their ballots, firm and true,
'Gainst every evil, old or new.

God's will on earth will not be done
'Til idols all be overthrown,
And Christ is Lord in every land,
And armies all at his command.

God's will on earth no man shall see
'Til all to Christ shall bow the knee;
Then strife and wars shall be no more,
And peace shall reign from shore to shore.

Prison Echoes.

BY J. M. CROCKER.

Though my connection with the prison was severed nearly ten months ago, still its echoes are ringing in my ears and many of its thrilling incidents are ablaze in my memory. One of these is not without its significance to Iowa and the world.

On Aug. 20th, 1893, our subject at the prison chapel was "The Royalty of Christ." His conquest over death is evidence of his power. Not one of us expect to escape the clutch of death. How dare we measure arms with him who is the conqueror of death! Kings have bowed beneath the scepter of the King of Terrors. Conquerors have crouched at his feet. Obedient to his dictates humanity has been plunging into the appalling shadows for six thousand years. All who are assembled within these walls at this calm morning hour, one by one will receive marching orders from the icy lips of death. Sooner or later we will all bow down at his command. Aye, some of us, we know not how soon.

How often we utter things which we do not comprehend till an exclamation point is placed at the end of the sentence by the iron pen of time. On this occasion I did not realize the meaning of my own words till eight o'clock the next morning when one of the number suddenly threw up both hands at the approach of the grim monster; and all was over in a moment of time. Friends were wired and returned answer to have him sent home. Accordingly, at 7.40 P. M. I started with his remains to their last resting-place. This was a sad pleasure to me. Though he had passed alike beyond the reach of harm and the touch of human sympathy, yet it seemed that the lifeless form of his frail body should be accompanied on its last earthly journey by his chaplain. I never shall forget that night. After the preliminary transfers were made and we were safely on board the limited express of the Milwaukee, we took a plunge into the darkness, the headlight of the engine like a wedge of gold cleaving the sable realm of night. Onward we swept with lightning speed over the rivers and through the shadows. What a contrast between the lifeless form and its surroundings! The rush and roar of the train disturbed not his serene repose, now forever oblivious to all the tumults of earth. Nearer the fiery heart whose pulsations were whirling us onward through the shadows, still he was only one rail in advance of me. The living are only just a little behind those whom they follow to the city of silence.

How forcibly the painful incidents thrust themselves upon us—the fatal stroke, the arrest, the verdict, separation forever from the scenes of his boyhood, a life sentence served, the sudden release and the sad journey homeward. Thus closes the last chapter in the thrilling history of a mistake in legislation. Would it not seem that, when the mantle of official charity covers the factory of crime, the entire output should be labeled with a card of universal clemency? When this outlaw of commerce is allowed to stalk unshackled abroad in the land, we cannot atone for our sinful indifference by our severity upon the victims of the traffic.

I gazed out at the window into the darkness. The world was clad in deepest mourning. I listened to the distant thunder, the groan of wounded nature. I looked upward, and the stars had vanished. The fair face of the sky was vailed, and refused to gaze upon the last sad enactment that bequeaths such a thrilling responsibility alike to the legislator, the jurist and the voter.

Look at my companion in travel with his calm, white face turned upward toward heaven from which all stars have fled. Is there not a prayer upon those voiceless lips for vengeance upon the dread destroyer of our race? What flaming indignation bursts from those pallid lips against the legislator and the voter who have shared the responsibility of his downfall! Look at those motionless hands, gaze on those drooping eyelids and on that pale, sad face; and listen to that burst of anguish as the train slows up at the station, thronged by people with throbbing hearts and streaming eyes, and tell me if this is not the unwritten anathema of high heaven upon any legislative policy that dares to trifle with this question. The question of revenue to city, state or nation is beneath the dignity of so grave an issue. But "the people will have it and we might as well have some revenue from it." Judas Iscariot had this same argument in his favor in the betrayal of his Lord. He saw the inevitable approaching and thought he might as well have a little revenue from the transaction. But this argument did not save him from the bitterness of remorse when he saw what would follow. Nor will this same argument avail us when we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ.

A saloon is a saloon, whatever be the banner under which it sails. Whether the serpent of the still lazily suns himself behind a foaming mug of beer, or whether he lies coiled up in the palatial and perfumed apartments of the palace drugstore, both are alike saloons and destructive of human interests.

Talk about revenue in the traffic of human souls! There is not gold enough in the wide world to reimburse society for the existence of a single saloon for the period of ten years. For in that short period some soul will have been hurled over the battlements into the flaming depths below—some soul for which Christ died.

THE
CURES
ASTHMA

The Kola Plant.

Free. The African Kola Plant is Nature's Positive Cure for Asthma. In the short time since its discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing Specific Cure for every form of Asthma. Its cures are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, West Virginia, writes to the New York World, on July 23rd, that it cured him of Asthma of thirty years' standing, and Mrs. E. Johnson, of No. 417 Second St., Washington, D. C., testifies that for years she had to sleep propped up in a chair unable to lie down, night or day. The Kola Plant cured her at once. Mr. Alfred C. Lewis, editor of the Farmer's Magazine, of Washington, D. C., was also cured when he could not lie down for fear of choking. Many other sufferers including Rev. S. H. Eisenburg, Center Hall, Pa., and Rev. John L. Moore, Alice, S. C., gives similar testimony, proving it truly a wonderful remedy. If you suffer from Asthma in any form, in order to prove the power of this new botanical discovery, we will send you one Large Case entirely free. All that we request in return is that when cured yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. It costs you absolutely nothing. Send your address to The Kola Importing Company, No. 1168 Broadway, New York.

The Pyramid Cranks.

According to them, the builders of the Great Pyramid, were supernaturally instructed, probably by Melchizedek, King of Salem, says Dr. John Fiske, in the March Atlantic. Thus they were enabled to place it in latitude 30° N.; to make its four sides face the cardinal points; to adopt the sacred cubit, or one twenty-millionth part of the earth's polar axis, as their unit length; "and to make the side of the square base equal to just so many of these sacred cubits as there are days and parts of a day in a year. They were further by supernatural help enabled to square the circle, and symbolized their victory over this problem by making the pyramid's height bear to the perimeter of the base the ratio which the radius of a circle bears to the circumference." In like manner, by immediate divine revelation the builders of the pyramid were instructed as to the exact shape and density of the earth, the sun's distance, the precession of the equinoxes, etc., so that their figures on all these subjects were more accurate than any that modern science has obtained, and these figures they built into the pyramid. They also built into it the divinely revealed and everlasting standards of "length, area, capacity, weight, density, heat, time and money," and finally they wrought into its structure the precise date at which the millennium is to begin. All this valuable information, handed down directly from heaven, was thus securely bottled up in the Great Pyramid for six thousand years or so, awaiting the auspicious day when Mr. Piazzi Smyth should come and draw the cork. Why so much knowledge should have been bestowed upon the architects of King Cheops, only to be concealed from posterity, is a pertinent question; and one may also ask, Why, when it had so long lain hidden and useless, was it worth while to bring a Piazza Smyth into the world to reveal it, since plodding human reason had after all discovered every bit of it, except the date of the millennium? Why, moreover, did the revelation thus elaborately buried in or about B. C. 4000 come just abreast of the scientific knowledge of A. D. 1864, and there stop short? Is it credible that old Melchizedek knew nothing about the telephone, or the Rontgen ray, or the cholera bacillus? Our pyramidalists should be more enterprising, and elicit from their venerable fetish some useful hints as to wireless telegraphy, or the ventilation of Pullman cars, or the purification of Pennsylvania politics. Perhaps the last-named problem might vie in difficulty with squaring the circle!

Christ-ian.

R. J. TYDINGS.

There is a name I love to hear,
More dear than all beside,
And this, thy name, I love to wear;
My Savior and my Guide.

'Mong all the names that earth can give,
None with it can compare;
So let me now, while I shall live,
Have of that name a share.

Let not a name of sect or clan
Rest on thy servant, Lord,
But let his name, O Son of Man,
Be sanctioned by thy Word.

Thy name, O Christ 's in every clime;
Thy love 's to all the same;
So hasten now the glorious time,
When all shall wear thy name.

Temperance Stories.

H. M. BROOKS.

Sometime ago a newspaper reporter told me the following story of an old man who was a drunkard: He had spent most all his living in drink, when suddenly he came in possession of $1,500 from his wife's estate. As he was carrying home the check for the money he passed by a saloon where he did the most of his drinking and heard the saloonkeeper say, "There is my old friend who has lately come in possession of $1,500, and I will get at least one thousand dollars of it." The old man studied over the matter till he got home and said to his wife, "I will never drink any more whiskey."

"Ah! said his wife, I have heard you say that twenty times before."

"But," said the old man, "I never saw things before as I now see them," and related to her what the salooonkeeper had said. The old man saw the point, is still sober, and he and his wife are living a happy life.

There is a good story told of a barber, who was a constant drinker. To use the language of Eli Perkins, he would "drink with impunity or anybody else that invited him." One evening he was going home from work and stopped at the butchershop to get five cents' worth of liver for breakfast. Just at that time the saloonkeeper with his family drove up in a fine "turnout" and calld for a "forty-cent porterhouse." As a matter of course, the butcher waited on the saloonkeeper first. And while standing there the barber said he had "a little time for 'flection." For the first time in his life he saw the point that it looks like every man ought to see. He saw for the first time that he was giving money to buy fine clothing, fine horses and fine carriages and porterhouse steaks for the saloonkeeper while his own family were living in rags and eating liver. He quit drinking.

Sometime ago I was reading a story which greatly impressed me. It was a business man who had a fourteen-year-old daughter who came to him one morning and asked him for fifty cents with which to get a spring hat to wear to school. And he said to her, "Daughter, I am a little close for money; wait a little while." The father started up town and met four of his chums and after talking a few minutes proposed that they go and take something to drink. And this same man who did not have the money to buy his daughter a fifty-cent hat called out the drinks which amounted to exactly fifty cents. And just as he threw down the money the saloonkeeper's daughter, about the same age, came into the saloon and asked her father for fifty cents to get her a spring hat. And the saloon man without turning a word threw her the same fifty cents.

This man saw the point for the first time is his life. He saw that he had denied his own child, his own flesh and blood, the price of a hat and walked right straight to the saloonkeeper and gave it to him to buy his daughter a hat. When I see such things it is a little hard to keep sweet. And if I believed in kicking at all I would like to be chairman of the kicking committee!

Why the Difference?

If a man has a $50 bull pup he would look after it carefully and not let it run around at night all over town, but if he has a boy it is altogether different. He is turned loose at tender age to go to the devil, and then the people wonder where the army of tramps, bums, dead beats, loafers, gamblers and drunkards come from each decade. They are germinated from our homes and sown broadcast on our streets and alleys. It may be that your boy is making a growth in this direction. At all events, the boy should be given an equal showing with the bull pup.—Ex.

A Girl at the Navy-Yard.

A little girl of ten sends to the March St. Nicholas this account of a recent visit to the famous battle-ship, Oregon, the cruiser, New York, and the torpedo-boat, Cushing:

"DEAR ST. NICHOLAS:—I have been to the Brooklyn Navy-yard twice—the first time to call on Admiral Miller, on board the 'Brooklyn,' just before she sailed for the Queen's Jubilee. That day I went all over the Brooklyn, and saw the 'Maine,' for she way lying right beside the Brooklyn.

"Last month I was invited to the navy-yard to see the warships that had come back from Santiago. The lieutenant met us at the gate of the yard. He took us first to the 'Oregon,' which was in the dry-dock, having one of her big screws straightened and her keel painted red. We went up ladders and down ladders and all over the big ship. I was very much interested in seeing Cervera's own boat, which the men on the Oregon had captured.

"Just as we were leaving the Oregon, Captain Sigsbee was introduced to us. When he found that I was interested in the war, he said: 'Please shake hands with me again, then.' He is much better looking than his pictures and very nice to talk with.

"Next I went on board the 'New York.' She is so very big that even the sailors have plenty of room, and the officers have very handsome 'quarters,' as they call their rooms. The sailors were reading, writing, sewing on little machines, or sound asleep. They had a goat and cat for pets. I saw the big torpedoes and all the big guns. One of the officers gave me a band for my sailor cap with 'New York' in gold on it.

"Then we went aboard the torpedo-boat 'Cushing,' which looks too small for grown men to live on. It was just the shape of a cigar.

"They gave us a Mauser rifle from the 'Vizcaya,' a button off a sailor's cap from the 'Maria Teresa,' and a piece of the wheel that was in the conning-tower on the 'Maine.' I had a very pleasant time.

"Pay as I Go."

I met a fellowman the other day, who was very severe on another who had failed to pay a debt due him and who puffed up as he said, with a good deal of fervor, "I pay as I go." This suggested some questions and I began to fire them at him.

"How much did you pay the preacher last year?"

"Nothing, 'cause I don't owe him nothing."

"What did you contribute to missionary work during the year?"

"Not a cent; it is none of my business."

"What did you give to charity in 1897?"

"Nothing; I believe in charity beginning and remaining at home."

"What have you contributed to the support of disabled soldiers."

"Not a dime. Let the state care for them."

"What taxes did you pay on money you have loaned out?"

"Not a penny. That's none of the government's concern."

"Did you help the cripple in our community the other day?"

"No. Let all such go to the free hospital."

"Did you ever contribute to the support of a free hospital?"

"No. It is no home of mine, and I don't ask shelter from any of them."

"Did you offer to help the poor widow who lives near you, and who you know to be in want?"

"No, for the poorhouse is the place for all such."

"Did you help nurse that neighbor who suffered such long and painful illness?"

"No. Doctors and nurses are paid for that work."

"Did you welcome the stranger you saw in church last Sunday?"

"No. Let the ushers attend to that."

"Did you ever give a word of cheer to a discouraged brother man?"

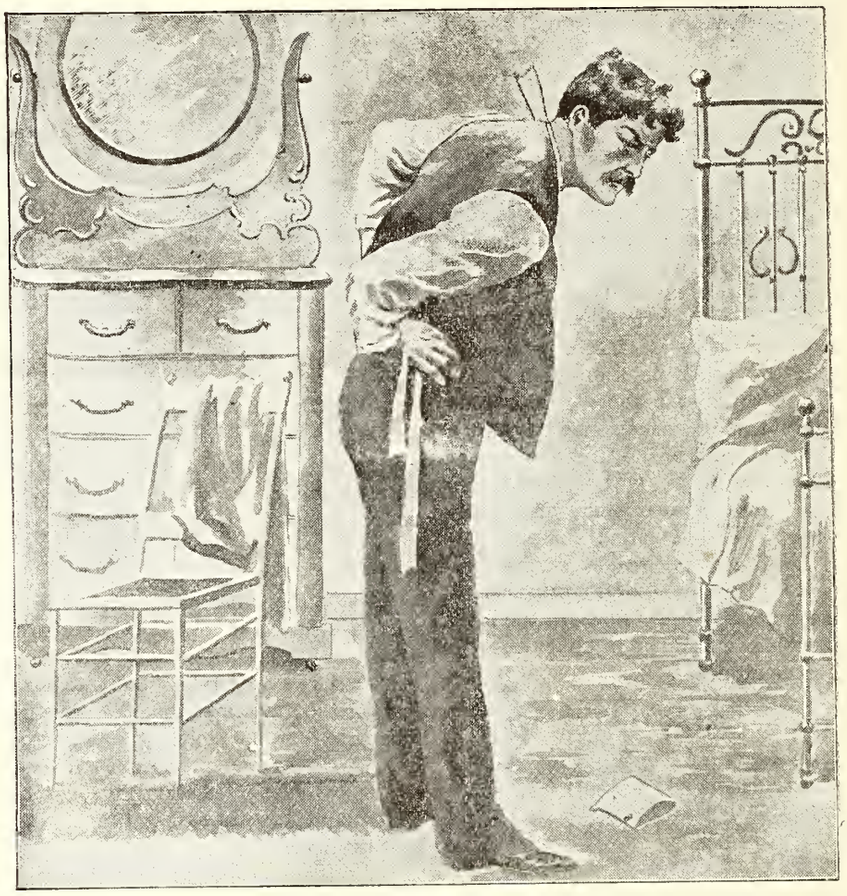
"No. Don't never bother with such folks."

"Did you ever speak a word of sympathy to a sorrowing soul?"

"Never did, and never expect to."

"Did you ever offer a hand to a fallen fellowman."

"No, my hands are busy at work."



"And yet you say you pay as you go."

Swamp-Root corrects inability to hold water and promptly overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night.

The Advance Society.

Additional names on our Honor List: Laura Belle Campbell, (Raytown, Mo.); Charlie R. Mountain, Floyd Reid, (Santiago, Mo.); Minnie B. Snyder, Stella Deniston, Nellie Campbell—I only give the addresses that have been changed. Now let us listen to the conversation between our members. Ella Cash, (Litchfield, Ill.): "My sister Mabel and I are orphans and live with grandma and grandpa, Rev. J. O. Henry. We hope to build a new church in the spring; I am a member. I hope the story of Jennie and George will be long." Mabel Cash: "I missed two weeks' reading during examination, but I am going to do better from now on, and see if I can't be a Roll of Honor member. Two of my authors received the greatest number of votes; I was very glad, for my authors are very nice. I didn't see many temperance books; they are always my favorites. You said chocolate is your favorite candy; well, it is mine, too." Zela Belle Home (13), Beloit, Kan.: "My favorite books are Little Women and Uncle Tom's Cabin. I have adopted Jennie's plan, and am fixing a 'Cozy Corner.'" Maida McCorkle, Newbern, Tenn., would like to correspond with other members. Lily Gooch and Clara Moses: "We have remembered all of our quotations, and said them last night for company." Mrs. M. D. Dever: "I always memorize what my son (Gerald) does and we recite what we have learned, while about the evening lamp, or out for a walk or drive. Thus we spend many happy moments together which otherwise might be wasted. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is always so full of good, helpful thoughts, we look forward for a glad feast each week." Mabel Worcester, Colorado Springs: "I am twelve and Jennie Weston seems about my age." Agnes Chinn, Independence, Mo. (12): "My little brother and I were in the carriage about the time for the moon to rise. 'Oh, Agnes, look at the black moon!' he said, but what he saw was a balloon." Charlie R. Mountain (11), West Liberty, Ia.: "I seldom miss Sunday-school, though I live four miles in the country. We have a lovely teacher, Miss Violet Star." (Children, that is a lovely name, isn't it? Sounds like a heroine out of a book!) "Mother is superintendent." Carrie M. Craig, Kirksville, Mo., is 11. Her list of favorite books begins with "Wide, Wide World." She invites correspondence. Mabel Gunther will soon be 12. At the time of her letter there was a big meeting going on at her church (University Church, Des Moines), and 107 had joined under Bro. McCash. Virginia Townsend, not yet four, lives on the Yazoo Pass, Miss. One week the waters of the Pass flows toward the gulf, the next it may move toward Moon Lake—the old bed of the Mississippi! Virginia says: "I was born in July and it was a hot day, too!" One night, hearing a cricket, she was frightened. Her mother said it would not hurt her. Virginia said, "Oh, mamma, that cricket's head is full of ideas!" Once when I spoke sharply to her, she said, "Grandpa, I wish you didn't have a tooth in your head." "Why, little daughter?" "Because you talk so rough." (J. W. Harris.) Gladys Hunt, Hamilton, Ill.: "I am seven years old, and they think I am too young to join the Advance Society and will get tired of it, but I don't think so. I have read a beautiful poem by John Hay. I am reading the Life of Frances E. Willard."

Other members: Anna (11), Lewis (9) and Elsie Conklin (14), Imogene, Ia.; Daisy Tomson (10), Richmond, Mo., three sisters, Bessie (15), Edna (14) and Gladys Fulghum (12), Mason City, Ia., Esther Shively (10) and Carl, her brother (8), Douglass, Kan.; Edith Odell, Enfield, Ill.; L. He can read and likes it, "if we tell him the largest words." Bertha Beesley (12), Moshelle, Mo.

Nora Wiltse, Sargent, Mo.: "Once while we were playing near the pigpen, a little boy, seeing a board out over the pen, said: 'Oh, I ain't afraid to get out on that board!' And he went out and began teetering; down he went into the mud. He got up all covered and began to cry and he said, 'That old pig got me by the breeches leg and pulled me down in the mud!'" (Application: Children, was this not a naughty boy to lay his disgrace to the fault of an innocent and helpless old pig?) Julia Cox, Cox, Mo.: "A little girl was eating molasses upstairs and she dropped some through the crack. Her mother asked if she had done that. 'I am too hoarse to talk,' called the girl." (Note: Evidently this girl didn't know that molasses is good for hoarseness.) Leonard Shank, Tecoa, Wash.: "I am 10 years old. I have made me a little record book." Edgar Waite, Pittsburg, Kan.: "My cousin, two years old, came six miles from her country home, one real cold day, to see her grandma. She said, 'I believe I wish I didn't tummed to see grandma, I feezed out my eyes!'" Floy Popplewell, Eureka Springs, is 12 and has recently joined the church. There are wolves where she lives. "One day papa was going to town in his cart, and something flew up and hit him in the back. He thought sure the wolves had him, but it was a bush in the road." Eltah Vince: "My little cousin seeing a man driving a wagon with his head turned to one side to keep the cold wind out of his face cried, 'Oh, mamma, look at that man. He has boke his neck!'" Lillie Oliver (12), Greenwood, Neb.: "My brother Rex (6) says he would like to join your society. One day a man said, 'Of course, if any one is born in America he is an American.' And a Dutchman answered, 'Then if a kitten was born in an oven, would you call it a biscuit?'"

Jessie B. Shafer: "Perry and Roe were sent by their father to chop down dead peach trees. Perry said, 'Roe, climb up this tree, and I will chop it down and give you a fine ride; it will fall easy!' Roe: 'Oh, no, Perry, you get up in the tree, and I will get up in the next one.' Perry: 'All right, wait till I get up!' When the tree cracked loud, Perry cried for Roe to stop. But Roe kept on, and the tree fell with a crash. Perry jumped up and rubbed his eyes and started after his brother, but Roe was ahead and meant to stay there. Perry soon gave up the chase. Roe thought he had never had so much fun, and when Perry got in a good humor, he laughed too." Hettie Hungate (13), Ogden, Utah: "Last Thanksgiving, our schoolroom had a festival. The boys bought the candy, the girls the cakes. The room was decorated with pictures and national colors. After recess in the afternoon we had our program till three; then cards were distributed with the name of a flower on each. Every two cards were alike. The girl called out the name of the flower, and the boy who had the same flower on his card, sat with her. There were 56 pupils, and as each girl brought a pie or cake, there was plenty of picnic." Jas. D. Morgan (10), Cardiff, Ark.: "One morning mamma came in the room and found brother sitting on the floor by the safe, while baby was throwing eggs in his lap. She looked so surprised to see the broken eggs." Florence Scarritt, Frankfort, S. Dak.: "When my aunt was sick, my uncle churned in a barrel-churn. When he had brought the butter, he poured in some hot water to wash it. After giving it a good washing, he drew off the water to see the butter; there wasn't any there. May be you don't think this is very funny. Well, neither did my uncle!" Lillian Waite, Pittsburg: "We went to church and two ladies were baptized. My little cousin asked right out loud, 'Mamma, have those women been awful naughty?'" Mattie Upton and Anna Black, Houstonia, Mo.: "We are little cousins, both 12 years old. Our grandpa (Geo. W. Longan) was a preacher in Plattsburg." Madge Masters, Ozark: "I live on top of a mountain, and have to go down it every Sunday to church. We can see the Arkansas River from my house. I go two and a half miles to school." Ione Glass: "My favorite books, Eight Cousins, Rose in Bloom, Under the Lilacs, Little Women, Old-Fashioned Girl, Last Days of Pompeii, Evangeline, Elsie Dinsmore, Barriers Burned Away, Esther, and favorite authors, Longfellow, Alcott, Owen Meredith." Alma Williams (8), Delta, Col.: "From the window I can see the Tunnison River and alfalfa fields. I live on Garnet Mesa." Florence Belle Beattie: "I must say I don't know much about authors, but since you put me to thinking, I am learning fast. Oh, I am so proud I joined the Advance Society! I think Mr. Tennyson so nice because he wrote Enoch Arden, and Mrs. E. G. White so sweet because she wrote Christ our Savior. 'Tell me the story simply, as to a little child.' I hope to be on the Honor List." And so she is, as we saw last week.

Dear friends, I have given up this page to you, though nearly dead to do the talking myself. Next week a meeting of the Advance Society will be described. In it you will find hints how to conduct a meeting yourselves, even if there are but two members in your town. I have received some prime stories about pets, but I want more. We now have 310 members.

THE DOOR AND THE SHEPHERD.*

The Gospel of John contains none of the parables which are recorded in the Synoptic Gospels, and in the ordinary sense of the word it contains none at all. It records no stories like those of the Good Samaritan and the Prodigal Son, but it contains many parabolic representations of our Lord, as those in which he calls himself the true vine, the light of the world, the water of life, the way, the truth, the life, the resurrection and the life, the door and the good shepherd. It will be seen that this method of Jesus as recorded in the fourth Gospel sustains the purpose of that Gospel as presenting a more subjective and centralized view of Jesus as compared with the Synoptics, fixing the attention more upon himself and less upon external objects and events. It may be said, also, that Jesus' teaching as recorded in the fourth Gospel is more positive and uncompromising than that recorded elsewhere. This is true to the character of the Johannine writings, which emphasize those fundamental oppositions between good and evil, from insistence on which the earlier writers may have shrunk. John knows no mediating ground between a close relationship to Jesus and positive antagonism. Things are either good or bad. There is either light or darkness. There can be no twilight to one who sees things from his altitude. This difference between John and the other writers does not argue disagreement, but only a different point of view, growing out of circumstances, which led them to use that material in the teaching of Jesus which most strongly appealed to their respective types of thought. It is significant that the Gospel which preserves for us the most tender pictures of the love of God is at the same time the most startling in its denunciation of human sin.

And sufficiently startling must have seemed the words of Jesus with which his discourse began. The writer of the Gospel has already pointed out the growing unbelief manifested by the Jews, which was soon to compel Jesus to restrict almost entirely his ministry to the circle of the disciples, as described in the second half of the Gospel, beginning with chapter twelve. Jesus' words are therefore increasingly stern as he faces the determined and growing opposition around him. His present language is directed against the religious leaders of Israel, who should have been spiritual shepherds caring for the flock, but whose leading was in the wrong direction. To himself the prophecies and hopes of the nation pointed; but on his arrival he was unwelcomed and in his ministry he was rejected. He was the only door leading into national and spiritual safety, into the fold of divine love and care. Ample provision had been made for the welfare of the people, and ample announcement had been made through prophets of the past. But the scribes and Pharisees were persistently attempting to lead the nation into the enclosure of righteousness by other openings, rejecting the door which had been set plainly before them. Thieves and robbers were all such. To apply such terms as these to the highly respected and self-satisfied ecclesiastics of his day was conduct sufficiently bold in one unprotected from their wrath as was Jesus.

The figure of shepherd life is so familiar in all literature that no explanation is needed. It was a calling so commonly followed in Jesus' day that the people understood perfectly his meaning, though the application may not have been so clear to their minds. It is not necessary to press every feature of the parable in order to understand its meaning. Many an illustration is used by our Lord whose central point is clear, while details which are added for the sake of vividness have no relevancy to the real purpose. Such seems to be the reference to the porter in the lesson. He had charge of the enclosure into which the various shepherds brought their sheep, admitting only such as had the right of entrance. Is is evident that the office of the porter here is not to be pressed as having a meaning beyond the mere completion of the picture as recognized by the Jews. It was the character of the true and false shepherd which Jesus was painting. The good shepherd chose the proper door, secured easy admission, was recognized by his own sheep, gathering them readily when he called them by name, and seeking for them the best pasturage, because he was interested in their welfare. The false shepherd was a mere hireling, a stranger, whose interest lay not in the flock, but in the fleece; affording no protection, giving no true guidance and only seeking his own selfish ends. Of course, the reference to the Pharisees and scribes is sufficiently plain to us; but they were not able to see Jesus' meaning.

Again, therefore, still more pointedly does he describe himself as the door through which the sheep must enter the fold, and which must therefore be recognized by those who would in any sense be true shepherds of the flock. All others who had come before him claiming such a position were only thieves and robbers. False teachers had been plentiful throughout Israel's history; fortunately they had had only transient success. Of course, Jesus' reference is not to prophets and true religious teachers who had prepared the way for him, and yet he desires in this sweeping and uncompromising statement to leave no question in the minds of his hearers as to his claim to be the only medium of salvation. The scribes were selfish seekers of their own interests; they were, therefore, in the strongest constrast with him who had come to give life and and to give it abundantly.

Having painted the character of a true shepherd and the necessity that all such should enter by the one door into the fold, he abruptly changes the figure and speaks of himself now as the good shepherd. Both functions were equally performed by him. His universal Lordship and supremacy as the mediator of salvation are admirably suggested by the figure of a door through which all obedient and faithful leaders of God's people will pass with their followers. On the other hand, it is equally true that Jesus sustains to all his disciples the character of a good shepherd to his sheep. He loves them all; he knows them individually; he calls them by name; he selects for them the best nurture and shelter; they know him and follow him lovingly and loyally. His intimacy of life with them is as great as with the Father, and his devotion to their interests goes the length of giving his life in their behalf. Such followers Jesus found among the Jews, and they realized all the blessings of his shepherd leading. But he assured these Jewish followers of his that there were many others outside their national boundaries who belonged to him as well, and that the progress of his gospel would bring them into the one flock, which, however various might be its characteristics of language, nationality, temperament and opinion, and howsoever many undershepherds there might be, would still be one flock with one shepherd.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

The Pharisees were not the last who have tried to discover other ways of salvation than through Jesus; any scheme which omits him as the central figure and the means of redemption falls under his condemnation. The true shepherd, whether pastor, Sunday-school teacher or parent, always points the way to Jesus as the true door into life. The characteristics of such a leader should always be those named by Jesus; knowledge of the names and characters of those led; love for them which is willing to go all lengths in their behalf; careful attention to the direction in which they are led. Every person who for other motives attempts to preach the gospel, to teach or to train children, is essentially a "stranger," incapable of rendering true service and certain to bring the flock to disaster. Thieves and robbers are all such as exalt self as the object of admiration and imitation rather than Christ, because they rob him of his true place in the heart and the affections. Any leader who deserts his followers because of danger and difficulty reveals the falseness of his character as shepherd. Every true shepherd must lay down his life for those he leads, in the sense of preferring their welfare above his own. The purposes of Jesus can never be fulfilled until all his followers are united in sympathy and love.

A Good Complexion

Depends on Good Digestion.

This is almost an axiom, although usually we are apt to think that cosmetics, face powders, lotions, fancy soaps, etc., are the secret for securing a clea complexion.

But all these are simply superficial assistants. It is impossible to have a good complexion unless the digestive organs perform their work properly; unless the stomach by properly digesting the food taken into it furnishes an abundance of pure blood a good complexion is impossible.

This is the reason so many ladies are using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they promptly cure any stomach trouble, and they have found out that perfect digestion means a perfect complexion and one that does not require cosmetics and powders to enhance its beauty.

Many ladies diet themselves or deny themselves many articles of food solely in order to keep their complexions clear.

When Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are used no such dieting is necessary. Take these tablets and eat all the good, wholesome food you want and you need have no fear of indigestion nor the sallow, dull complexion which nine women out of ten have, solely because they are suffering from some form of indigestion.

Bear in mind that beauty proceeds from good health, good health results from perfect digestion and we have advanced the best argument to induce every man or woman to give this splendid remedy a trial.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found in drug stores and cost but 50 cents per package. They are prepared by the F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

If there is any derangement of the stomach or bowels they will remove it and the resultant effects are good digestion, good health and a clear, bright complexion. Ask your druggist for the tablets and a free book on stomach diseases.

Across the Line in Kandiyohi Co., lives Edward T. Roa, writes Mr. H. E. Grandrud, of Kerkhoven, Minn.: "I can send you a most remarkable report. It seems almost incredible, and yet I can testify to the truth of it. The whole family of Mr. Roa was covered with sores over their entire bodies, and one of the children died of the disease. They used almost everything but without any benefit. Upon my urgent recommendation he bought two bottles of the Blood Vitalizer and two bottles of the Oleum Liniment, and used the medicines according to directions Some time thereafter I passed that way again and called on them and must say that I am surprised. They were all well and rid of those terrible eruptions. They were very grateful for what the medicines did for them."

Remember Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is not a drug store medicine. It is sold to the people direct through local agents by the manufacturer, Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 South Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Jesus the Teacher.

By H. L. Willett, Director.

Of the three titles often bestowed on Jesus —prophet, priest and king—and often linked together as a triple title intended to express his various relations to men, the first is by far the most expressive and appropriate. King he was in a certain sense, but not as the mediæval theology delighted to picture him, ruling with an absolute authority which had overthrown every element of opposition by the power of a resistless sovereignty. In the ages when the church was weak, and suffering bitter persecutions from its enemies, it delighted to think of the Scriptures in which the kingly and heroic side of the Messiah was emphasized and took refuge in the thought that presently his power would be displayed for the overthrow of the oppressors and the reward of the faithful.

And there are still those who preach the sovereignty of Jesus as an all-powerful Lord, to whose will all must bow, and whose commands are to be obeyed because it is impossible to disobey them without suffering penalties. And there was a period in which the priesthood of Jesus was emphasized, because it was the purpose of a large portion of the church to build up a priestly hierarchy with one man at its head professing to represent Christ upon the earth as pope. The ministry of our Lord was represented under the many forms of the priestly cult of Judaism and the few analogies supplied by the writer of the book of Hebrews, which were intended only to appeal to Jewish minds as pictures of the real relation of Jesus Christ to the believer, were amplified into numberless details of priestly ritual to buttress a plan of church administration which has reached its culmination in the Roman Catholic form of worship.

But a much truer representation of Jesus is that of a prophet, which was the name given him by the common people in the days of his earthly ministry, and which at once explains the other two titles. Jesus is king because his authority over men is that of one who knows the uttermost truth, and by revealing it unto men can save them from sin and its results. His authority is not that of the autocrat, the tyrant, but that of the prophet, the counselor, the Savior. He is also the priest, not because he stands as a part of a priestly ritual, but because he has opened a way of approach to God, and with the offering of his own life has led mankind "up along the world's great altar stairs to God."

Jesus is, therefore, in an especial sense, the world's teacher, and all his words and works went to conform the authority of his teaching. How little he spoke, and yet how much. All of his words recorded in the Scriptures would not fill an ordinary newspaper, and yet they are the most profoundly influential words the world possesses. And even the words of his which we have, have come to us at second-hand, for Jesus wrote nothing; and still their power seems undiminished, and their influence perennial.

Jesus was the ideal teacher. He knew how to teach men. He lived in the region of their thoughts and knew what words and ideas they could best understand. Ae spoke to them only of the greatest things. He never discussed trivial matters; and yet his words were so simple and easily understood, that all caught their significance. The language of our Lord is an especially interesting study. It was the ordinary dialect of the people of Palestine in his day, the Aramaic; but in his lips it became classic. His speech was direct, vigorous, chaste. He used few adjectives, one might almost say none at all; which is always the mark of a simple and strong vocabulary. He used many illustrations, some of which he took from the Old Testament, but most of which were supplied by objects and occupations about him. He was profoundly, almost passionately interested in the work of teaching, because he loved men; nor did he require a great audience for his sermons. Many times he spoke to but one person with seemingly as much interest and satisfaction as when he spoke to thousands. Thus only can one speak who loves man, because he sees in him an immortal nature capable of development.

A New Building for the Kentucky Female Orphan School.

The Midway school is in great need of a new building. Our class rooms before the enlargement of our school were none too large, and since we have increased the capacity from 70 to 125, these class rooms are much too small; in fact, the pupils are crowded right up to the blackboards.

The business department needs suitable accommodations, the teacher in this department having to give some of her instructions in her own bedroom for want of other room. The chapel is too small, for which reason we have determined to dispense with commencement this year. In addition we need a library, laboratory and a gymnasium. When we get this building, the rooms that are now used for class rooms will be made into bedrooms for the girls.

This will increase the capacity of the school to at least 35 more than we now receive. The girls are waiting to fill these rooms, but all this costs twenty-five thousand dollars. This money is in the pockets of the Disciples of Christ. It is the Lord's work. They are his stewards. We have no agents employed to visit these good people. We trust them in our emergency, and we believe they will not fail to help this beloved institution. The work must be done by generous gifts. We ask for donations of one thousand dollars and upwards. Let us hear from you, brethren. You have never failed us before, and we know you will not now. It is the Lord's work and it is urgent.

THE FLAMING TORCH IN DARKEST AFRICA. By William Taylor, Bishop of Africa. With an introduction by Henry M. Stanley. New York: Eaton & Mains.

This is truly a magnificent volume. From the mechanical point of view it is the perfection of the book-making art. Heavy white paper, clear, beautiful type, numerous attractive illustrations, make it a thing of beauty to the eye, as the contents make it a joy forever to the mind. Mr. Stanley explains in his felicitous introduction that the Zuli word "Isikunisivutayo," which the natives applied to the Bishop, signified, "The Flaming Torch" or "Fire Stick," and adds, "Since the native African speaks only as the facts impress him, it may be taken for granted that he has been deeply impressed by the beautiful truths taught, and the manner in which they have been conveyed to his mind by Bishop Taylor." The Flaming Torch, who so deeply stirred the heart and fired the imagination of the native African, in the preaching of the gospel, though an old man when this book was written, seems to have lost none of his illuminating genius; for this book he has written on Africa is a remarkable one in every sense of the work.

I have read every line of its 667 pages, one can hardly do otherwise when he once begins, and I do not hesitate to pronounce it an ably and charmingly written compendium of African knowledge from the beginning of the history of the dark continent up to date. It is a missionary book of thrilling interest. A comprehensive view of pretty much all that is known of the explorations, religions, missionary operations and the natives of Africa, is here set down in an attractive, reliable and readable form. In addition to a profound and extensive study of the subject, this eloquent Bishop and flaming Fire Stick has had many years' experience in African service. The sore need of the redemption of this dark land, and the wonders already accomplished in the salvation of the natives, is brought out with telling power. It would be difficult to ask a question about Africa that is not fully answered in this book. A large portion of the last half of the work is devoted to the marvelously successful labors of the Flaming Torch in South and West Africa. His work among the heathen has been as remarkable as it was in California and Australia many years ago among civilized sinners. In a single campaign of seven months' duration, in South Africa, he was instrumental in turning eight thousand two hundred people to the Lord. Of this number twelve hundred were colonists and seven thousand were native blacks. On a subsequent visit to this field the Bishop found the most of these converts faithful, and a great work being done by them to redeem and educate their fellows.

He was not only a revivalist preacher of great power, but he was a leader of missionaries and an organizer of missions. He took with him forty missionaries at one time into West Africa, and in his account of their labors and sacrifices he writes another book of Acts. If you are interested in the history and geography, the explorations and discoveries, the evangelization and civilization of the dark continent, Bishop Taylor's great book is the one you want.

MARCH MAGAZINES.

The notable thing about the eminent public men now writing for Scribner's Magazine is that they are skilled and entertaining writers as well as men of affairs. For this reason the contributions of Senator Hoar and Governor Roosevelt are literary production as well as chronicles of action.

Mrs. Burton Harrison gives the readers of St. Nicholas for March a charming glimpse of the village of St. Ulrich, in the Tyrol, where so many of the quaint little wooden toys that are played with—and broken—by the boys and girls of Christendom are carved from year to year.

The New Crusade began its ninth volume with the March number, and appears in an enlarged from. It contains many practical articles, such as "Wrong Posture as a Cause of Physical Defects," "Hygiene of the Skin, Hair and Teeth," "Sleep," "Emotional Prodigality," etc.

The magazines for March are full of vigor and freshness, a prophecy of returning spring. Each magazine in its particular line presents an inviting table of contents and is attractive from cover to finish. We have not the time for a lengthy review of each magazine now before us, but cannot refrain from mentioning some of their interesting features.

An article that will attract the attention of those interested in our country's history appears in the March Woman's Home Companion. It is a vivid account of the formation of the Southern Confederacy, by Edward Page Gaston, who has had unusual opportunities for collecting facts as yet unrecorded in written history of that period.

In the American Monthly Review of Reviews for March Col. William Conant Church writes a sketch of Gen. Elwell S. Otis, relating incidents in that officer's Civil War career in O'Rorke's famous New York regiment—the One Hundred and Fortieth. Other articles and departments are crowded with stirring events and questions of the day.

The March Atlantic opens with a brief and well-considered editorial article setting forth clearly and dispassionately the present international situation, and the rights and duties of the hour. In this, as in the articles in preceding numbers, the Atlantic voices the best and highest ideas and resolves of the most thoughtful and patriotic classes of the community in the great task of constructive patriotism which now confronts the nation.

Self-Culture for March has eighteen leading articles in addition to the usual interesting and thoughtful review of "The World and Its Doings," by the editor; and its nine departments are so filled with matter of interest to people of widely varied tastes, that one must be truly hard to please who cannot find in this issue something in itself worth more than the price of the magazine.

n the March Century, in his series of chapters on Alexander the Great, Prof. Wheeler gives a vivid description of the great battle at Issus. The thirty thousand Macedonians took the offensive, as usual, and it was not long before the half million Persians were routed. To even mention all of the interesting articles in this number of the Century would require much space. It will be a feast to magazine readers.

A unique feature of the Ladies' Home Journal for March is a page of interesting portraits of Pope Leo XIII. They show the venerable Pontiff in the grounds of the Vatican, passing along his favorite walks and drives, attended by his secretary, guards, or members of his household. The pictures are exceedingly interesting in showing the Pope as he lives at the Vatican, and his surroundings, and are doubly interesting because they are the first pictures that have been made of the Pope in a great many years.

Among the leading articles in Lippincott's Magazine for March is "Recollections of a London Lawyer," by G. Burnett Smith, in which he tells some amusing incidents of London law courts, especially connected with the career of Montagu Williams.

An unpublished and very important letter of Daniel Webster appears in the March Scribner's, in Senator Hoar's Reminiscences. It is the last antislavery utterance of Webster and is dated Aug. 23, 1848, and is addressed to Hon. E. R. Hoar.

"Lucifer's Lantern," is the unique title of a magazine published monthly at Salt Lake City, A. T. Schroeder editor, in the light of which the immoral caverns of Mormonism become visible in their true light. It is no agreeable thing to follow this lantern in its researches, owing to the revolting conditions that appear in its light, but all things are to be made manifest, and in this case the sooner the better for the country.

ADAMS.

Thos. M. Adams was born in Kentucky, Sept. 5, 1827, and died at Normal, Ill., Jan. 24, 1899. Bro. Adams was an active and devoted member of the church ever since his residence in Normal, and his loss is felt by all. His wife preceded him to the better land several years ago. He leaves two sons and two daughters. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." E. B. BARNES.
Normal, Ill.

BOOTHE.

Died at her home in Mt. Vernon, Mo., Feb. 17th, 1899, Mrs. Serena Boothe, aged 73 years, 10 months. I have known Sister Boothe intimately for 30 years and I never knew a more lovely Christian character, one who possessed more of the Christ-spirit. She literally followed her Lord in "going about doing good." Her most marked trait of character was her sympathy for the erring, and her patient, untiring effort to reclaim them. By her request Bro. Cochran conducted the funeral services at the Christian Church. She leaves two children, a son, A. T. Boothe, editor of the Peirce City Daily Empire, and Mrs. J. B. Davis, of St. Louis. F. C.

CARLETON.

Calista O. Carleton was born at Sullivan, Ohio, and united with the Church of Christ at the age of 15. She was a successful teacher in Hiram Institute when she married Prof. Norman Dunshee in 1853. They afterwards lived in Pardee, Kan., Abington, Ill., and Oskaloosa, Iowa, and at Drake University, Iowa. She died at Pardee, Feb. 17, 1899, and was buried beside her husband in Des Moines; aged 72 years. She was a woman of earnest piety and Christian culture. She leaves two daughters—Mrs. Andrews, of Pardee, Kan., and Mrs. Scott, of Maxwell, Iowa.
MRS. ROSETTA B. HASTINGS.

DAVIS.

John Davis, the proprietor of the Commercial house died at his home in Clay Center, Neb., Feb. 22, 1899. He was born in Dallas County, Iowa, Nov. 16, 1865. Services at the home. W. B. HARTER.

GRIFFITH.

Thomas Jefferson Griffith, born in Marion County, Mo., March 10, 1842, died in Monroe City, Mo., Feb. 20, 1899, aged 56 years, 11 months and 10 days. Bro. Griffith was married April 22, 1875, to Josephine Hayden who, with their two sons—now young men—is left to mourn the loss of a most devoted husband and loving father. He united with the Christian Church in Monroe City, Mo., in May, 1892, before which he was a very warm friend, and after which he was a most devoted member of it. He became a Freemason, Dec. 27, 1870, reaching the Knight Templar degree in December, 1874. He was tender and affectionate without effeminacy. He was pure and devotional without Phariseeism. Farewell, but not forever! C. H. STRAWN.

MATHENEY.

Clarence Matheney died at his home near Clay Center, Neb., Feb. 21, 1899. He was born in Macon County, Ill., Nov. 2, 1873. Funeral services at Christian Church.
W. B. HARTER.

SCHAFER.

Henry E. Schafer whose remains were brought here Feb. 18th, from Chicago, where he died after an operation for cancer. Bro. Schafer was born in Pennsylvania, in January, 1843, and removed when a boy with his father to Illinois, where he resided until some years ago, when he with his family moved to Malvern, Iowa. After moving to Iowa he left the Lutheran Church with which he united when 13, and united with the Christian Church, which he served for a number of years as an efficient elder. The preacher and Christian worker ever found a welcome home with Bro. Schafer. Three of his children were with him in Chicago at his death. One of these brought the sad news of his death here on Friday. The other two accompanied his remains to Galesburg, where they were joined by their mother and the other three children to attend the sad rite of burial near Loudon Mills.
EDWARD I. WARD.

H. Wilson, who is left to mourn her departure. Sister Wilson, at the age of 11 years, united with the Church of Christ, and was a most constant, conscientious and devoted member from her birth into the family of God till the Father called her home. C. H. STRAWN.

WITMER.

Tobias Witmer, Jr., died in Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 26, 1898. He was a son of Tobias and Anna Witmer, the father having preceded him to the home beyond. He was born Feb. 7, 1844, and was baptized during a meeting held by J. S. Sweeney in Tonawanda in 1869. He married Miss Caroline Urban who, with their only child Mary, survives him. Kind, generous and charitable, he possessed the good will and esteem of all who knew him, and his loss is deeply felt by his family and a large circle of relatives and friends.

Publishers' Notes.

We want you to see them—we mean sample copies of our Sunday-school literature. On receipt of request we will send a sample copy of each of our various Sunday-school literature for examination. If your school is not using our supplies you should examine what we publish before making your order for the second quarter of 1899. Write to the Christian Publishing Co , St. Louis, Mo., for samples of Sunday-school literature, and they will send you for examination a sample copy of each of the following: Lesson Leaves, Little Ones, Sunday-school Evangelist, Our Young Folks, Primary Quarterly, Youth's Quarterly, Scholar's Quarterly, Bible Student, and Little Lesson Picture Cards. From this large list any superintendent will be enabled to make selections especially adapted for the different grades in his school. Send your order for samples at once.

The children in the primary classes that are provided with Little Lesson Picture Cards are delighted with them. These cards are now being used in a majority of the Sunday-schools and are great assistance to the primary teachers, as well as a help to the little folks in preparing the lesson. On one side of the card is a bright picture illustration of the lesson, below which is printed an outline of the lesson and the golden text. On the other side of the card is printed an outline of the lesson and easy questions with answers. These questions are specially adapted to the primary class, and can readily be learned by the pupils in the primary department of the Sunday-school. A set contains thirteen cards, one for each lesson during the quarter and the thirteenth card for a review lesson. The intention is to have the teacher give to each pupil in the class one card on each Sunday during the quarter. On this card given out will be found the lesson for the following Sunday. The price is 2 1-2 cents per set, the set containing thirteen cards. The set is just enough for one pupil during one quarter. Each Sunday-school will need as many sets as they have pupils in their primary class. The Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, will take pleasure in furnishing samples of these cards on receipt of request.

Mrs. Anna D. Bradley, of Fort Worth, Texas, is considered one of the most popular writers of the South. Not long since she took the time to read "Queen Esther," the late production by M. M. Davis, of Dallas, Texas. After reading this book she was so delighted with its contents that she felt constrained to write briefly her impressions of the merits of this late publication. We can only give the following extract now: "Queen Esther comes to us in a new dress—no, not a new dress at all, but just the same royal robes which she has been wearing all these thousands of years, only the beauty of her garments and the richness of her jewels are so adjusted that we see them as we never saw them before. The book of Esther has always held a peculiar charm for me, and I thought I had studied it well, but with my friend and brother, M. M. Davis, as guide, I find whole storehouses of jewels which my eye had been too dull to see and my hand too clumsy to grasp. All who read 'Queen Esther' will be glad that M M. Davis has entered the field of authors." It is a book of 132 pages, and the price is 75 cents, postpaid.

Prof. B. A. Hinsdale, of Michigan University, has seen fit to devote much time to the study of the Great Teacher—Christ. The Professor has written a valuable work which he calls "Jesus as a Teacher," and which is worthy the attention of teachers both in religious and secular schools. The book is full of practical suggestions for the schoolroom of to-day. The author's long experience as a teacher justly entitles him as competent authority on teaching methods. The book embraces 330 pages; price, $1.25.

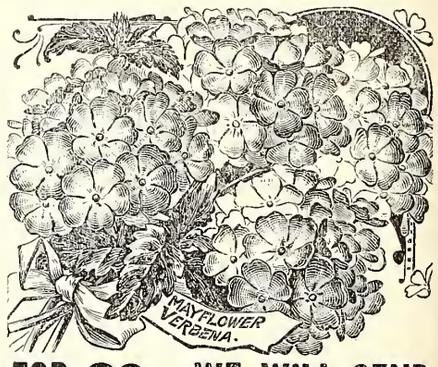
"One great need is more information in regard to what the brethren are doing elsewhere, and I think the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST very faithfully furnishes that."



SETH A. SHELDON.
Norman, Neb.

We candidly believe that it is true that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST never before furnished to its readers as great a supply of helpful and elevating literature as it is doing at present.

This is being done at a great expense, but we are convinced that the cause demands it, and we know that our readers appreciate it, because they are so earnestly assisting us. There is no just reason, that we can see, why the Disciples of Christ should not have as able and creditable a literary representative as can be found anywhere. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will be satisfied with nothing short of a position at the top.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

The recent purchase of 28,000 tons of 85-pound steel rails by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad brings the total amount of rail bought since March 1st, 1896, up to 115,300 tons, enough to relay 870 miles of track. Of the new rail ordered, eight thousand tons is to be laid on the lines west of the Ohio River, and twenty thousand tons is to be used as follows:

44 Miles on the Philadelphia division,
11 Miles on the Second division,
13 Miles on the Third division,
30 Miles on the Fourth division,
21 Miles on the Fifth division,
10 Miles on the Connellsville division, and
21 Miles on the Pittsburg division.

Much of the rail that will be taken up is still good enough to be relaid on branches where traffic is not heavy. The Southwestern division, between Parkersburg and St. Louis, will have forty thousand tons of rail to lay this spring.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The army beef investigating commission transferred the scene of its activity to Chicago for a few days last week to cross-examine the packers in that city who furnished the meat which is now under criticism, and to inspect personally the process of transforming a drove of cattle into a carload of canned roast beef. If the embalming process is the regular thing in putting up beef, they want to know it and intend to find it out by inspecting the process of packing as it is now carried on. After the visit of the commission to Chicago had been duly heralded by all the newspapers in the country for a week or so, and after their arrival there one afternoon had been announced with equal publicity, a "surprise" visit was made next morning to one of the packing houses most largely concerned. It was to be a surprise so that they would see the genuine process. The machinery was not in operation. But what a shock it must have been to the packers to receive so unexpected a visit from such distinguished guests! The next day they saw the factory at work, witnessed the several steps by which steers are made over into army rations in tin cans, ate some of the product and pronounced it good. But, after all, what does it prove? Comparatively few believe that the canned beef sent to the troops eight months ago was prepared by any villainous process. But if it was chemically prepared it was probably done to preserve it under special conditions incident to its use in a tropical climate. Nothing is proved, one way or another, by an examination of the regular process of putting up beef, unless it can be proved that this same regular process was employed in putting up the stuff which caused the complaint. The critical point is the condition of the beef, not when it was put into the can, but when it was taken out. The testimony of the men who had to eat it is the matter of chief interest. It is not too early to forecast the final decision of the commission. Certain hints of it have been given out. They will probably exonorate the packers from all blame, but will recommend that the use of canned roast beef as a ration in the tropics be discontinued.

General Otis is planning a decisive campaign against the Filipinos. He and the American forces generally are tired of the insurgents' sharpshooting and bush-whacking which keep them constantly on the alert but give them very little chance to win a decisive victory. Filipino sharpshooting is becoming the more objectionable because of their improving marksmanship and also because many of them are armed with longer range rifles than those carried by our troops. Gen. Otis will have a large job on his hands if he undertakes to plough straight across the island of Luzon with a series of parallel columns and sweep away all resistance as he goes. It is a simple and effective plan on paper, but will be attended with serious practical difficulties. Of these, however, Gen. Otis probably has an apprehension which does not require enlightenment from us. The American forces of both army and navy in the Philippines, en route or under orders, amount to about 41,000 officers and men, but not more than 28,000 are now there and ready for service. The army now in the Philippines numbers about 24,500, including infantry, cavalry, artillery and engineers. There are 19 American ships of war in Philippine waters, the crews, officers and marines of which amount to 3,540, but three of these were captured from Spain and have not yet recovered sufficiently to be available for service. Four more vessels are en route for the Philippines, two by way of the Suez Canal and the "Oregon" and "Isis" by way of the Pacific. These four carry nearly 900 men. Troops to the number of 4,800 are now on transports bound for the Philippines, and 7,500 more are under orders to join the Philippine division.

It is not surprising that so ardent an expansionist as Mr. Cecil Rhodes should take an interest in the sudden extension of American boundaries and should essay to pat us on the back and give us genial and patronizing encouragement. Neither is it surprising that he should utterly fail of any adequate comprehension of the situation. Mr. Rhodes is an imperialist, because he thinks England's greatness lies along the line of the expansion of her empire. It is in particular his ardent desire to see the whole continent of Africa added to the empire; but if a desire to elevate Africa for Africa's sake, enters largely into his plans, then he has dissembled his motives with remarkable skill. In other words, it is his concern for England's interests which leads him to promote the extension of British sovereignty in Africa. Naturally he thinks that we have taken the Philippines solely out of regard for our own interests and that we will repeat the process wherever we can do so to advantage. He makes the prediction that within a century we will have possession of all South America, the whole Western Continent, in fact, except Canada. Mr. Rhodes, having finished his mission in England, is returning to Africa. On the way he is stopping off to visit Emperor William, to talk over with him the scheme of building a railroad through Africa, from North to South, from Cairo to Cape Town. The project did not find very hearty backing in England, in spite of the vigorous advocacy. Remembering how near England and Germany have come to war over their African possessions within the last two or three years, and how intimately Mr. Rhodes has been connected with those troubles, it is interesting to see this friendly conference between these two chief combatants on the very subject most likely to stir up trouble.

England, Russia, Germany and France all have portions of the Coast of China set apart for their special use, and Italy now wants her share. The demand of the Italian Government for a 99-year lease of San Mun Bay in the province of Che Kiang, on the same terms on which Germany holds Kiao Chow, was refused by the Chinese Government, and refused in terms which the Italian Minister considered an insult to his nation. The demand of Italy involved the lease of San Mun as a coaling station and naval base, the possession of the outlying islands, the granting of railway and mining concessions; in short, the establishment of a fully developed Italian "sphere of influence" covering most of the province of Che Kiang. In spite of the refusal, Italian marines have landed and practically taken possession. Italy has at present only one warship in Chinese waters, and that is a cruiser of 1,500 tons. Others will be sent to back up the demand and the action which has been taken. There is a widespread belief that England is encouraging Italy in this step. On the surface this appears inconsistent with England's declared antipathy to the whole "sphere-of-influence" arrangement and her advocacy of the open-door policy. But perhaps, after all, the best way to secure the open door is to carry the sphere-of-influence scheme to the last degree short of the partition of the empire, and show how unsatisfactory it is to all. The diplomatic busybodies are now trying to map out an American "sphere" on the Chinese Coast, and are predicting that our friendship with England ought to help us to get a very desirable slice. The discussion of this matter is entirely the work of those who are not in a position to understand the plans of the administration or to know what we propose to do with our foothold in the Orient.

Meanwhile, and pending the meeting of the Czar's disarmament conference at The Hague, England and Russia have had a falling out over matters Chinese. The trouble arose from what is called the Niu-Chwang railway loan. About a month ago a British syndicate furnished China a loan of $11,500,000, at 5 per cent., with the Chinese Northern Railway as security. With this security came the assurance that no foreign power would be allowed to control this road. This was a matter of importance because the road is in the territory where Russian influence prevails. Russia accordingly protested and threatened and cited earlier agreements which the terms of this loan violated. England has remained firm and Russia has at length withdrawn her objection and notified the Chinese Government to that effect. The importance of the case is magnified by the fact that it was considered on both sides as a test of the firmness with which Great Britain would hold on to her claims in China.

M. Loubet, successor of Faure as President of France, is well on the way toward bocoming a popular president. He is very much "of the people" and is not in the least ashamed of it. Indeed, his public references to his humble origin and rural training have something of the ring of the familiar type of American campaign speech constructed to catch the farmer vote. Still, there is nothing of insincerity or demagoguery in his simplicity of life and his wish to go back to the farm when his term is finished. The Prince of Wales is quoted as saying: "I like M. Loubet much better than M. Faure. M. Faure affected the airs of a sovereign, which he was not; while M. Loubet acts like the worthy commoner he is." This is doubtless an accurate and sufficient characterization of the two men. At the same time it is a highly snobbish not to say impertinent remark, coming from royalty. Of course the general public can forgive the putting on of what Albert Edward elegantly terms "airs" in a king more easily than in a president, because they expect a president to have more sense, since the president is chosen presumably for his fitness, while the king owes his place to accident of birth. Consequently, people who passed no criticism upon the Czar, the Kaiser or the Prince of Wales, found fault with Faure for his love of formality and display. But for the would-be-head of one government to claim for himself and his kind the right to "affect airs" which he rebukes in the actual head of a neighboring government of the same grade, strikes us as a wholly supercilious and therefore a wholly despicable view. Perhaps the Prince's remark does characterize Faure and Loubet. But perhaps it also indirectly characterizes the Prince.

The Cuban sugar crop may have suffered during the war and the yield of other agricultural products may have fallen off, but one crop has flourished amazingly. Cuba has probably produced more army officers during the past year than any other nation in the civilized world. The plan of distributing a bounty of $3,000,000 to the Cuban army makes it necessary to get at the numbers, which is never an easy thing to do with Cubans. The total strength of their army they put at 47,855. All previous estimates of the numerical strength of Cuban forces have been found to be from three to ten times too large. It remains to be seen how many will turn up this time, but since there is money to be distributed there will probably be plenty to receive it. Of these 48,000, Gen. Gomez estimates that about 25,000 are officers, or rather more than half of the entire number. A committee from the Cuban Assembly has submitted a more detailed statement, giving the different ranks of officers and the number in each. There are two generals and seven lieutenant-generals, both of which ranks are higher than anything now found in our army. Major-generals number eleven. In all there are 93 officers with the title of gsneral. These are ably assisted by 563 colonels and 690 lieutenant-colonels. By this reckoning the total number of officers is 17,715, to 30,160 privates!

Among the bills which crowded the calendars of both houses of Congress during the last hours of the session were a large number providing for the erection of government buildings in various cities and towns. The appropriations for this purpose amounted to more than $9,000,000. The Government Printing Office is also to be housed in a new building, for the erection of which $2,000,000 was set aside. Senator Morrill's plan for the erection of a building for the Supreme Court is about to be realized, though he did not live to see it. A million dollars was appropriated for this purpose, and it is provided that the cost of the building shall not exceed that sum. The appropriation for our government exhibit at the Paris Exposition was passed as an item of the sundry civil bill. The amount is $1,210,000, of which sum $200,000 is to be used for the erection of the United States building.

Pennsylvania, Nebraska, California, Utah and Delaware are still unable to elect senators. The deadlocks continue. In Pennsylvania there was prospect that the trial of Mr. Quay on February 27 would settle the matter one way or another, but the trial was again postponed from that date until April 10. The delay was requested by the prosecuting attorney on the ground that the commonwealth did not have its case ready. This probably means a prolongation of the deadlock so much longer. There has, however, been a slight break in the monotony of repeated ballots. An arbitrary adjournment of the House by the Speaker, who is a Quay man, resulted in the withdrawal of the anti-Quay faction and the temporary organization of a "rump" House. Three of Quay's followers have withdrawn their support, and he now lacks eighteen votes. He was at one time within thirteen of the requisite number.

Since writing the above paragraph the deadlock in Nebraska has been broken and Monroe L. Hayward, Republican, has been elected to succeed Allen, Populist.

General Gomez has requested Governor General Brooke to reduce the number of American troops in Cuba and to retain the same number of Cuban troops in the United States service. Gen. Brooke is considering the matter and is consulting with Washington. The suggestion is exactly in line with the course which we must pursue sooner or later. The only question is as to whether the military government is established with sufficient firmness to make it safe to reduce the army of occupation so greatly. Judging from the conduct of the Cubans since the war, there is no reason to believe that the reduction would be dangerous. The enlistment of native instead of American troops is in line with the declared policy of the administration. The suggestion of Gen. Gomez seems to us to be a good one.

OSCILLATIONS IN RELIGIOUS REFORM.

Every student of religious history has noticed the alternating periods of thought and advance, in religious reform, and of traditionalism and stagnation. In seeking for the underlying cause of these phenomena in religion it will be found, we think, that the determining factor in every period of religious history is the relative prominence of the personal and the doctrinal elements. If the personal conception of religion prevails, in which the question of personal loyalty to God or to Christ is the supreme thing, it is a period of comparative religious freedom, of spiritual power and progress. But if the personal element be subordinated to the doctrinal, and great emphasis is laid upon peculiar doctrinal tenets, upon speculative beliefs, upon ordinances and forms of church government, it is a period of religious decline, of bondage to doctrines and customs of the past, and of spiritual stagnation.

We believe it safe to say that every religious reform under Judaism or Christianity has had its origin in a revival of the idea of our personal obligations to God, growing out of our personal relations to Him, and the superiority of these obligations of personal loyalty to those imposed by traditions, customs and doctrines handed down from those who have gone before. At the time of the Lutheran Reformation Jesus Christ, as a personal Savior, was obsecured and covered up by an endless routine of cermonies, traditions, superstitions, Mariolatry and idolatry. Luther's work was to discard this rubbish and bring the soul into direct personal relations with Jesus Christ, through faith in whom justification alone could be found. The Reformation of the 16th century won its triumphs in this conception of religion, which brought the soul face to face with God in Christ.

Our own religious movement, the Reformation of the nineteenth century, we know had its origin in a conception of Christianity which exalted Christ far above creeds and parties, and made the faith in him as a personal Savior to be the only evangelical, saving faith. Christian union was to be found, not in doctrines and creeds, nor in theories of church government and ordinances, but in unswerving loyalty to Jesus Christ. This introduced an era of great freedom of thought and investigation in which men, emancipated from the bondage of traditionalism and creedism, dared to think for themselves on the great questions of doctrine and duty and destiny. In this conception of Christianity, in which Christ has been lifted up above all our theories and doctrines and philosophies, have our remarkable victories been won.

There have been brief periods of decline among us in which certain doctrines and theories have received abnormal emphasis, and these have been periods of strife over small questions and the absence of progress in spiritual power and in religious work. The careful student of our current religious literature has not failed to notice of late a reactionary tendency towards a narrower party spirit, based, as usual, on the prominence of certain doctrinal conceptions. This tendency manifests itself in a dogmatic spirit; in uncharitable judgments on those who differ on questions concerning which there is room for difference of opinion; the disposition to rest satisfied with what we have and to shut out new light; to repeat party shibboleths with a view of exciting party spirit, and putting the emphasis on externals instead of upon growth in spiritual power and personal righteousness.

The tendency to which we have referred, let us hope, is only a passing phase so far as the great body of our membership is concerned. Indeed, there are vast numbers that have not been touched by this tendency, but those who have cannot long resist the strong current of new life that is swelling in the heart of the brotherhood and is making channels for itself in various forms of religious activity. A recent able writer has said that American expansion is but the inevitable result of an Anglo-Saxon trait of character that lies in the very blood of the race. We believe there is an inherent power in the very principles of the Reformation we plead, and especially in that supreme principle, the pre-eminence of Christ, which will carry us forward, in spite of all reactionary tendencies, out of bondage to traditionalism, out of narrow sympathies and fear of the light, into the larger life and destiny to which God has called us.

But it is a time for every thoughtful man among us to be on the alert, and when every agency and influence among us should be utilized for overcoming any tendency that impairs our progress and hinders the accomplishment of our mission. If the battle against the tendency to halt, go into permanent encampment, and throw up breastworks in the form of final doctrinal conclusions, has to be fought in every generation, let no man who values the truth or the permanent influence of this religious reformation, hesitate to take his place where he belongs, and do his duty. We honor the men who helped to deliver our movement from the meshes of sectarianism, in the generation past; shall we be found wanting in devotion to truth, if so be, this generation must meet the same issue in a different form?

Every intelligent reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST knows just where it stands in relation to this contest. It stands for loyalty to Jesus Christ, and for his whole, full-orbed gospel. It stands for progress in Christian knowledge, in Christian living, in Christian work. It believes this to be not only consistent with the principles for which we plead, but to be absolutely demanded by these principles. Not to advance is to retreat. Not to expand, religiously, is to contract. Not to maintain our freedom in Christ, is to return to the bitterness of sectarian bondage.

DOGMATIC PREACHING.

In a meeting of Congregational ministers in Denver, some weeks ago, there was an animated discussion of modern evangelistic methods—of those of Mr. Moody in particular. Some of these remarks, as reported in the Rocky Mountain News, were not complimentary to the world-famous evangelist. One of the brethren spoke of the "comparative failure of the recent Moody meetings in Denver." He said that "the meetings did not reach the unchurched people at all," and that "many ministers were grievously disappointed at the net results." "The churches," he said, "have received no large accession of members as a result of them." He said: "Seeing this I ventured to ask Mr. Moody for his own impressions as to the changes in the results of evangelistic work to-day compared with thirty years ago. Mr. Moody replied that he could see no change."

The pastor of the Congregational Church in Greeley, Colorado, was present and said that they never felt anything at all from Mr. Moody's meetings in Greely, neither in the church nor in the community. The church did not have an accession as a result of them."

The opinion was expressed, in this conference, that "dogmatic preaching could no longer be received as it once was."

That depends on what is meant by dogmatic, and on the spirit of the dogmatic preaching. What was meant by dogmatic preaching, in this convention, was at once illustrated in the following manner:

"Is the story of Jonah a necessary basis of the resurrection of Christ? Is the Eden story a historic verity? Must we believe that Noah and his ark stand for facts? If God was heard walking in one garden why are his footfalls now unheard? Did God truly engrave, in Hebrew, the ten words on tables of stone? Is the book of Genesis the oldest bit of writing in the world? Was man made 6,000 years ago? Is Jesus historic? If some men of note repudate the virgin birth of Jesus, why should we accept the resurrection story?"

This sapient gentleman also said: "It is not enough to say that the Bible is the Word of God and says so and so." "We may make," he said, "a man uncomfortable in that way, but if he is an intelligent man we shall not necessarily convince him by that alone."

Of course not. But what objection can be made, reasonably, to an effort to show that "the Bible is the Word of God?" Jesus reasoned with the people. The apostles of the Christ in their preaching reasoned with men. Why should not the advocates of Christianity do the same now?

It is said—was said in this conference—that a new evangelism is needed. We are reminded that "men now dabble in science." "They read," we are told, "such writers as Spencer, Huxley and Darwin."

But are not the spiritual needs of men the same as in the olden time? Do they not need soul-food as much as at any period in their history? "A new evangelism," it is said, "is needed." "It is one of the demands of our time."

What is the character of evangelism that will meet present-day demands? The only reply made in the conference here alluded to was as follows:

"The crude, harsh dogmatism of the evangelists has sadly needed to be steeped in mysticism. Its shrewd common sense, its sanctified worldliness, must be baptized in a new agony. It is mysticism for which our churches are hungering."

The principal speaker said, with good sense, that "the preachers must have something to teach the people. They must believe something. They must have cut their way through the subject of Christianity until they have attained definite conclusions of some kind, before the people will attain definite conclusions under their preaching." This is well said!

If mysticism is what men desire in preaching, they have it in abundant quantity now. Mr. Moody can be as mystical as any man who speaks to the people on religion. Hear him on "Regeneration!" He is certainly "steeped in mysticism." If "it is mysticism for which our churches are hungering" it can be supplied to order in almost any quantity by the popular evangelism of the present day. The word "mysticism" is defined as "the doctrine and belief that man may attain to an immediate consciousness or knowlege of God, as the real and absolute principle of all truth." Is not this the doctrine of Mr. Moody? Certainly this is the teaching of such representative men as Lyman Abbott and Amory H. Bradford.

There is a way in which to present the story of Jonah, the Eden story, the story of the flood in the time of Noah, the giving of the law at Mt. Sinai, the creation of the world, the biblical account of the origin of man, the New Testament account of the birth of Christ and the miracle of the resurrection—there is a way of presenting these great facts and themes so as to excite in the minds of the hearers merriment and ridicule. But presented in their connection and with an intelligent regard to their significance they will produce good results, both intellectually and spiritually. The story of Jonah, in its connection, contains valuable ethical and religious lessons. If the recital of these and kindred facts is dogmatic preaching the more we have of such preaching the better. A proper presentation of these subjects necessarily connects them with ethical and religious instruction.

Dogmatic preaching is preaching "marked by positive and authentic assertion." When, therefore, as quoted above, one of the speakers said:

"The preachers must have something to teach the people. They must cut their way through the subject of Christianity until they have attained definite convictions of some kind before the peaple will attain definite convictions under their preaching—

When he said this he spoke in favor of dogmatic preaching, when also he said:

"The crude, harsh dogmatism of the evangelists has sadly needed to be steeped in mysticism, its shrewd common sense, its sanctified worldliness, must be baptized in a new agony"—

When he uttered these words he gave an example of dogmatic speech. He indulged in the character of speech against which he inveighed.

Those who move the people are dogmatists. They may be mystics as above defined, and often they are, but they are at the same time dogmatic. There is no other way in which to bring people to definite convictions, and move them to action by public speech. The apostles were dogmatic. The master was the most dogmatic teacher and preacher. In the Sermon on the Mount the repeated occurrence of the words, "I say unto you," illustrated his dogmatism. "He taught them as one having authority."

The churches are hungering, and so are the people, for the Christ. The Christianity of the Christ revealed in the New Testament will alone satisfy the spiritual desires of men. Preach the Christ in a clear-cut, positive manner. Present New Testament Christianity out of profound personal convictions. This is our duty. This will meet and satisfy the cravings of the soul.

Hour of Prayer.

SECRET SINS.

(Psa. 19:7-14; 2 Kings 5:20-27.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, March 22nd.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: God's purpose concerning man is to cleanse his inner life—his thoughts, motives and desires—as well as the outward life.

One of the chief dangers from sin is its insidious nature. If it always came to us in the garb of an enemy of God and man, flaunting its flag of rebellion and challenging us to contest, it would not be half so dangerous. But it loves to work in the dark; it seeks an entrance into the inner citadel of the human heart through secret and unobserved passages and, disguising its true purpose, allies itself often with the better instincts and purposes of our nature and seeks to beguile them into evil. This makes it a dangerous foe. An enemy without is not half so dangerous as an enemy within.

It is in view of this insidious nature of sin that the psalmist asks, "Who can discern his errors?" What human insight is sufficient to follow sin into all its secret lurking-places and detect it? Hence the wisdom of the petition: "Cleanse thou me from hidden faults." No one can feel sure that his prayer covers all his guilt until he has asked God to search his heart and cleanse him from secret or unperceived faults. There are sins that are not known to others, but only to the one who commits them. But there are also sins, grievous faults, to which the one committing them seems to be insensible. There is often a dullness of moral vision, a deadening of conscience, which renders the sinner oblivious to his sins. This is a most perilous condition, and one against which we must continually be on our guard.

It would be difficult to conceive of a petition more wisely adapted to human needs and one which needs to be oftener made than that of the psalmist: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my Rock and my Redeemer." If the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts are acceptable in the sight of God, then indeed may we have confidence toward God. If the meditations of the heart are clean and pure our outward actions are likely to be.

The latter part of this psalm, cited above, indicates how our thoughts are to be cleansed. The Word and will of God, under various phrases, is said to "restore the soul," to "make wise the simple," to "rejoice the heart," to "enlighten the eyes," to "endure forever," to be "true and righteous," "more to be desired than gold," "sweeter than honey," because it warns us against sin, and "in keeping it is great reward." What supreme emphasis this gives to the value of a constant perusal of God's Word!

The selection from 2 Kings gives an awful story of a young man who supposed that no matter how much he sinned, if he did it secretly and kept it from the knowledge of his master, it would be all right. But alas! sin cannot be hidden very long. The avarice in this young man's heart ripened into falsehood, deceit and disobedience, betrayed itself in his countenance and in his actions, and resulted in speedy humiliation and condemnation. The leprosy which cleaved to him was but the outward symbol of his inward condition.

Let us beware of the secret encroachments of sin. Let us so flood our hearts and minds with the truth and Spirit of God and so engage our energies in righteousness, that there will be no room for secret sins within us. Our lives must be positively and aggressively righteous if we are to maintain inward purity.

PRAYER.

O, Thou who art the Searcher of all hearts and who knowest our inmost thoughts and purposes, cleanse us, we beseech Thee, from all hidden faults and keep us from presumptuous sins. May we remember that thine All-seeing Eye penetrates into the secret places of all hearts and that we can not hide anything from Thee. Help us to confess our sins that Thou mayest forgive them and cleanse us from all unrighteousness. And may the words of our mouth and the meditations of our heart be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, our Rock and our Redeemer. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

Jesus told us when he was here what was the greatest commandment, but he never indicated, we believe, which was the hardest to keep. Different persons would, no doubt, answer this question differently. Some think to love one's enemies is the hardest requirement of the New Testament. It is not so for us. The teaching of Jesus, "Take no anxious thought for the morrow," and the same teaching by the apostles, and especially by Peter who says: "Casting all your anxiety upon God, for He careth for you," is a requirement which we have found far more difficult to comply with than to love our enemies. We believe our experience in this respect is not an exceptional one. How many faces there are which show plainly enough the marks of care and anxiety! But this is not the will of God concerning us. He has distinctly enjoined upon us to lay our burdens upon Him that we may go forward with unburdened hearts to our daily tasks. Or, as Paul puts it, "In nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known to God." But how few of us, comparatively, are able to do this! We would like to do it, but how to do it—that is the difficulty.

We remember once reading a remark of Mr. Spurgeon on one of the passages to which we have referred, in which he said that the Lord knew this would be a very difficult thing to do, and hence he used a word expressive of great energy and effort —"casting all your care," etc. We know what physical effort is necessary to cast a heavy weight a distance from us. Something like that is necessary to cast our care on the Lord; and yet, it is clear that it is not a physical act, but an act of faith. We are willing to trust the Lord in most things, perhaps, but there is some particular interest that lies near our hearts in which we fear to trust him completely; hence our anxiety. The root of the trouble, therefore, is an imperfect faith. Connected with this, however, there may be certain elements that unconsciously to ourselves enter into our hearts and vitiate our prayers, such as pride of reputation or position, or a selfish regard for our own interests, rather than a supreme desire to promote the glory of God and the welfare of man, even though it involve us in reproaches and afflictions.

The beauty of childhood lies not only in its innocence, but in its trustfulness. How free from care and anxiety it is! Its parents may be poor, but it has no anxious care as to what it shall eat or drink or wear. It believes in its parents and fully trusts them, and goes about its play with a happy heart. How sad it would make a father or mother to find their little four-year-old child with wrinkled brow and caredrawn face, worrying itself about what will become of the family in the future, and seeking to solve some of the domestic problems for which it is entirely incapable! And yet, this is just what many of us are doing. We wrestle with problems that God has not called upon us to solve. We want to see out into the future for ourselves and our loved ones, and know how it will be with them. But it has pleased God kindly to veil the future from us and we must "walk by faith, not by sight." O, for a faith that can trust God in the dark, and sing songs of hope in the night of our sorrow.

Jesus summoned the sparrows from their flight in the air and from their nests in leafy bowers to teach us this lesson of trust. They have no barns nor storehouses, and yet God feedeth them, day by day. They waste no time in repining about their poverty, but hop about our dooryard and utter little notes of cheer as if the whole world was their storehouse. He called upon the lilies of the field to bear witness against our carking cares and anxieties: "They toil not, neither do they spin; and yet, Solomon in his glory was not arrayed like one of these." "O, ye of little faith, are ye not worth more than many sparrows and all the lilies of the plain?" So the Master would have us throw away our cares, and trust in our Father as He trusted in Him, and go forward cheerfully to meet the cares and responsibilities of life. Can we not do it in the strength which He supplies? It is surely worth striving for.

There are a few Christians who have learned this beautiful lesson, and whose faces continually shine with the light of an immortal hope. Their influence is a tonic to all with whom they come in contact. They move in an atmosphere of good cheer. They seem to say by their manner and disposition, "What a glorious thing it is to be a Christian, and how splendid it is to have a Heavenly Father in whom we can fully trust!" Their lives are winsome and attractive. Sick people and those in distress of any kind, love to have such persons visit them, for they bring with them a streak of sunshine that seems to shine down from the Heaven of heavens. These are they who are letting their light so shine before others as to constrain them to glorify our Father in heaven. Shall we not seek to be of this number? Such a disposition, temper and trust are more to be coveted than all the gold of Ophir. They cannot be purchased by wealth. They come only through the discipline of a soul that has learned to trust in the Heavenly Father.

Questions and Answers.

1. While I like the Christian-Evangelist very much I do not agree with you in some things. It seems to me that you, with many others, lay too much stress upon Alexander Campbell. You seem to leave the inpression that Mr. Campbell was the founder of the Church of Christ.

2. According to the history of Alexander Campbell, he was formerly a Presbyterian, but united with the Baptist Church with their confession of faith, was baptized into the Baptist Church and into the Church of Christ. It seems to me that if Mr. Campbell had changed his views on the subject of baptism, he should have been rebaptized in harmony with his understanding of the New Testament teaching. If Mr. Campbell was satisfied with his baptism that he received from the Baptists, was he ever anything but a Baptist? A. Anthony, Sr.

Hillsboro, Ill.

1. We have been unfortunate in leaving any such impression upon our correspondent's mind as that Mr. Campbell was the founder of the Church of Christ. We are quite sure that we have never written anything nor endorsed anything that could yield such an interpretation, and we think our brother is mistaken in his understanding of what he has read in our paper. For some months we have been having some historical studies relating to the origin of the religious Reformation, in the inauguration of which Alexander Campbell and his father were the moving spirits; but this Reformation is not the Church of Christ nor the Christian Church, an institution which had its origin as far back as the first Pentecost following Christ's resurrection from the dead. The churches we have established are, indeed, Churches of Christ, but they do not constitute, collectively, the Church of Christ, but only a part of it.

2. Bro. A. is equally unfortunate in his understanding of history. Mr. Campbell was never baptized into the Baptist Church upon "their confession of faith." He distinctly stipulated with the Baptist minister that he was to baptize him upon the simple confession of faith in Jesus Christ, the New Testament confession of faith. The inference which Bro. A. draws, that if Mr. Campbell changed his views upon the subject of baptism or of the teaching of Christ and his apostles, he should have been rebaptized, is wholly unauthorized and illogical. There can be no such thing as rebaptism in the very nature of the case. Admitting that Mr. Campbell's views concerning many points did undergo a progressive change, it by no means follows that he should have been baptized every time he received a new idea or a better understanding concerning Christ and his gospel. That might be safe enough for some people, who do not permit themselves to receive new ideas, but Mr. Campbell did not belong to that class. This false idea has wrought no little mischief and is a source of constant irritation and strife where it is insisted upon.

Instead of our churches being one in encouraging their Endeavor Societies to adopt the Bethany Reading Courses, we hear from some of our pulpits and read from some of our writers that these Bethany Circles are to be decried as inimical to the real aim of the Christian Endeavor movement. The claim is being made in various quarters, that when it is sought to acquaint "our" young people with the principles of our Restoration movement, and to instruct them in the ideals of our "Fathers," we are working on lines precisely as sectarian in essence as are the Baptists with their Y. P. Unions, and the Methodists with their Epworth Leagues. Some of these dissenters even insist that the use being made of the very name "Bethany" furnishes an exact parallel to the "Epworth" of the M. E.'s; and exception is also taken to the term "Fathers," and so it goes. On the other hand, it is difficult to understand how any in our ranks can do other than favor both the Bethany Reading Courses and the proposal to secure the undivided time of our consecrated brother, J. Z. Tyler, as national superintendent of our great C. E. work. Will Bro. Garrison kindly point out for the Christian-Evangelist readers wherein he considers the critics here referred to are astray in their conclusions; also, why a united effort among ourselves along this line would serve, not only the cause of union for which we so zealously plead, but at the same time the best interests of the Y. P. S. C. E. movement in general? W. P. Keeler.

Chicago, Feb. 18, 1899.

The point of objection to the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses is not well taken. Is it sectarian to propagate a non-sectarian movement? If any of these objectors hold and teach sectarian principles, they should by all means be kept out of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses, and, so far as we have observed, they have been kept out. Some of us, most of us, indeed, believe we have gotten hold of some truths and principles so vital to the progress of the kingdom of God, and a conception of Christianity so superior to that held by the average denomination, that it is vastly important to inculcate these things in the minds of our young people. The Christian Endeavor movement, with the Reading Courses, offers the very opportunity we need for making our young people familiar with the history, aims and principles of the Reformation we plead, and with the men who, under God, have wrought mightily for its success. The history and work of missions, so vital to church life and growth, are also included in these courses. The criticism on the name "Bethany" seems to us hypercritical; also on the term "Fathers." It all depends on whether we are ashamed of the principles we hold and the men through whom we have received them.

With Bro. K. it seems difficult to understand why any one should manifest indifference, to say nothing of opposition, to these Reading Courses, which promise so great results for the cause in the future.

Gen. Grant accounted for Sumner's rejection of Bible on the ground that the great Massachusetts senator didn't write it! Whether this was fair to Senator Sumner or not, we do not know; but there is a tendency in some human natures to look with suspicion on what is not hatched out under their incubator. This fact must be kept in mind in seeking to account for opposition to certain movements and measures which seem wholly beneficent in their aim and tendency.

The Religious World.

The South American Messenger, published at Toronto, Canada, in the interest of the South American Evangelical Mission, for January, published the following from the Gospel Message. The object in its publication is to show to what extremes the priests of Rome will go in their greed for gain in a country where their religion is unfettered:

Rev. Francis Borton, a missionary in Mexico, writes that recently in a Roman Catholic Church in Mexico, he read the following notice: "Raffle for souls. At the last raffle for souls, the following numbers obtained the prize and the lucky holders may be assured that their loved ones are forever released from the flames of purgatory:

"Ticket 841. The soul of Lawyer James Vasquey is released from purgatory and ushered into heavenly joys.

"Ticket 41. The soul of Madame Coldern is made happy forever.

"Ticket 762. The soul of the aged widow, Francesco de Parson is forever released from the flames of purgatory.

"Another raffle for souls will be held at this same blessed Church of the Redeemer on January 1st, at which four bleeding and tortured souls will be released from purgatory to heaven, according to the four highest tickets in this most holy lottery. Tickets, $1.00. To be had of the father in charge. Will you, for the poor sum of one dollar, leave your loved ones to burn in purgatory for ages?"

The Amerioan Bible Society, New York, recently held a conference in Boston that is likely to be repeated in other of the larger cities. The various religious bodies represented at this conference was good and the interest developed no small degree of enthusiasm in the work of the society. The Rev. F. Swartz, formerly a colporteur of the society, gave an account of the canvass of an American Protestant community in Northern Delaware. He and a colaborer visited 2,500 families and found 300 of them without Bibles. In every instance but one he sold a copy of the Scriptures. In two months he disposed of about 1,000 copies, finding it to be a better plan to sell than to give the books away. The amount expended by the American Society since it came into existence is $27,000,000. The printing of the translation is being done at the rate of 2,000,000 every year. It was stated that the American Bible Society circulates Scriptures in English, in 28 European, 39 Asiatic, eight Oceanic, nine African, nine American Indian and three South American languages and dialects. It supplies churches, city missions, Foreign and Home Missions, immigrants, miners, etc. Special funds are needed for the Philippines, for Porto Rico, for Cuba and for new fields.

No small degree of alarm was created in Roman Catholic circles last week by the reported serious sickness of the Pope. The Pope had to endure a surgical operation, and his age prevented the use of anæsthetics, but he stood the operation well. That which caused alarm, however, was the fever that developed later. His condition at this writing is not serious, and fears of an immediate demise are abating. The great interest in his coming departure centers in the next occupant of the Papal chair, which Leo XIII. has occupied for more than twenty years. The Pope is now eighty-nine years old, and retains his physical and mental vigor remarkably well.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

INTRODUCTORY PERIOD.

BY PROF. CHAS. LOUIS LOOS.

VII. The Formation of the Missionary Society.

It was manifest on the first assembly of the convention, that the chief burden on the hearts of the brethren was the organizing of a General Misssionary Society.

As soon as the matters of secondary importance, already noticed in this chapter, were disposed of, the real question that had called together this national assembly at once with power asserted its supremacy.

The extended letter addressed to the convention by the state meeting, of Indiana, among other things, declared:

"We feel deeply interested, brethren, in the subject of evangelical operations; and are fully satisfied that we ought to form a regularly organized missionary society, for the purpose of sending the gospel, in the hands of a living ministry, to all the destitute, uncultivated portions of the Lord's great field—which he declares is 'the world.' It is our hope—entertained with the strongest desire of being realized—that this subject may receive a due amount of attention during the session of your meeting, and that such a society will be formed ere you adjourn."

This letter was brought by a committee composed of L. H. Jameson, John O'Kane and S. W. Leonard. It was read to the convention by John O'Kane, who in earnest words explained the position of the Indiana brethren on the general resolutions communicatd in the letter.

J. T. Johoson, on the afternoon of Wednesday, arose and said:

"I wish to know if the object of this convention is not to inquire into the expediency of forming a missionary society. Have we not all the right of expression on this subject? Let us give full opportunity for discussion."

On Wednesday afternoon he offered these resolutions:

Resolved, That a missionary society, as a means to concentrate and dispense the wealth and benevolence of the brethren of the reformation in an effort to convert the world, is both scriptural and expedient.

Resolved, That a committee of seven be appointed to prepare a constitution for said society.

While the question of a separate Bible society was under discussion, C. Kendrick declared that he "thought the missionary society might supersede the necessity of a Bible society."

While the constitution of the new enterprise was under discussion, Prof. Pendleton offered this resolution:

Resolved, That the missionary society contemplated by this action be presented to the brethren as the chief object of importance among our benevolent enterprises.

On all sides utterances of the same tenor were heard expressing the feeling that pervaded the assembly and of the people they represented. J. T. Johnson's resolutions were adopted with spirit and without debate; so also that of Prof. Pendleton. The oonvention was prepared for the chief work that had brought it together.

The committee called for by J. T. Johnson's second resolution was announced by the chairman, D. S. Burnet. It consisted of John O'Kane, J. T. Johnson, H. D. Palmer, Walter Scott, John T. Powell and Dr. L. L. Pinkerton. These were the men who reported the constitution of the first General Missionary Society; it was adopted without material change, and the constitution in its essential features has remained the same to the present day. The committee was composed of the best intellegence and piety of the convention.

When the session opened on Thursday morning, the missionary cause took full possession of the convention. The second resolution, calling for a general missionary department in the Bible society, came up in the regular order of business. As soon as it was read, it was instantly by a motion laid on the table; and J. B. New, of Indiana, moved that the report of the committee appointed to prepare a constitution for a missionary society be now heard. John O'Kane read the report, which consisted of twelve articles, and then moved its adoption, and "that this convention recommend the immediate formation of such a society as contemplated in the report; and that for this purpose the convention adjourn for one hour"—all of which was agreed to at once, and with great animation.

When the assembly reconvened, the constitution was discussed, article by article, and with immaterial changes adopted with remarkable unanimity at the evening session. The name of the society, as first reported, was The Christian Home and Foreign Missionary Society. For the sake of simplicity and because the missionary field was held to be one—the whole world—the name was changed to The American Christian Missionary Society.

Some discussion was occasioned by the eleventh article, which fixed the annual meeting of the society at Cincinnati. This article was finally passed in the following form:

"The annual meeting shall be held in Cincinnati, on the Wednesday after the third Lord's day in October, or at such time and place as shall have been designated by a previous annual meeting."

On Thursday evening, after the society had thus been fully organized, the enthusiasm of the convention in its behalf became intense. The scenes expressive of joyful satisfaction that characterized that evening's session could never be forgotten by those who witnessed them. Congratulations were offered on all sides.

It was already late when a motion was made "that now an opportunity be offered to become life members and life directors." The consummation of the enterprise that had been the supreme thought of the convention, and the earnest desire of a great people that had now awakened to the greatest duty of the church, made men and women forget the three long sessions of the day, and that the hour for adjournment was at hand.

Well do I remember, even after fifty years, the promptness and ardor of the response to this "opportunity." From all quarters of the house names of life members and directors were crowded in, so that the secretaries repeatedly begged the brethren to "hold on" and give them time to record these names. In the list of these first life members were such names as H. D. Palmer, A. D. Fillmore, W. H. Hopson, George Campbell, L. L. Pinkerton, Carroll Kendrick, R. C. Rice, Dr. John Shackleford, Elijah Goodwin, John O'Kane, J. B. New, Dr. J. T. Barclay (himself, wife and three children), to whom this was a day of supreme exultation, for he was a missionary Christian par excellence. Several churches constituted their preachers and others life members. Prominent brethren whose names had long been cherished by the brotherhood received on this occasion an evidence of their esteem and affection. In a few moments D. S. Burnet, S. K. Hoshour, J. T. Johnson, James Challen, Walter Scott, J. J. Moss, L. H. Jameson and A. Campbell were made life directors by the joyful suffrages of the men and women in the convention. There was great enthusiasm among the women. Several brethren became life directors by their own contributions; these led the way.

It is a great delight, after half a century, to look over the names of the men and women who at the hour of its birth gave their adhesion and strong pecuniary support to our first general missionary society. I knew them all, and rejoice to testify also that they remained the friends of this glorious cause to the end of their days. I thank God that I yet live to tell the story of that great day.

"In a few minutes," as reported in the Millennial Harbinger, "two thousand five hundred and fifty dollars were subscribed by the members of the convention alone to this most benevolent and laudable enterprise;" including the contributions to the Bible and tract societies, in all about five thousand dollars.

When we remember that this was our first effort of this kind, and that our number at that time was perhaps less than one-fourth of what we are to-day, such an offering as this gave token of the generous inspiration of the convention. The states of Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana were the strongest then in the number of our brotherhood, and the largest also in representation in the convention and in contributions to the several enterprises it advocated.

I am sorely tempted to describe some of the striking scenes that characterized this remarkable session, but lack of spaee forbids it. I have yet before me the remarkable form of "the old man eloquent," Henry D. Palmer, whose features strikingly recalled those of Henry Clay, as he stood forth in the midst of us and poured out over the audience his earnest apostolic appeal, in words of deepest pathos, in behalf of the universal mission of the doctrine of the cross. He had made the great apostolic plea on the banks of the Tennessee and the Mississippi years before the Campbells came to America. Blessed be his memory!

THE LAST ACTS OF THE CONVENTION.

As stated in the beginning of this chapter, while the formation of a missionary society was chief in the intention of the convention, its purpose embraced still other interests vital to the welfare of the churches. As A. Campbell had expressed it, "The attention of such assemblies is to be devoted to general objects, such as can not be so well dispensed or attended to by particular congregations." Such was the feeling of this convention.

A select committee, therefore, composed of D. S. Burnet, John Young, S. Ayres, H. D. Palmer, J. T. Johnson, C. Kendrick, W. K. Pendleton, Walter Scott, J. T. Barclay and John O'Kane, was appointed to report resolutions—advisory and commendatory—that would express the mind of the convention on matters of serious importance to the church general. The report of the committee, as finally adopted, will show what were some of the grave questions that were at that day before the churches; it was as follows:

Resolved, That in all our deliberations, in all our efforts to organize God's kingdom, the moral rather than the material purposes of our organization be kept steadily before us; that we have the conversion of the world and the perfection of the brotherhood in holiness always before us.

WHEREAS, It is essential to a general union in the furtherance of the cause of our blessed Redeemer, that the brethren should confer with each other after truth; and

WHEREAS, The cultivation of the social and religious sympathies is necessary to bring into zealous and efficient action the energies of the brethren; therefore

Resolved, That we respectfully recommend to the churches the propriety of forming among themselves state and district meetings, to be held annually and quarterly, in such way as may seem expedient; and that the churches in their primary assemblies be requested to send to their annual meetings, by their messengers, the number of members in their respective congregations, with the names of their post offices.

Resolved, That we strongly recommend to the churches the duty and importance of organizing and establishing Sunday-schools in every congregation.

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to make out and publish a catalogue of such books as would be suitable for present use.

The committee on Sunday-school books was D. S. Burnet, J. J. Moss, C. Kendrick, W. Scott aud W. K. Pendleton. An advisory committee was appointed consisting of I. Errett, A. S. Hayden, A. Campbell, S. S. Church, L. H. Jameson, S. G. Pinkerton, J. B. Ferguson, J. T. Jones and A. Graham.

Other resolutions urged on the brethren were the strict observation of the Lord's day "in conversation and behavior; especially that they may refrain from starting, and, if possible, from prosecuting any journey, on this holy day," impressing "the need of increase of personal piety and devotion; "especially in reading the Scriptures, secret prayer, and family instruction and worship."

A committee of three was appointed "to prepare a concise and appropriate address to our Christian churches and brethren generally, embodying and recommending the sentiments, principles and measures agreed upon in this convention, to be published together with the report of the proceedings of the convention."

This body of resolutions, which so fittingly closed the work of this memorable assembly, sets forth in a clear light the spirit and aims that filled the hearts of all present. The welfare of Zion, the universal triumph of the kingdom of God over the earth, were in every word and every act. None better than the men here assembled understood the character, the value and the objects of the great cause we plead; they were its pioneers. None, too, ever comprehended better its power and destiny as a reformation leading to a restoration of apostolic Christianity, in doctrine, form, discipline, spirit and life, and to a mighty missionary activity that should seek the uttermost limits of the earth. None ever could and did understand better the wisdom, the duty and necessity of our establishing large and strong and well organized enterprises to carry into execution the great commission of our King to conquer the world for him. It is because these "men of God" felt deeply our shortcomings, and our wants that hindered the realization of all these ardent desires and hopes, that they thus met together, spoke and acted in this memorable convention.

And their work was not in vain; their hopes have been realized, their prayers answered; their faith in God, in his truth, in his church, has been gloriously vindicated, and will be still more wondrously vindicated as the years shall pass along.

Study the resolutions and acts of this convention, embodying its convictions and aims, and you will see that they have all been justified and realized by succeeding history among us. The states have long since organized from ocean to ocean domestic missionary enterprises, many of them remarkably successful. The great Sunday-school activity in the churches has become a great power among us. And so of ministerial education, and the other noble ambitions for the cause of God that burned in the hearts of the "glorious apostolic company" of our First National Convention. Let the memory of these men of God and of their work be ever precious to us!

THE NEW BIRTH.

JOHN H. CRUTCHER.

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man [person] be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3:5.

As the speculative question, Why did Nicodemus come at night to consult with Jesus in regard to his coming kingdom? cannot be profitable, we pass it, as John did, in silence.

The figure of a birth seems to have been suggested to the Savior by the erroneous conception entertained by the Jews in regard to their relation to the rights, privileges and blessings to be enjoyed in the kingdom of heaven. They seemed to think that on account of their natural birth into the family of Abraham they would be entitled to all the privileges and blessings of the kingdom soon to be established. John the Baptist had perceived and corrected this error when he said to them, "Think not to say within yourselves, we have Abraham to our father; for I say unto you that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." Therefore, understanding Nicodemus' erroneous views, Jesus proceeds at once to instruct him in regard to admission into his kingdom in the language of verse 3, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born anew he cannot see the kingdom of God." And in answer to his question, "How can a man be born when he is old?" Jesus explains in verse 5, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." In the analysis of this text we shall call attention first to the phrase

"KINGDOM OF GOD."

To what does it refer? There are two kingdoms to which the expression is applied in the New Testament. First, it frequently refers to the Church of Christ. Matthew in speaking of the coming kingdom generally uses the expression "kingdom of heaven;" while the other three call it the "kingdom of God." But Matthew in 16:18, 19 uses the phrase "my church" as equivalent to "kingdom of heaven." Then if "kingdom of God" is equal to "kingdom of heaven," and "my church" is equal to "kingdom of heaven," it follows axiomatically that "kingdom of God" is equivalent to the phrase "my church;" and that in the text we are considering (John 3:5) it may refer to the kingdom of grace—the church of Christ.

The second use of the expression "kingdom of God" is seen in its reference to the everlasting kingdom, as in Luke 13:28: "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God and yourselves cast forth without." Here the reference is clearly to the kingdom of glory. To which kingdom, then, does the phrase under consideration refer? To the church of Christ, or to the everlasting kingdom? Clearly to the former. For if we should refer it to the latter, then, as Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and the prophets never experienced the new birth, they would be excluded from the everlasting kingdom; and the exclusion would contradict the above Scripture statement which contemplates them in that kingdom.

Again, by referring the expression to the everlasting kingdom, it would exclude infants and idiots, who cannot undergo the new birth from that future kingdom of glory. They cannot enter the earthly kingdom, but may enter the heavenly one. For all they lose through Adam's transgression is unconditionally regained through Christ. And having no personal sins, they will be permitted to enter the eternal kingdom because they are sinless. It is, therefore, the church of Christ, the kingdom of God on earth, into which the Savior says a person cannot enter unless he is born of water and the Spirit. We next examine the phrase

BORN OF THE SPIRIT.

In the new or second birth there are two elements or parts, but only one birth. The Greek word (gennao) is represented in English by "begat," "be born," "begotten," etc. And when the new birth in its completeness is viewed as a unit, as in the text, it is highly proper to use the term "born." But when the Holy Spirit's work of renewing and regenerating the human spirit is viewed as an element or part of the process of the new birth, then the term "begotten" seems the more exact and preferable. And wishing to consider the Spirit's work as a distinct thought from that of "born of water," we proceed to ask: In what condition is a person who is "begotten of the Spirit?" And in the fullness of Scripture meaning we answer, "He believes that Jesus is the Christ." This, in the light of other Scriptures, seems to imply that the intellect, the will, the affections and purposes have all been turned Christward. It includes all the moral changes that take place in a person accepting Christ. It embraces everything in the new birth, except what is meant in the phrase "born of water." John says (1 John 5:11), "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is begotten of God." The Spirit being God's agent, to be begotten of God is the same as begotten of the Spirit. Again, the Savior said, "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them," etc. When persons were made disciples they were begotten by the Spirit. He said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." The term "believeth" expresses the condition of the mind and heart of the person that is a disciple, of one who has been begotten by the Spirit. It expresses the faith in Christ, and implies that penitence on account of sin, which precede and prepare one for obedience in baptism. But

HOW IS ONE BEGOTTEN OF THE SPIRIT?

The Scriptures not only tell us the condition of those begotten, but they teach us how persons are begotten. James says (1:18), "Of his [God's] own will begat he us by the Word of truth." God begets persons by his Spirit, and the Spirit uses the Word of truth. Paul says to the Corinthians, "For though you have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers; for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel." The same apostle says, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." In harmony with this Jesus commissioned his apostles and commanded them to go into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation, promising pardon to all who would believe and obey it. Thus we learn that the instrumental power which God, the Spirit and the apostles used was the gospel of Christ, the Spirit's Word of truth. In the days of the apostles, when holy men spake as the Spirit gave them utterance, although the people could not tell whence the Spirit came nor whither he went, yet they heard his words, believed in Christ and were thus begotten of the Spirit; and in this way he begets persons with the gospel. A person, then, who is a believer in Christ is begotten of the Spirit, and he is made a believer, or is begotten of the Spirit, by the preaching of the gospel. But this is only a part of the new birth; and we next consider the meaning of the expression

"BORN OF WATER."

The term "water" certainly means literal water. And as there is no time or place where persons, serving the Lord, come in contact with water save in Christian baptism, it must therefore refer to that act of obedience to Christ. The scholarship of the world with remarkable unanimity agree in so referring it. So teach Alford, Bengal, Wesley, McKnight and Barnes; the Episcopal Prayerbook, the Westminster Confession and the M E. Discipline. Dr. Wall, an Episcopalian, says: "There is not any one Christian writer, of any antiquity, in any language, but what understands it [the phrase 'born of water,' John 3:5] of baptism; and if it be not so understood, it is difficult to give an account of how a person is born of water any more than born of wood" (Vol. 1, page 92). Alford says: "All attempts to get rid of this have sprung from doctrinal prejudices." Since, then, it must refer to Christian baptism, what is that act of obedience to our Lord? It is certainly apparent to every candid man that sprinkling or pouring a little water on the head cannot satisfy the demands of "born of water." That only a submergence of the entire person under the water and an emergence therefrom can meet its requirements. That "born of water" equals immersion; i. e., a burial with Christ in baptism and a resurrection therefrom to a new life. The new birth, then, consists in believing the gospel of Jesus Christ and being immersed in water. The Savior said in the great commission, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," or pardoned. His language implies (in John 3:5) that when a person is born anew he is in the kingdom. And his language in the commission affirms that he that believes and is baptized is saved. It follows that the same conditions that bring one to salvation admit him into the kingdom of God; that the moment a person is pardoned, he enters the kingdom; and the moment he enters the kingdom he is pardoned; that pardon and an entrance into the church of Christ occur at the same moment of time.

We may now better appreciate the great importance, yea

THE NECESSITY OF BEING BORN ANEW.

If intelligent, accountable persons are to pass through the church of Christ or kingdom of grace in order to enter the kingdom of glory; and if the new birth is necessary to an entrance into the church, its importance cannot well be overestimated. You will observe that it is not a birth of water only; not a birth of the Spirit only; but a birth of both "water and the Spirit;" that neither one alone will admit one into the church or kingdom of God. Jesus says: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." We may desire to enter, may pray to enter, may seek to enter, but into that kingdom of God we cannot go unless we are "born of water and the Spirit." Kind reader, have you thus been born?

On February 7th Prof. Henry Perserved Smith, formerly of Lane Theological Seminary, and now of Amherst College, joined the Hampshire Association of Congregational Ministers. He then wrote to the Presbytery of Cincinnati and asked them to take such action as seemed to them best in the circumstances. This action will cleanse the next year's Presbyterian volume of Minutes of a record not honorable to the Presbyterian Church, which put against the name of one of the best scholars and truest Christians in the church the word "suspended;" action which had been taken for his views on the subject of high criticism. The Presbytery, therefore, could not give him a letter of good standing, but the association cordially received him without a dissenting voice being raised.—The Independent.

A TYPICAL CHURCH.

GEO. PLATTENBURG.

This paper proposes a simple amplification of statements found in the first chapter of the first letter to the Thessalonians. Paul calls his readers "ensamples," types, for others. They are described as finding the ground of their being "in God." He is the source of their life, they exist by his agency, are subjected to his will and are consecrated to his service. It may seem a little out of date to raise a question as to manner and matter preached to these people, to learn how they were brought "into God." In Acts 17:1-5 it is put after this fashion: Paul "reasoned" with them, a thing frequently alien to modern methods; he reasoned "out of the Scriptures," something still more alien to certain types of professional evangelism. He proposed no theory, but stated facts. He "opened and alleged that Christ must needs have suffered and risen again from the dead"—things to-day, even in some pulpits, regarded as the figments of disordered minds. The death of Christ is no more to such than that of Socrates and his resurrectiononly a story of an emotional and deluded woman. The summation of Paul's declarations, for the sake of the builders and advocates of theological formulations, I write here as a separate statement, "THAT THIS JESUS, WHOM I PREACH UNTO YOU, IS THE CHRIST."

This brings us to a matter that may be no more than mentally curious. Paul, showing the manner of the reception of "the Word," and its effect upon the lives of its hearers, uses a triplet of triplets, or to be more bookish, a trilogy of trilogies. Having declared that they had received the message, not as the work of men but of God, he gives us the first trilogy as to the manner of its reception: 1. In power; 2. In the Holy Ghost; 3. In much assurance.

The current New Testament use of dunamis (power) is to express that supernatural power by which Jesus and the apostles wrought miracles, and is not infrequently rendered by the word "miracle." It is said that "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power," and this is illustrated in the same verse by the ascription of miraculous healing to Jesus (Acts 10:38). Paul tells us that the Gentiles were made "obedient by word and deed, through mighty signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God." Here are three words that present three aspects of the same thing.

So then it appears: 1. That the above proposition is not only "alleged out of the Scriptures," but is maintained and vindicated by the manifestation of miraculous power during the apostolic period; 2. That the source of this power is the Spirit God; 3. That the effect of the reception of the testimony was "much assurance."

Here we have the order urged by the Fathers—fact, testimony, faith.

The terms of this trilogy are related, not as antecedent and consequent, but as cause and effect.

This opens the way to the second trilogy, which Farrar says is Paul's "fundamental trilogy of Christian virtue."

1. The work of faith. The activity of the race is the product of its beliefs. If there were no faith there would be no movement, no life. James states a truth universal when he says, "Faith without works is dead." This is just as true out of religion as it is in it. It is not solely their faith that Paul remembers, but its work. What a glorious list of illustrious men and heroic women, names made immortal by faith, the Hebrew letter gives to the world! What transcendent victories they won; what matchless prodigies they achieved; what measureless sufferings they endured, sustained by the inspiration of this vast principle, through which even the eternal and unseeable are recognized and comprehended!

2. Labor of love. Labor is more than work. There are many who can work when everything is auspicious, but few can labor when afflictions, temptations, disasters and discouragements come. The word used here (kopos) carries in its bosom the notion of pain, weariness, of such wailing and grief as attends the smiting upon one's breast. The labor of love is not simply a work of beneficence, as the lexicons give it, but it is the grievous and wearisome burden that comes with many a despairing cry and many bitter tears, and which love only is willing to assume and bear.

3. The endurance of hope. There is one who receives the Word "with joy," but he "dureth for a while; for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the Word, by and by he is offended." There was another who brought forth fruit "with endurance." If hope remains, one sees through the rifted clouds "golded days, fruitful of golden deeds," and is content "to labor and to wait."

Paul, now turning back to their reception of the gospel, repeats under another form his "fundamental trilogy."

1. Faith—manifested in their conversion, in their turning from idols to the true God. This "turning" means the moral and spiritual reversal of the whole life movement and finds its genesis in faith.

2. Love, which serves the living and true God. "If ye love me ye will keep my commandments."

3. Hope, that "waits for his Son from heaven." This hope also "waits for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body."

How exceedingly just it is that those of whom such things are true shall be called "types." A few days since, I saw in the headlines of a sermon by one of the sprightliest of our younger preachers, this phrase: "Conditions of Membership in a Present day Church." The minister was likely not responsible for the phrase. However that may be, it shows a trend of present thought. Have the conditions changed with the years? If so, why? Has God, or man, or sin changed? Would not the preaching, briefly outlined in this paper, and marked by such blessed results, do for any age and any people? Is it not true that such a church is as fit for an "ensample" now, as it was centuries ago? Surely, yes. Why, then, are we continually hearing furtive intimations that such radical change has taken place in the needs of men, that the old gospel has ceased to be efficacious? Moral diseases are as old as the race and requires the same divine remedy. "This same Jesus who is the Christ" is the one only healer of the souls of men. And in his presence, like Thomas, we cast away all doubts and cry: "My Lord and my God!" and give ear to the voice that said: "Ye are clean through my Word."

TOOLS FOR POLISHING PREACHERS WHO HAVE NOT HAD THE ADVANTAGES OF AN EXTENDED EDUCATION.*

H. A. DENTON.

What I write is for those mentioned in my subject. These suggestions are not given as final. The writer does not hold that this is the only scheme. It is only one of many that might be suggested. He believes it will be of use to those who feel the need of such work, but have no well-defined views of what to read, or what books to place in the library first.

First, get a revised version of the Scriptures. Buy a copy with simply the text with marginal references. Let the helps go. They are little used, and they only add bulk to the book and make it unwieldy. Then Smith's Bible Dictionary, the Standard Dictionary of the English Language, by Funk & Wagnalls Company, Cruden's Complete Concordance and a Schaff-Herzog Cyclopedia of Religious Information. Add to these a set of the ninth edition of the Encyolopedia Britannica. Herein you will find introductions to the books of the Bible, and all phases of religious subjects treated admirably. Make much of these books.

It will do no harm to review your grammar. Give it a thorough overhauling. Any late edition will do. Take Hill's Rhetoric and devote some time to it. Then study slowly and patiently Welsh's Development of English Literature and Language, and Greene's History of the English People. Then give time to read Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, Milton's Paradise Lost, and buy Knight's edition of Shakespeare, eight volumes, for occasional reading. Of course you will not neglect the history of America and her nations.

To get an introduction to ancient and mediæval history, get the following books from the History Primer Series: History of Egypt, by F. C. H. Wendel; History of Rome, by M. Creighton; History of Greece, by C. A. Pyffe; History of France, by C. M. Yong; Roman Antiquities, by A. S. Wilkins; Old Greek Life, by J. P. Mahaffy; Mediæval Civilization, by G. B. Adams, and Tozer's Classical Geography.

You will find it helpful now to take up Jevons-Hill's Logic, Haven's Mental Philosophy, Smyth's Christian Ethics and Laughlen's Political Economy.

Next, give good work to Fisher's Church History, Fisher's History of Christian Doctrine, Hopkins' Evidences of Christianity, Butler's Analogy with Dr. Emory's Analysis and Harris' Philosophical Basis of Theism.

You will find it profitable to take up Fresh Lights on Biblical Races, by Prof. A. H. Sayce, six volumes, and Rawlinson's Ancient Egypt,and Edersheim's Bible History, seven volumes.

Do your very best work on Terry's Hermeneutics, Phelps' Theory of Preaching and Toppin's Pastoral Theology.

Two works that will be a delight to you are Stoker's Life of Christ and Pierson's New Acts of Apostles. The study of them will give you a new conception of giving for the sake of others, and a new fire for the conversion of the ends of the earth.

In order to know something of some branches of importance to the preachers of to-day, read carefully, making notes, Elements of Geology, by Le Conte; Orton's Comparative Zoology, and Young's General Astronomy. You will fail to get part of astronomy because of mathematics, but it will greatly enlarge your conception of things and place you beyond the reach of many vagaries that pass current in many circles. Add to these Prof. Fairhurst's Organic Evolution Considered.

Buy a good edition of Josephus, and probably it would be of advantage to read carefully Keightly's Mythology. Read and study Plutarch's Lives. English translations of Homer's Iliad, Virgil's Æneid, Tacitus, two volumes, and Livy, two volumes, will be of value to you.

Take and read three—not less—of our church papers. Read our own Christian Quarterly. Buy the Monthly Review of Reviews. Read the Biblia Theca Sacra. Attend our conferences, assocations, congresses, etc., etc., and keep in touch with the leaders of thought.

Of our own works you should have the lives of Stone, Scott, Smith, Errett, and Grafton's Life of Campbell, and the Christian Baptist and Millennial Harbinger should have a place in your library. Get the debates of Campbell with Walker, McCalla, Owen, Rice, Purcell. Also Christian Missions and Historical Sketches, by F. M. Green, and A. McLean's Circuit of the Globe.

In order to get the benefits desirable from this outline of study, it will be necessary to possess some of the "gray matter" and continuity enough to apply one'sself. The road to a literary finish is one of drudgery. Do not burn the midnight oil; sleep then; that is the time for sleep, but use the day diligently and systematically. Devote a few years to this kind of work, and you will be able to think for yourself on most questions coming up for answer, and be able to think to the point, too.

I cannot refrain from adding a word against the tendency of many preachers to gorge themselves upon a certain kind of reading—books of sermons, books on homiletical and exegetical subjects, by racy writers rather than thorough scholars, cheap and voluminous commentaries—rather than take this work which lies at the very foundation of culture.

I have thought best not to treat the subject, "How to Gain a Working Knowledge of the Original Tongues of the Book," which might be expected here, but to reserve it for another time.

By oversight Prof. J. W. McGarvey's Lands of the Bible was not mentioned, as it should have been after Tozer's Classical Geography.

During March we will present to every one paying their own subscription to 1900 and sending us $1.50 for one new subscriber a copy of The Wonders of the Sky, a beautiful little cloth-bound volume of 82 pages, written by W. J. Russell, with an introduction by J. H. Garrison.

Our Budget.

—Let the March offering contiuue.

—Bad weather should not hinder the March offering for Foreign Missions.

—Now is the time for heroic effort to the cause of Foreign Missions.

—Some churches have done nobly for Foreign Missions, notwithstanding the storm.

—It will not do to permit the offering for Foreign Missions this month to fall below that of March, 1898; that would have a bad influence upon all other missionary offerings for the year.

—In the article this week on the Christian Orphans' Home, by Joel Brown, certain pictures are referred to which failed to reach us, and so could not appear with the article as indicated. The Christian Orphans' Home is expecting a large Easter offering from the Sunday-schools everywhere.

—Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds' missionary exercise, designed for Intermediate and Junior Endeavor Societies and Mission Bands for Easter, cannot fail to interest and impress an audience when appropriately rendered, and we feel sure that it will largely increase the children's offerings for missions on that day. The audience, of course, will have the opportunity of adding liberally to their offerings.

—President E. V. Zollars, Hiram, O., will dedicate the new house at Worcester, Mass., March 12. A special program has been prepared and a large audience and a long to-be-remembered meeting is expected. The pastor, Rowland A. Nicholas, and Pres. Zollars will be assisted in various services by Dr. W. A. Belding, of Boston. A number of special songs and solos will be rendered.

—A portion of Chaplain Carlisle's article on Cuba, published in our columns recently, appeared in the New York Daily Tribune with accompanying explanatory remarks from S. T. Willis, our New York correspondent. We are glad to see leading dailies like the New York Tribune, et al., supplied with information from our columns. Thanks to Bro. Willis for his enterprise in behalf of good literature and the cause we plead.

—A glance at the 16th annual report of the Indians' Rights Association, just to hand, speedily convinces us that a person gets but a very superficial and imperfect knowledge of the state of the different Indian tribes and their relation to each other and to the United States from our secular papers; especially to the extent to which they have been the prey of frauds under the name of national legislation and national agencies. Should you care to investigate these matters send to the above association at Philadelphia, Pa., for a copy of this report.

—Benjamin Franklin Manire, whose picture appeared upon the front page of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST last week was born in Bedford county, Tennessee, February 11, 1829. In 1834 he saw with awe and trembling, his father and mother led into the clear stream and buried in baptism; in 1846, under the ministry of J. J. Trott and W. S. Speer, he made the good confession and was baptized by John M. Barnes, who also led him into the literary finish ever afterward seen in all he wrote. In 1851 he went to Mississippi as a teacher near Cotton Gin Port, where in 1853 he delivered his first discourse. He was ordained with George Plattenburg in July, 1855, at Prairie Mount, Mississippi, by Bros. Butler, Deanes and Hooker, with the approbation of the Palo Alto and Cotton Gin churches. In 1852 or '3 was married to Mary McCormack, who lived only a few months. Again he was married December 27, 1855, to Mary E. Neil, Shelbyville, Tennessee, by whom he had five children; four of these are living, but his faithful life companion passed away May 6, 1897. His life work has been teaching and preaching in Mississippi, at Palo Alto, Columbus, Baldwyn, Winona, Saltillo, Eureka; besides holding meetings in hundreds of towns and schoolhouses. He preached two years in Mayfield and Murray, Kentucky, 1881, and 1882 and in Montgomery City, 1889, and 1890. For many years he has migrated to Florida for the winters and for many years he regularly visits his daughter in St. Louis, Mo. His name is a household character in the conventions and homes of Mississippi.

—Thanks to the Christian Index for its kind remarks about our initials and its quotation from a recent article in this paper bearing on the ideal home.

—Rev. J. F. Adair, an Advent preacher, who recently came into our ranks under the preaching of Bro. Shamhart, Aberdeen, S. Dak., is highly commended in every way by R. H. Bateman, pastor of the church at Santa Ana, Cal., which see in another part of this paper. Bro. Adair's wife also came with him into the Christian Church at Aberdeen. We are glad to receive into our fellowship persons so highly commended for their Christian living, their ability to do us good, and the evidences of sincerity in their motives. We trust Bro. Adair will be made use of at once by some one or more of our churches in need of a preacher.

—The journal published by the Christian and the Missionary Alliance, New York City, is one of the most profusely illustrated journals that comes to our table. The pictures are largely of a missionary character or bearing, in half-tone, and greatly add to the interest of the themes discussed. The March number is an unusually fine edition in attractive cover and opening with a number of fine views of mountains, valleys, citizens and things of South America. No people contribute money more liberally for missionary purposes than Christian Alliance people. Their givings have put to shame anything yet witnessed on this line in the United States. They believe in missions and show their faith by their works.

—A Kansas subscriber writes to know what we think of a church that "has a good house of worship which has been dedicated to God, whose members will not hold meeting on Sunday, who have no Sunday-school and show no interest in the work, and who have rented the house to a lodge that has recently been organized." We shall not be backward in giving our opinion on this situation. If the facts are as stated, they convict this church of unfaithfulness, of worldliness, of lack of religion and devotion to Christ, if not of hypocrisy in making any claim to be a Christian Church. The facts are shameful in the last degree. What these members apparently need is conversion. No church with a converted membership could possibly neglect the Lord's house and the Lord's work in the way indicated. Evidently there has been some very superficial work done in that community by some one claiming to be a preacher of the gospel. The State Mission Board of Kansas should send a preacher to that town to teach to these people the first elements of Christian life and service.

—The first Sunday in March, the day set for the offering for Foreign Missions, proved to be an exceedingly unfavorable day for such a work. Storms prevailed in almost every part of the country and in many places the churches could not assemble. The effect of these storms upon the offering was disheartening. There was a great falling behind that of last year for the first four days, as the reports show. To overcome this loss and place the offerings ahead of those of last year for the same time will require most prayerful effort. Great preparations have been made for the largest offering for Foreign Missions in our history, but at this writing we are behind the record of last year. But the churches will not permit an inclement day to defeat their prayers and efforts. Certainly they will rally to the cause with increased vigor and cease not until the victory be won. But the time is short. The offering for Foreign Missions should be largely completed this month, as other months have their burdens and duties. Let every church endeavor to make the offering this month and to make it the largest in their history. See reports in this paper of the great liberality that some churches are showing in behalf of Foreign Missions and come to the rescue.

—Grayson College, Whitewright, Tex., has obtained judgment against a saloonkeeper for selling liquor to a student to the tune of $500, and the judgment has been confirmed in the higher courts. Other fees and costs raises the saloonkeeper's bill for that drink to $2,000. Perhaps saloonkeepers will learn by and by that there is something in law after all. Perhaps, also, the timid voter will learn by and by that prohibitory laws can be enforced.

—Not since the Missionary Intelligencer began has a better number appeared than the March number of this year. Its every page pulsates with living, vital missionary forces. It is filled with the missionary spirit and fairly glows with the earnestness of its editors and contributors. Its burden, of course, is the March offering.

—The Foreign Society has decided to enter the Philippines. Some of our own people are there now. They believe that self-supporting and self-propagating churches can be established there in a few years. The call to enter Cuba and the Philippines seems to be a call of God.

—The missionaries in India, it is said, can not teach in all the homes ready to listen to them. It should be understood that all who are eager to hear are not ready to believe the gospel; but the fact that so many are ready to listen shows that the attitude of the people is different from what it was a few years ago.

—The March offering should continue until every church has contributed to the cause of world-wide evangelism. The church may be small, it may have some indebtedness upon its property, but no one of these things should excuse it from helping in the furtherance of the gospel. The way to grow strong is to put forth effort. An increase of the missionary spirit in any church will help to pay off all obligations.

—If for any reason the offering for Foreign Missions was not taken last Sunday it should be taken next. It is hazardous to delay. Other claims will demand a hearing and this may be neglected.

—If pledges have been taken for Foreign Missions they should be collected within a reasonable time. If this is not made the special duty of some particular person, the pledges may go uncollected.

—One member of the white apron fraternity announces his determination to have a law introduced in the legislature to "abolish Sunday!" This is striking at the taproot of the matter. As long as we have Sunday and churches and preachers to remind us of God and duty, and to oppose sin, the saloonkeepers are bound to have trouble.

—The Outlook, March 4th, contains four strong and valuable articles. Their titles and authors are as follows: "The Regeneration of Cuba," by George Kennon; "America and the Far East," by Lord Charles Beresford; "Great Britain's Lawmakers," by Percy Alden; "America's Working People," by Charles B. Spahr. These are timely articles and will be read with a deep interest by many people.

—Hon. Lyman E. Knapp, ex-Governor of Alaska, has written an open letter to the Senate Committee protesting against the policy of high license for the sale of liquor, which is a provision of the new criminal code as passed by the House. It seems to be assumed, says ex-Governor Knapp, that the same means of regulating the sale of liquor which is in force in the District of Columbia will be equally good for Alaska. It is forgotten that the District has an area of only sixty square miles, while Alaska contains 572,000 square miles. The District has a population of 250,000 law-abiding citizens, while the total population of the vast area of Alaska does not exceed 40,000 people, fully three-fourths of which is in the depths of barbarism or only emerging therefrom. The white population is scattered over the country in little mining camps, exceedingly difficult of access. High license, therefore, will mean the debauching of the 30,000 natives of Alaska as there is no means of protecting them effectively if liquor is admitted under any form of license. In the mind of ex-Governor Knapp this policy will mean the ruin of the native races to satisfy the clamor of a few hundred liquor sellers.

—It has been the custom of a great many Sunday-schools, for many years, to make Easter Sunday the occasion for an offering for the Christian Orphans' Home and they will repeat the good work again this year. The Christian Orphans' Home is one of the noblest fruits of the Christian spirit and such offerings are always acceptable, not only to the managers of the Home, but also unto God. The Home is a fine illustration of applied Christianity. The good work done by this Home, from year to year, is increasing in favor in the churches and enlarging their liberality toward its support. It is expected, therefore, that our next Easter day will bring to it the most liberal offerings yet received. To do this every school heretofore contributing should respond again, and in addition new schools should enlist in this good work. The Orphans' Home board furnishes, free, Easter programs for the occasion and a large number of schools have been supplied with them. But they are not essential to an offering. If you have not this program get up one of your own and take an Easter offering for the Christian Orphans' Home—sure.

—The American Home Missionary for January and February, 1899, has just appeared and being a double number is doubly interesting. On the inside cover is the picture of a missionary tree showing all the branches of the Home Missionary Society and its fruits from the first. On another page is a full-page picture of the hall in which the jubilee Convention in October is to be held. The literature of this dual number of the American Home Missionary is full of the Jubilee spirit and of facts and figures calculated to enthuse every reader with jubilee enthusiasm. In this number the revised list of our preachers in the various states appears. The list may not be perfect in some ways, but it has become a necessity. This list has been arranged by G. A. Hoffmann, of Columbia, Mo., and he has endeavored to have it as accurate as possible. Any inaccuracies that may be found, however, should be sent to him at once.

—The agitation against the liquor traffic, corrupt municipal governments and other alarming evils throughout the land seems to be more determined and effective now than ever before. If this can only be continued there is reason to hope for permanent good results It does seem that such movements will certainly gain the good will and support of the better class of citizens everywhere. Men cannot always be indifferent to social, industrial, municipal and national evils. Their encroachments will soon endanger all that is dear to us in this life and our souls in the next if left unheeded. There must be a reformation in these respects or our cities and our country is gone. There is no time, even now, to lose. An uprising of the people against all forms of iniquity in society, in business, in politics and in governments is the need of the hour.

—The Christian Tribune, Peter Ainslie, Baltimore, Md., editor, is one of the neatest and richest papers for its size and money that comes to our table. The first page is usually illumined with a large picture of one of our leading preachers and its contents written or selected with care. The editorial notes and comments are pointed, terse and strong, and in appearance it is a paper that no one need be ashamed to own as a part of his spiritual supply. The Christian Tribune is growing in its circulation, especially in the East, where it has many warm friends and is doing a good work. And may this good work increase continually, is our best wish for Bro. Ainslie and his excellent journal.

—The third annual convention of the National Good Citizenship League will be held at Cincinnati, May 2nd, 3rd and 4th, 1899. The proceedings, general discussion and program of addresses from well-known and representative speakers, will be in accordance with the aims and objects of this movement, which briefly stated are as follows:

1st—Unification of reform forces.

2nd—Promotion of the study and practice of good citizenship.

3rd—Eclecticism at the primary, caucus and convention—selection of the best and most competent in nominating candidates for public office.

4th—Direct legislation through the Initiative and Referendum.

5th—Proportional Representation.

6th—The Imperative Mandate.

For further particulars address S. T. Nicholson, secretary and treasurer of the National Good Citizenship League, Cincinnati, O.

—The pastor of one of our city churches in a distant state in a recent letter writes as follows:

I have just finished my first reading of the latest number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and I feel that I must tell you how I appreciate it. I do not exaggerate when I say the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is precious to me. If we could only sow the brotherhood with copies of the paper every week for a month or two, it would treble the subscription list. It is because they do not know the blessed intercourse we have with all our brethren through our papers that they imagine they can do without them. I feel sure this intimate introduction would reveal the necessity of a religious journal like the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in every home.

It strikes us that there is a good deal of practical wisdom in the foregoing suggestion. We feel sure that if the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST could have the opportunity of pressing its own claims, simply by the character of its contents on thousands of members who are reading no religious journal, it would make a place for itself where it would be a welcome visitor, as it is now in so many thousands of homes. We send out blanks to those who will furnish us a list, not simply of names, but the names of such persons as could, would or should subscribe. The distribution of these sample copies, however, should be accompanied with a few commendatory words from the pulpit, and followed up by a personal canvass, to secure tangible results.

—The Indiana Christian has a cheerful expresrion and is fully alive to the events of the day. The issue, March 1st, devotes considerable space to the election of Burris A. Jenkins to the presidency of the University of Indianapolis, giving a good picture of him on its first page.

—The New York Legislature has passed in both branches and Gov. Roosevelt has signed a bill making it a misdemeanor to use the national flag for advertising purposes. No good citizen will object to legislation of this character, but there may be those who find it difficult to reconcile New York zeal for the protection of the national flag with New York's indifference as to the protection of citizens over whom the flag waves.—The Lever.

—In the House of Representatives, Feb. 4th, on the presentation to Congress statutes of Benton and Blair, Hon. Champ Clark, one of Missouri's most popular statesmen, delivered a most eloquent eulogy on the lives of these great men, especially of Frank P. Blair.

—Last week a brother sent a personal gift of $600 to the treasurer of the Foreign Society. This amount will support a missionary a whole year in the foreign field.

—The Foreign Society has just received $1,000 from a bequest. The bequests for Foreign Missions this year already amount to about $7,000.

—A substantial friend of our foreign work has recenly turned over $1,000 on the Annuity plan and another friend $100. The interest in the work is growing in every direction.

—One of the contributors to our late symposium on Christian Endeavor, writes: "Have you any idea how I have been blamed as opposing the A. C. M. S. because I wrote you my personal convictions about the national superintendency and J. Z. Tyler's special fitness for the same?" Beautiful state of things among us, isn't it? Wouldn't it be well to establish an "Index Expurgatorius" to decide what the brethren may be permitted to say in our papers? Here is where that favorite inquiry rightly comes in: "Whither are we drifting?" This particular correspondent doesn't seem to be in the least intimidated, but adds: "I am in no controversy, but I feel that our children and older young people must be rightly educated, if any of our church enterprises are to be intelligently, heartily and generously supported." The name is signed to this, but we omit it to save the writer of it any further annoyance.

—Last Sunday was a great day for the First Church in Fayetteville. We raised one hundred and one dollars for Foreign Missions. This was more than our apportionment. While I am writing I will say I endorse your position and all you have written on the subject of "A CRISIS IN CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR." I adhere to what I said in the symposium, and am willing to stand or fall with you and J Z. Tyler. I was in no way misled in the matter and am entirely willing to share with others whatever blame the Standard may attach to the action.

With sincere regards, fraternally yours,

N. M. RAGLAND.

A PREACHER'S REPORT

Interesting Statement by Elder Joel H. Austin of Goshen, Ind.

"I was a victim of catarrh and had almost constant pain in my head. The trouble was gradually working down on my lungs. I was weak and irresolute. My wife had the grip and Hood's Sarsaparilla cured her. After this I had the same disease and resorted to Hood's. In a short time the aches and pains were relieved and I also saw the medicine was helping my catarrh. In six weeks I ceased to have any further trouble with it and I am now a well man. The pains and bloating I had in my limbs are gone and I am relieved of a heart trouble. I am thankful for a medicine so intelligently compounded and so admirably adapted to the needs of the system." —On Sunday last Dr. J. W. Allen, manager of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, this city, died. In his death that church has lost a strong man and the city an honored citizen. Resolutions of respect were adopted at our preachers' meeting on last Monday.

—Apropos to a recent editorial in this paper, a reader asks the following pertinent questions:

Why should the preacher be expected to wear shiny and shabby clothes, antiquarian hats and frazzled collars and cuffs? Why should the preacher be subjected to the embarrassment and annoyance of having to implore credit as charity and when bills are presented be compelled to "stand off" his creditors, because what is owing to him has not been paid when due? Why should the preacher be looked upon always as the chronic mendicant of the community, to be pound-partied to his domestic undoing, to be advertised as "hard up" by donation parties and the like?"

Sure enough; why? A new stenographer taking our dictation in which we used the phrase "the church militant," wrote it out "the church mendicant!" Isn't that about what many a preacher is compelled to be by the treatment he receives from the church he serves?

—Referring to the articles of Rev. J. M. Campbell on the propriety of substituting infant consecration for infant baptism, W. R. McCrea, Liscomb, Ia., writes:

Now, if one were inventing a religion or forming a denomination of his own this might be appropriate. But when one pretends to practice the religion of Christ is it honest to introduce something which is neither taught nor hinted at by him, but which misrepresents and perverts his will, and still call it Christ's religion?

But our brother assumes here what is not true, that the consecration of our children is neither taught nor hinted at, and that it "misrepresents Christ and perverts his will." We think the New Testament teaches the consecration of ourselves and all we have to God. Most Christian parents, we presume, do consecrate their children to God. In what way this misrepresents Christ, who took little children in his arms and blessed them, we cannot imagine. We do not understand Bro. Campbell to urge it as a religious ordinance to be made a test of fellowship; but as a custom which would answer to a very general sentiment in the parental heart.

—I can go the brother from Idaho "one better," or I think I can. I have been a constant subscriber and reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST since April, 1865, when Downs & Karr were publishing the Christian Herald at Wapella, Ill. The Herald merged into the Gospel Echo in August, 1869. The Herald was a double-column 32-page and cover monthly. These monthlies have been preserved by me. The contrast with the present CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is most wonderful. I think this does not beat the Idaho brother by one year, but what follows will. My father was a subscriber and I a reader of a monthly published at Davenport Ia., I think by James Challen, years before this time of which we are talking. Bro. Challen's paper was called the EVANGELIST, and I think it was the forerunner of Bro. Johnson's EVANGELIST that merged into the CHRISTIAN, making the now matchless CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. If I am in error I ask Bro. Garrison to correct me. GEO. W. NANCE.
Harvey, Ill., March 1, 1899.

It was A. Chatterton who edited the EVANGELIST at Davenport, Ia. The Herald, of Eureka, was bought by the owners of the Gospel Echo at the time mentioned and merged into the latter. The CHRISTIAN, of Kansas City, Mo., was next taken in, displacing the name Gospel Echo, eventually. Ten years later the union of the CHRISTIAN and the EVANGELIST was consummated. Bro. N. has been a steadfast reader and friend of the paper through all these changes. All honor to the "Old Guard" who by their fidelity in the way of small things made better things possible.

The University of Indianapolis.

Burris A. Jenkins, pastor of the Third Christian Church, of Indianapolis, was elected on February 21st first president of the University of Indianapolis. Although the university has never before had an administrative head, it is already much more than an airy scheme. The election of a president indicates not the birth of the institution, but its entrance upon a new epoch, and those who know the man and the situation have a reasonable basis for the conviction that it will be an epoch of larger things.

The University of Indianapolis is composed of four departments with a total enrollment of eight hundred students. Butler College, which constitutes the undergraduate department, and three professional schools, the Medical College of Indiana, Indiana Law School and Indiana Dental College. The departments of medicine, law and dentistry are all located in the city of Indianapolis; the department of liberal arts (Butler College) is at the adjacent suburb of Irvington. The professional schools are all institutions fully equipped, well endowed, long established, and the leading schools in their several lines. Butler College, the efficiency of its faculty, the high standard of its work and its honorable position, not only among the schools of the Disciples of Christ, but in the larger college world, ought already to be well known to the readers of this paper. The combination of these four strong institutions into a single university, leaves each independent for the management of its own affairs and the administration of its own finances, but furnishes a unified body representing the educational interests of this section and a center about which other departments may spring up. In this concentration of interests there is possible, not only the exertion of the largest influence by these combined institutions upon the city, the state and far beyond the borders of this state, but also the extension of that influence by increase of endowment and diversification of departments, until Indianapolis shall become what its location eminently fits it to be, one of the chief education centers of the central states.

Heretofore the interests of the university have been under the sole care of the university senate and a board of trustees. Among the members of the latter body are Ex-President Benjamin Harrison and Hon. Addison C. Harris, recently appointed United States Ambassador to Austria-Hungary. The appointment of Mr. Jenkins as first president of the university is based upon the impression which he has made upon Indianapolis during the three years of his pastorate and the one year of his professorship in Butler Bible College. He has won recognition as a thorough scholar, a polished speaker and a capable man of affairs. His election has been received with approbation in the academic world and by the solid business men of the city and with tumultuous enthusiasm by the student body. We cannot doubt that it will be followed by an era of organization and concentration of resources and expansion of influence.

Mr. Jenkins will surrender his pastorate that he may devote himself more completely to the university but will, for the present, retain his professorship of New Testament Literature and Exegesis in Butler Bible College.

We present our readers with a picture of Mr. Jenkins upon the first page of this paper.

PERSONAL MENTION.

At the close of his Bible Institute work at Athens, Ga., Dr. C. A. Young goes to Atlanta, where due preparation has been made for his coming.

F. F. Dawson has resigned as corresponding secretary of the North Carolina Christian Missionary Convention, and B. H. Melton, of Wilson, has been asked to take his place.

The address of Wilmer H. Brandenburg, formerly pastor of the Christian Church at Winston, N. C., is asked for. Address the informrtion to A. O. Garrison, 358 Dearborn St. Chicago, Ill.

Charles E. Freeman is now at Springfield, Ark. After March 23rd he will be at Weatherford, Texas, his new field of labor.

H. A. Northcutt is now conducting a protracted meeting at Savannah, Ga. His next meeting will be with the Beulah Christian Church, of this city, next month.

At noon Wednesday, March 1, in Girard, Ill., occurred the marriage of J. N. Thomas, pastor of Christian Church, Kingfisher, Oklahoma, and Miss Jessie Brown; R. E. Thomas, of Petersburg, Ill., officiating.

A. H. Harrell is now pastor of the church at Atwood, Ill., and at once begins the introduction of good literature therein by sending for sample copies of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He joins in the effort for 100,000 conversions to Christ and $150,000 for Foreign Missions.

Mr. Samuel M. Goldbreg, manager of our Advertising Department, has returned from a business trip to Washington, Philadelphia, New York, Boston and other cities. He has been absent since the middle of January.

F. G. Tyrrell is now in Cincinnati, Ohio, assisting A. M. Harvout, pastor of the Central Christian Church, of that city, in a protracted meeting. The pastors of these two Central Christian Churches formed some sort of a compact or alliance for aggressive work against the kingdom of darkness last fall and they are doing some hard work on that line.

From W. H. Claggett, clerk of the church at Lexington, Ill., we learn that Arthur A. Wilson, who went to that church immediately after his graduation at Eureka, and who has been there a little more than two years, has presented his resignation that he may accept a unanimous call to Mattoon, Ill., for five years. The church at Lexington, believing that it meant larger fields of usefulness for their pastor, reluctantly consented to release him April 1. Bro. Wilson's ministry with the church at Lexington has been greatly blessed. As the congregation has grown in spiritual power 150 have been led into the fold. The congregation begins a meeting next Lord's day. Bro. Wilson will do the preaching. They have a good man in view for the place, and hope to have him located immediately after Bro. Wilson leaves them.

R. A. Burriss, of Port Arthur, to whose colony on Lake Superior the Canadian Government donated 800,000 acres of land, is now on a lecturing trip through Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, in the interest of his colony of which frequent mention has been made in this paper.

The editor of this paper is now at Eureka Springs, Ark., for a short rest. Any matters requiring immediate personal attention may be addressed to him direct at that place for the next ten days. All other correspondence will be duly attended to at this office.

Among the visitors present at our preachers' meeting on last Monday were J. Z. Tyler, Cleveland, O.; A. McLean, Cincinnati, O.; G. M. Hoffmann, Columbia, Mo.; B. C. Black, Winchester, Ill., and H. F. Davis, of this city and state.

A. Starr Black, of Marcus, Ia., has published a tract, envelope size, 16 pages, on "Christian Unity." "Must Christian Unity await the conquest of Christendom by Christianism?" indicates the trend of the discussion.

Joel Brown is assisting J. E. Denton, the pastor of the church a Clarion, Ia., in a protracted meeting at that place. Joel Brown is acting financial agent for the Christian Orphan's Home.

ENGLAND'S COMPLICATIONS.

It really seems to me that I can never remember our British affairs being more entangled than they are at this present time. Whichever way we turn there are clouds on the horizon, none of them very serious, very lurid or very threatening. Indeed, each of them is no bigger than a man's hand, and yet there is not one of them that is not an ugly little portent of possible coming cyclones. It will be wonderful if all the approaching difficulties are safely weathered, without conflict with any of the great or small interests of other nations. It is fortunate that, as Lord Rosebery said during his all too short tenure of office as premier, that the chief passion of the British people must ever be the passion for peace. I believe that this nation was never so anxious for peace as it is to-day, and yet I, at the same time, am convinced that it would for this very reason be a most dangerous thing for any power on earth, however formidable, to wantonly provoke or defy the public opinion of this people on any point or points, involving the honor of the empire. There has come about a sort of sentiment that Lord Salisbury has gone almost to a discreditable extreme in his wish to propitiate France, and that he has played a false part for the ultimate cause of peace in sacrificing Madagascar, Tunis and Siam, as he was suspected of also yielding to Russia undue rights in reference to China and Japan. Above all, he will never be pardoned by the great Liberal party and by great numbers of his own Tory partisans, for his extraordinary abandonment of Armenia. We are now face to face with an awkward little difficulty with your government over the Alaska boundary, but there is not much to be concerned about in this, as Britain and America will never again look at such matters in a mutually unfriendly light. These two great nations will always find some amicable method of settling problems that must of course occur. But let both Americans and Britains understand that the present talk about universal peace is simply delusive, for what is coming is not any such colossal eirenicon, but a fearful war. The common people all through the Continent are seething with discontent, which is only repressed by military despositism. The crux of the international position is, as I have said before, in Macedonia. The most thoughtful Englishmen know that there is approaching a tremendous upheaval in the Southeast of Europe. The terrible Eastern question will draw England into conflict with the Sultan. The great aim of all our statesmen is to avoid the policy which will break up the cruel Turkish domination over its Christian population. But the end of such a policy is at hand, for it is only equivalent to fighting against the decrees of Providence.

THE TRIAL OF THE BISHOPS.

During the last two weeks strange debates have been carried on in our Parliament. We are doomed to hear many more such discussions, because of the mixture of politics with Christianity which is the law of the land, under our old-fashioned constitutional rule. The bishops are being put on their trial. Long speeches are being delivered in the Houses of Lords and Commons against the doings of the Ritualists, and in all these utterances the keynote is a protest against the failure of the bishops to suppress the semi-popish practices of about three thousand of the clergy. There are nearly thirty thousand Anglican priests, and therefore it is clear that one in every ten is a Romanist at heart, and the worst part of the situation is that all the bishops, except two, appear to sympathize with Ritualism. A storm is rising amongst the people which threatens nothing less than the separation of church and state. But that process will convulse the country, and it will wreck several governments and break the hearts of many statesmen. Thus we have complications at home which cannot be avoided. There is great trouble about the housing of the poor. Nearly a million poor creatures are living in one room for each family in London alone and this kind of existence is common in all of our large cities, through the depression and want of agricultural employment in the rural districts and through the appalling injustice of our aristoratic land laws. Many a workingman has this winter come up to London to seek employment and has found it, for trade is good, and has actually been compelled to put his wife and children in the workhouse, because he could not find even one room for their accommodation. It may be guessed what is the condition of those who are, for this or that reason, thrown out of work, a very frequent incident in winter with certain classes of men, such as house painters, laborers who help builders in outdoor work, and suburban gardeners. A movement is being promoted for the abolition of all workhouses and pauper asylums. These were established in Queen Elizabeth's reign, over 300 years ago, and they are a gigantic and degrading curse to the masses of the poor. I am one of those who think that every honest and diligent citizen who has toiled for society, has brought up a family, has worked with his hands and gained a bare livelihood by the sweat of his brow, never breaking the laws and generally helping others to pile up fortunes, should be regarded as, in his old age, the creditor of the nation, entitled to a sufficient pension at the age of sixty to keep him in at least the bare necessaries of life, if not in some few of its physical and mental comforts, instead of being left to the disgrace of a pauper's old age and the final heritage of a pauper's death. Here is one of the problems which the Liberal party will face and deal with as soon as it comes into power. But the Tories will fight to the death to keep the poor down in the subjection which is supposed to be their lot. The blessed text which says that "the poor ye have always with you," is a very cherished motto of our English Conservatives.

THE BEAUTIFYING OF LONDON.

Brother Garrison, if you do not make haste to see England once more you will not know London again whenever you come later on. England has always been proud of London, but Londoners have been strangely indifferent about the aspect of their vast city. But a very different sentiment is growing up, which is partly due to the general culture of art by the rising generation, and to the spread of modern æstheticism. A grand new street is to be cut between Holborn and the Strand. This will add both dignity and beauty to the centre of the city. Vast improvements for all London are in contemplation. Circular belts of boulevards and broad avenues will be made early in the next century which will stretch out in magnificent lines to the outer suburbs. London is surrounded a few miles out by splendid commons, with natural evergreen grass that never fades at any season of the year, and also by beautiful woods and hills. There will be direct and easy access to these by the great new avenues. Londoners are beginning to feel the possibilities of making London the grandest city on earth, and when the heart of the people is once set on the enterprise they will carry it out regardless of difficulty or cost. There are really two Londons, one on the north and the other on the south of the Thames. Both of these will be sebjected to the process.

THE GHOST OF MAHDISM.

A very ugly apparition is announced in the recrudescence of Mahdism, the fiendish nature of which has forever been settled by the book written by Slatin Pasha, "Fire and Sword in the Soudan." The Khalifa has given us all a shock. He was being hunted for by a little Anglo-Egyptian force in the desert, but he is now the hunter in turn. Colonel Kitchener found him solidly entrenched in El Obeid, which is the capital of Kordifan, and for a long time the metropolis of the devilish Mahdi. Here it was that Father Ohrwalder, author of "Ten Years Captivity with the Mahdi," and Slatin Pasha, and Herr Neufeldt used to see rows of captives drawn up in the Mahdi's presence. The monster who used to promise paradise on easy terms to all his servile murderers and butchers of men and women and babes who fell into their crimsoned clutches, used to make it his favorite amusement to sit on his white horse, while at his command as many as 70 captives at a time had their right feet and left hands cut off. The Khalifa was fully worthy of his predecessor. He now turns up on the road to Omdurman with 16,000 men, and Lord Kitchener will have his work set. Our English soldiers have all been withdrawn from the Soudan after the battle at Omdurman. But some at least of the work will have to be done over again. The infernal Khalifa may be coming on to the doom he deserves, but it is unfortunate that there should be more bloodshed in prospect. So, as I began this letter, I repeat the observation that in all parts of the world fresh complications are ahead.

A Good Complexion

Depends on Good Digestion.

This is almost an axiom, although usually we are apt to think that cosmetics, face powders, lotions, fancy soaps, etc., are the secret for securing a clea complexion.

But all these are simply superficial assistants. It is impossible to have a good complexion unless the digestive organs perform their work properly; unless the stomach by properly digesting the food taken into it furnishes an abundance of pure blood a good complexion is impossible.

This is the reason so many ladies are using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they promptly cure any stomach trouble, and they have found out that perfect digestion means a perfect complexion and one that does not require cosmetics and powders to enhance its beauty.

Many ladies diet themselves or deny themselves many articles of food solely in order to keep their complexions clear.

When Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are used no such dieting is necessary. Take these tablets and eat all the good, wholesome food you want and you need have no fear of indigestion nor the sallow, dull complexion which nine women out of ten have, solely because they are suffering from some form of indigestion.

Bear in mind that beauty proceeds from good health, good health results from perfect digestion and we have advanced the best argument to induce every man or woman to give this splendid remedy a trial.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found in drug stores and cost but 50 cents per package. They are prepared by the F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

If there is any derangement of the stomach or bowels they will remove it and the resultant effects are good digestion, good health and a clear, bright complexion. Ask your druggist for the tablets and a free book on stomach diseases.

Preachers and Impressions—V.

In the spring of '60 Alanson Wilcox was called to the pastorate of the Paw Paw church. A mighty revolution was taking place in the nation's thought and methods of doing business. The introduction of railroads was forcing all classes of business to better systems and more rapidity. The nation stood at the opening of a great war and a great industrial age. The long editorials were giving way to editorials which crystallized into a few crisp, epigrammatic sentences the facts and philosophies of important events. The old declamatory style of oratory was being succeeded by a style which was more conversational and businesslike. Long doctrinal sermons were being followed by sermons which were strong for the truth, delivered in a good spirit, filled with love and given largely to those subjects which develop the Christian virtues and tend to upbuild and strengthen Christian character. Alanson Wilcox was recently from Hiram, belonged to the new era and was thoroughly inspired by its progressive genius. He was a good speaker, and his style of speaking may be called the forcible conversational. He was easy, graceful and impressive in the pulpit. He was not naturally dogmatic or combative; he was philosophical, and looked upon the issues of the times in a broad and generous way. He loved music, books, art, poetry, birds, flowers, fields, his work and his fellowmen. He taught largely by analogy and illustration, and when in a protracted meeting and preaching upon the evidences and first principles, he presented them plainly and forcibly, and sustained them by that line of argument which has been so largely adopted by our people. He was genial, courteous, attractive, of strong personality and fearless in his line of duty. He has been chosen for this article because he was a well-rounded man.

We will note some of his good qualities, as follows: He had gravity of character, which means that he had sobriety, seriousness and dignity of demeanor. If you seek for a deeper impression of gravity of character than words can give, go and look for a few moments on a picture of the grave and serious face of Daniel Webster, until you can feel the weight of those masterly qualities in that splendid man, and see how they held the confidence of his fellowmen on the great occasions to which he was called. Again, gravity of character is that in a man which impresses upon his fellowmen the facts that he is steadfast and has an abiding conviction concerning the serious affairs of life, and that he does not trifle with matters which are grave and important. He had gravity and sobriety of manners which strongly sustained his gravity of character. He was a good judge of men and affairs. He could meet men. By his manly and generous ways he made men his friends, and by so doing enlarged his field of usefulness. His good judgment kept him from becoming cranky or eccentric, and made his work steady and wholesome. He knew that when the little church undertook to work in the village that it must become one of the village's solid institutions and forces in all its social, educational and religious movements. His good judgment kept him cool and made him wise and thrifty in managing the affairs of the church, and it was nowhere more manifest than in the conducting of the worship. Refinement and dignity certainly enter very largely into the worshiping of God in the beauty of holiness. He was devout, earnest and exemplary. He studied his resources, had large faith and planned and worked for large results. Thus prepared, he entered prayerfully and enthusiastically upon his pastorate. At the close of the first year there had been such an increase in the membership of the congregation that it was decided to erect a new church building. Although the congregation has been worshiping in the village for sometime, the scent of the clover "will hang around it still." There was a strong prejudice with some of the congregation against village ways, and particularly against church spires. Among those who were opposed to church spires was my grandmother, Mrs. Ruhama Barnum, formerly of the old church of Throppsville, New York. There is a family tradition that she was the first woman immersed by our people in that state. I know nothing as to the correctness of that tradition, but I can assure you that she did have a most persistent dislike against church spires. In the spring of '61 work was commenced for the new building. The plans adopted included a fine spire. Many of the older members sat in amazement, not knowing where such things would end. About the first of June everything was ready for the raising of the building. The LaFayette Light Guards, a company of soldiers which was waiting to be ordered to the fields of war, had become greatly attached to Wilcox, and turned out to assist the congregation in raising its building. It was a day of great rejoicing. There was a mingling of patriotic and religious sentiments; yet a cloud was slowly creeping over the rejoicing people. That curly-haired young man there will die at Murfreesboro. That little hazel-eyed fifer, talking with those girls, will find a soldier's grave at Fair Oaks. Do you see that fair boy climbing up yonder? He will fall at the deadline at Andersonville. "Brave boys are they." The church was ready for dedication about the first of the following November, and its beautiful spire rose high above a splendid edifice. A few nights before the dedication was to occur grandmother dreamed that she was standing upon the front steps of the building, when her former pastor, Peter T. Russell, came on to the steps, and she looked up at that spire and said, "Bro. Russell, what do you think of that?" With the power and dignity of an ancient prophet, and with flashing eye, he raised his hand toward the spire and replied, "To THE UNKNOWN GOD!" and like a spirit vanished into the deep abysses of the dream-world. At the end of the second year of the pastorate a house had been built, the membership of the church largely increased and their position in the good esteem of the community firmly established. The happy company of young people whom Alanson Wilcox there trained in their first religious work, has been broken and scattered by the hand of war and by the ravages of time. The hearts of those who remain are true to him still. Of that company in their old church home it may be said, as it has been most touchingly written by Mrs. Hemans of a family of children:

"They grew in beauty, side by side;
They filled our home with glee;
Their graves are severed far and wide,
By mount and stream and sea."

The characteristics which have been mentioned are an honor to Alanson Wilcox, and he has made them a blessing to his fellowmen. We have met but once in thirty years. Between us "the tie that binds" has never been broken. When Alanson Wilcox shall lay his well-worn sickle down, may he look out on a vision of many, many golden harvest sheaves and read, gleaming over a far-away gate of pearl, "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy."

The Personality of the Holy Spirit.

The readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will coincide with the writer in the opinion that this discussion, if it may be so dignified, should be brought to a close. He feels that the discussion might have been made more attractive and satisfactory if there had been more of evidence and argument, and less of simple declaration and denial. However, he begs a further brief indulgence to notice some criticisms and statements by the editor in his last notice of this contention.

We ask attention to the fact that notwithstanding the seeming almost horror with which the declaration was received that "the Scriptures are silent concerning the personality of the Holy Spirit," not a single Scripture has been adduced in contradiction of the states ment. The simple and obvious reason that the Scriptures do not speak of the personality of the Holy Spirit is that man does not possess capacity to comprehend Spirit-nature and being, and to attempt to make known things to him incomprehensible would be folly. Yet men speak fluently, and considering the sacred nature of the subject, almost flippantly of the personality of the Holy Spirit, and in their seeming desire for the mysterious, have made it an article of faith in their creeds.

The editor says we "confuse personality with embodiment." This is possible, but according to the books an embodied intelligence is a personality, and a personality is an embodied intelligence. The confusion which the editor sees may possibly come from the idea which he seems to entertain, that "a person may or may not have a body." This is certainly a confusing idea. A body may or may not be a person, as for example the body of a tree or of an animal, but there is not an intelligence in the universe that does not possess a body, and an intelligence with a body is a person. But embodiment as an essential condition to intercourse with and between men is a serious obstacle in the way of the teachers of the direct, impact operation of the Holy Spirit on the minds of men.

The editor would esteem it "an infinite misfortune to have the divine Comforter transformed into a visible, tangible, comprehensible being;" and Brother Carson would consider it an infinite misfortune and mistake to send an invisible, intangible and incomprehensible Comforter to a needy, helpless, sorrow-stricken creature, and he is glad to know that when God looked with pity and compassion upon these needy, helpless, stricken ones, he transformed himself into a man—a man of sorrows and familiar with grief, who was in every respect like themselves, and concerning whom John said: "We have seen with our eyes, heard with our ears, and handled with our hands," a visible, tangible, comprehensible Comforter, and that again, when this Comforter went away he sent "another," who likewise took possession of a visible, tangible, comprehensible body — the church of Jesus Christ—from which he is ever sending out messengers, crying, "Come unto me, all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest!" and through which body he dispenses, as the Almoner of God, the fullness of the riches which belong to the fellowship which is in Jesus Christ. But there is no mysterious operation of the Holy Spirit in this, and hence probably it will be condemned as materialism, or something worse.

Again, the editor says: "We do not limit God to the five senses in his efforts to reach, comfort and strengthen his children." Well, be it so; but notwithstanding, it is a fact that God is limited by the attributes of his own being and by the constitution of the universe, and in his intercourse with man he is limited by his own nature and the constitution of man. God is infinite; man is finite. The finite cannot comprehend the infinite. In order, therefore, to have intercourse with man, God must of necessity adapt (limit) himself to the constitutional conditions of man's being, one of which is that he cannot be communicated with except through means that are cognizable by his senses. This fact effectually "cuts the nerve" of direct, impact operation of the Holy Spirit on the minds of men. Continuing, the editor asks: "Which one of the five senses of the prophets and apostles received divine revelation from God?"

Before answering this question we beg to suggest to Brother Garrison that we are not discussing the miraculous, the exceptional and extraordinary actions of God; but that which Paul has designated as "the plan of the mystery which in the times of the ages had been hid away in God, but that has now been made known to all men through apostles and teachers," etc.

Returning to the above question we answer, chiefly through the senses of hearing and seeing. For example: "The vision of Isaiah." "The Lord said unto Isaiah." "The word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah." (How else than through his sense of hearing?) "The angel that talked with Zachariah." The Apostle John, in the revelation made to him, saw the person, heard the voice, and felt the touch of the hand of him who made the revelation. But it may be that all of these "revelations" must be understood in the mystic spirit sense.

Bro. Carson begs to say that when he prays, and "a great peace comes into his heart," it does not "steal" in, but comes there in an honest, scriptural manner. It comes in by faith, and this faith comes by "hearing the Word of God." When Bro. Carson is overwhelmed with cares, anxieties and sorrows, and knows not what is best for him, "knows not what he should ask for," the Holy Spirittakes his condition and "inexpressible sighings," presents them to God, receiving an answer "according to the will of God respecting him," and having also heard that "all things work together for the good of them who love God," he thus obtains the peace of which Bro. Garrison speaks.

In closing we wish to express our appreciation for the consideration and courtesy of the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for the generous allowance of so much valuable space.

JAMES O. CARSON.

St. Louis, Sept. 18, 1898.

[We regret the long delay in publishing the foregoing, but the demands upon our space have been extraordinary. It is not necessary that we reply at any length. It is plain that Bro. Carson has allowed his "embodiment" theory to lead him to some extreme positions, which involve more than he would be willing to accept. The denial, for instance, of the personality of the Holy Spirit save as that Spirit is embodied in the church, involves, of course, the denial of the personality of God before the incarnation. And yet, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." But love involves personality as, indeed, all God's attributes do.

In response to the demand for scriptural proof of the personality of the Holy Spirit, we referred him to the fact that the Holy Spirit is spoken of frequently as "saying" so and so, as "testifying" so and so, as susceptible of being "grieved," as guiding, comforting and directing the apostles, all of which involves the idea of personality. Bro. Carson knows where to find these passages, and we not cite them.

It is hardly necessary that we add anything further concerning Bro. Carson's outgrown psychology and philosophy, which limits God's operations on man to the five senses, especially when these five senses are limited to our bodily organization. When Paul was caught up into the "third heaven," he saw and heard some wonderful things, but he did not know whether he was "in the body or out of the body." If he had known that it was impossible for God to communicate anything to a man outside of the body, he would, of course, have known that his body went with him on his ascent into the third heaven.

But, in a hundred years from now, Bro. Carson and the editor will both know much more on this subject than they do now. Meanwhile, let us allow God the fullest scope to work on us, for He has no easy task to transform us into the image of Christ.—EDITOR.]

New Mexico Letter.

It is perhaps of interest to some of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that the writer has removed from McKinney, Texas, to Roswell, N. M. During his two years' pastorate at McKinney a handsome and commodious church building was erected. Next to the Central, in Dallas, it is the best building owned by the Disciples in the state. In point of architectural beauty and convenience of arrangement it is considered superior to that. The church owns $25,000 worth of property and on dedication day there was no call for money except for a thankoffering for missions. During the period above named 102 were added to the membership. About 40 of these were added during Bro. Tyler's meeting last summer; the others at the regular services and meetings held with home forces.

The collections for missions increased about 200 per cent. The church meets all expenses monthly, with some funds usually in the treasury. The membership is about 400. G. A. Faris, father of our missionary in Africa, succeeds to the pastorate. He has a fine field and we shall expect a grand work.

A number of McKinney people had removed to Roswell, N. M., and they with other old friends began an effort some months ago to induce your correspondent to undertake the work here. After considerable correspondence with the church and with Bro. Smith, secretary of our home mission board, it was arranged that he should do the combined work of missionary pastor at Roswell, and superintendent of missions in the territory. How this arrangement will work the future only can tell. The combination horse is neither a first-class saddler nor driver. The Holstein, which is called the combination cow, is the poorest—in the writer's judgment—of the bovine family. We trust the combination pastor and evangelist will do better.

Roswell is a beautiful little city of 2,000 people in the midst of a valley which by irrigation is an oasis in the midst of an almost desert. Tne two Spring Rivers—one on either side of the town, and the Berenda three miles north burst up out of the plains and flow off in unvarying quantities to turn the desert into a garden. A mile and a half above town North Spring River rises. This afternoon the writer and his wife drove around the head of it on the sandy plain. One can see the springs breaking forth, forming a lake a hundred yards in diameter, from which the river flows—a beautiful, clear stream, filled with fish and covered with ducks. Through the south part of town the Hondo runs, which has its source one hundred and fifty miles to the west in the White Mountains. These mountains are higher than Pike's Peak and covered with everlasting snows. In the clear atmosphere they appear to be not more than fifty; while El Capitan, a little north of west, and forty-seven miles away as the crow flies, appears to be within an afternoon's drive for the round trip. The Hondo is dry now, as its waters are all taken out in the upper valley by the Mexicans and others who had prior water rights. About the first of June, when the snow begins to melt, it will not belie its name, which means deep. The Spanish is Rio Hondo, and in English is Deep River.

Most women approach the critical period of motherhood for the first time with a sense of dread and foreboding lest the ruthless hand of death should snatch them away and leave the expectant little darling motherless. But no woman who fortifies herself with the strengthening power of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription need feel one instant's misgiving about either herself or the prospective little one.

This matchless "Prescription" will give her exactly the kind of healthy vitality she needs and at the time she needs it most. It will give elastic endurance to the entire delicate organism involved in motherhood. It will make the coming of baby absolutly free from danger and nearly free from pain.

It will insure the baby's start in life by imparting, through its influence upon the mother, that sturdy infantile vigor which gladdens a mother's heart. It is the only medicine which can be implicitly relied upon for this purpose; and the only remedy expressly designed by an educated, experienced physician to give perfect health and strength to the delicate, special organism of women.

Mr. Joseph Ramsey, of Williams, Colleton Co., S. C., writes: "I have been using your medicines for some time and am happy to say that they have done all that you claim for them. I think they have no equal in the world. I would advise all women while in a delicate state to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It shortens the time of birth and makes the labor easier. My wife is the mother of five children and she suffered almost death in the birth of them until this last one; the time of birth was short, and labor easy, from the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.,'

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser used to sell for $1.50, now it is free. It tells all about the home-treatment of ordinary diseases. Several chapters are devoted to the diseases of women. drinks once, they will return if possible to drink again. Its waters are also used for irrigation. Besides these streams, artesian wells at depths varying from 200 to 960 feet furnish abundant water, insuring that this valley will in a few years become the home of a dense population. Land in many places can yet be had under the Homestead laws, and that within the artesian area; and others can be secured at reasonable prices.

Already there are little groups of Disciples at various points in the valley, and isolated families at others. It will be the purpose to look after these, strengthen them and group them together so as to sustain regular work in the course of the year. It is hoped that Disciples in the valley as well as in other parts of the territory will communicate with the evangelist and inform him of their numbers and location.

The first work, by the consent of the general board, will b to get the Roswell church in a healthy condition, to become a center from which to reach the region round about. It numbers about 150 members, but some of these live fifty or sixty miles away. A brother was at church last Lord's day whose home is fifty miles northeast. We have a good, substantial brick church with metal roof and seated with opera chairs. Unfortunately there is a debt of about $3,000. The first effort will be to reduce that. As the church owns six good lots, we hope to be able soon to dispose of them, so as to pay off the most pressing debt. If any brother or friend wants a good, safe investment, let him communicate with me. He can make some money in the investment and aid a good cause. Three of them can be had at $150 each; two at $250 each, and one at $350. The latter is adjoining the church lots and in a very desirable location; the two are among the richest residences in town; while the other three are farthen out, but still in good locations. The lots are 50 feet front and 160 deep, I believe. I am not in the real estate business, only for the Lord's work.

This letter must not be closed without mentioning the work of our aged brother, T. W. Hancock, formerly of Saline county, Missouri. He has been here some three years, laboring almost without remuneration, and has kept the little band together. To him, his wife, formerly Sister Stone, of this place, and Sister Lea, now in Chicago for the musical education of her daughter, the church owes its existence and its large and commodious house.

Bro. and Sister Hancock left us last week for a year's visit in Kansas, Missouri and Colorado. He is in the 74th year of his age and 52nd of his ministry; yet, like Moses, his eye is not dim nor his vigor abated; and he preaches with the fire and enthusiasm of youth. May the Lord protect them and return them safely to spend the evening of their days in their beautiful home on the Berenda.

The church has some faithful workers, and I think a bright outlook. Good audiences have greeted us so far. I understand they are the largest in town. Eight have already been added to our numbers—two of them by confession last Lord's day evening—and others are looked for soon. Some old friends of other days have been found. Bro. Rhodes, one of our elders, who lives seven miles away and preaches in his neighborhood, was a Eureka student in 1856-57 when the writer, a mere boy, began there. His daughter, now Sister Bird, is a Eureka graduate of the class of '85; her husband was also a student there. They were baptized and married by Dr. J. M. Allen, who preached the night the writer made the confession, in the old frame church in Eureka. So we feel almost akin.

But this must suffice, promising a fuller account of the New Mexico work when more has been learned of it. The New Pecos Valley and Northeastern R. R. connects us with the great Panhandle, of Texas; so we feel that we are still in touch with the great state that was home for eleven years. S. K. HALLAM.

A New Demand for Apostolic Principles.

I have before me a tract entitled "Evangelization, on Apostolic Principles, of the Indian, White and Colored Peoples of the Indian Territory." When I first saw it I felt a strong curiosity to know what had rendered necessary the adoption of "apostolic principles" in the Indian Territory. I thought that, if a reason could be assigned for the use of the old gospel in that part of our country, it might be used as an argument for the "Jerusalem gospel" in the rest of the world. I suspected the trouble, but was too charitable to mention it till I had read the tract, and good reading it is. It is simply a repetition of the evils which the founders of the "Disciple" movement found in Pennsylvania seventy years ago—a heterogeneous mass of people without a knowledge of the Bible except such as was imparted from a dozen pulpits, the occupants of which were called together by the discordant clang of their bells, symbolic of their lack of harmony and co-operation.

To evangelize the numerous tribes of Indians in Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, the writer says:

"Ever since the advent of the Indians on the reservation commonly known as the Indian Territory, missionary work has been carried on by the various denominations, notably, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists, Baptists and Moravians."

All honor to those missionaries! Their hearts were true, but there was one delusion they labored under, namely, that these savages were to be made Christians, and then members of religious societies entirely human in their nature and devisive in their tendency. Now for the result:

"It is a sad fact that a large percentage of the missionaries now laboring in this country do not preach the simple gospel of the grace of God. Without the least feeling of censoriousness or spirit of uncharitable criticism it must be declared that the gospel in its fullness and simplicity is not being given to the people. The truths of the manifold gospel of the grace of God, which not only accepts Christ as Savior, Sanctifier, Healer and coming King, but takes in all the wider ranges of truth connected therewith, is largely an unknown quantity in the ministry of the major portion of the missionaries now laboring in the territory. This is not said by way of depreciation in the least of their consecration and general piety, but has reference largely to doctrinal testimony."

I believe every word of it, and I have no doubt it requires much more moral firmness to utter such a declaration. I quote further:

"Ever since the founding of the Gwenn Dale Orphanage in 1888, the cry of our heart has been that God would send forth laborers into this great harvest field who would be thoroughly acquainted with the spirit and essence of the gospel of his Son—men and women filled with the Holy Spirit and who could trust God for the supply of all their needs, spiritual and temporal, and whose faith would be continually exercised in God and not in the churches and home mission boards, blessed as the latter may be."

It is not much to be wondered at that there was a scarcity of workers so long as these workers were expected to work for nothing and board themselves. Here is the final solution of the trouble:

"After much earnest consultation and prayer with various Christian workers, east and west, is has been decided to organize, on simple Bible principles, an undenominational society for an aggressive and widespread effort which shall have for its sole purpose the dissemination of the gospel of the Son of God throughout the Indian Territory and other portions of the great Southwest country."

We are now to be told what "simple Bible principles" are. There are just two ways to settle that question. First, take the gospel, just as the Bible gives it, and train the new convert up to that as a standard of spiritual outline. Second, take a few general outlines of Christian morality that will be sure not to antagonize any denomination, and out of this eclectic cloth make a coat that will fit each convert just as he is, and make him think he has grown to the full stature of a man in Christ all at once. The latter is denominationalism in its practical workings.

But I have much faith in this new move. People who are willing to recognize the evils they labor under will soon find a remedy. The sentences I have quoted fully justify us in what we as Disciples of Christ have said about denominationalism in its practical effects. It shows, further, that no matter how much a man may be devoted to Christ, by serving organizations that hold his truth in a modified form he will be serving two masters, and that will soon end in putting Christ second or else produce a rupture with his denomination. Let us all pray that these workers in uninviting fields may be able to see more clearly the true cause of the trouble, and also the way out—the restoration of the primitive Christian Church in place of the weeds in the vineyard, each of which is striving for the mastery of the ground. Special Offer to Preachers.

In another place will be found the advertisement of a special offer to ministers by J. S. Hughes, author of a work on Revelation, entitled "Mystery of the Golden Cloth." We would be glad to know that a large number of our ministers had availed themselves of this very liberal offer in order to make fresh study of this last book in our New Testament canon. We believe such a study would do much to stimulate reiigious zeal and activity and awaken a fresh interest in biblical study. Read the offer elsewhere.

Union Christian Church.

Our revival services closed March 5th, with 218 added to the Lord. The preaching was done by our pastor, J. H. O. Smith, and the meeting was by far the most satisfactory we have held. Chicago has several churches of different denominations that meet in large public auditoriums, such as theatres, music halls and the like. Ours is pronounced "unique" in that it has every department of church work well organized and its pastor preaches the gospel so that people are moved to personal acceptance of its terms of salvation. The city editor of the Times-Herald declares in the issue of March 6th that we have broken the soul-winning record of Chicago so long held by Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston, of the Forty-first St. Presbyterian Church. Our object in reporting our revival services, however, is not to acquaint those interested in our work with merely an account of numbers added. Our church, like that of pentecostal fame, believes in numbers, but we also believe that they are added to the Lord. The deepest spiritual earnestness pervaded every service. Three-fourths of the additions were thoughtful men and women who have already enlisted their newly washed souls in one or more of the various activities of the church. Bro. Smith has a peculiar faculty of placing new members at once in congenial lines of work. He thinks that busy minds are most receptive of higher training and deeper spiritual growth. Our Sunday-school did not suffer during the meeting—the average attendance being 600.

Illinois Items.

Since my last report in your excellent journal I received an invitation from the Old Union Church in Greene County, Ill. We set things in order. The Sunday-school and the church are in a prosperous condition. The Sunday-school is thoroughly organized and possessed of the missionary spirit. The Dorchester church and Sunday-school is coming to the front. Bro. J. O. Henry, of Litchfield, has been employed for one-fourth of his time. He also preaches for the Gillespie brethren, who still worship in the operahouse. This congregation was organized by the writer September, 1897. We have partly decided to erect a tabernacle next summer. Prominent citizens as well as some of our members are in favor of building a tabernacle. Gillespie is a nice little business town, whose resources come from one of the largest operating mines and the best farming communities in the county. The Sunday-school here, under the superintendency of Mrs. Luttenberger, is making great preparation for the March offering. We aim to do our part regardless of what others may say or do. Criticism and indifferentism never saved a soul. There is much said about the "scriptural evangelist, preacher, elder and deacon," but what shall we say about the scriptural church member, and the do-nothing and do-as-I-pleace church official? Every scriptural church member, who of his own free will and accord becomes an official, evangelist or preacher, to "serve Christ and his people," wins favor with God and man. Faithfulness and service is reward here as well as hereafter.

The Antioch Church, for which I have labored the past year is in a prosperous condition. We expect to have a good March offering. This church has an interest in every missionary enterprise. So should it be with every church, in order to raise money for every missionary purpose. Owing to so much sickness we have postponed our meeting until our missionary rally.

Eldorado, Kansas.

We have closed our first year's work, March 5th. Our salary paid in full to date. Took $20 offering for Foreign Missions, nearly trebling the last year's offering; out of debt. The roll of membership purged. Congregation thoroughly organized in every department. A perfect harmony exists. A Junior, Intermediate and Senior C. E. Society, C. W. B. M., Bible-school and mission school are all doing good work. There have been fifty-five accessions, and while we now number less than two hundred members, we stand first as a spiritual, aggressive force in this city. We are just getting started. We are, as a body, poor in this world's goods, but a better, more willing people I never ministered to, so far as they know and can. The congregation is what the preacher makes it.

They gave me a gold diamond set locket at Christmas, with name engraved, as a token of esteem, with some other articles to Mrs. C. last week. The young people planned and executed a complete surprise in the way of a social, and presented me with a magnificent easy chair. Our call is indefinite.

We are now soliciting for a new and commodious house of worship, with good prospects. This congregation will be heard from from now on, and that for splendid mission work. The Spirit of the Master has been enthroned. A service without a confession is now regarded as out of order. We have our motto, and will furnish our quota of the 100,000 souls for Christ. Many of our families are now reading the Christian-Evangelist, and what can you expect but workers?

THE STEREOPTICON LECTURE.

The Hiram College stereopticon lecture has been received with great favor wherever it has been given. The purpose of the lecture is to give a concise view of our great Restoration Movement and set it in its proper attitude to the cause of higher education, and to show the relation that Hiram College sustains to this great movement. Scores of pictures are projected upon the canvass: the old pioneers, group pictures of our missionary secretaries, editors, distinguished preachers, college presidents, the early Hiram teachers and workers, Hiram scenes and Hiram buildings. The aim is, not simply to entertain, but to instruct as well. No admission fee is charged and no definite pledges are taken, but an opportunity is given for persons to enroll their names in the great Hiram Jubilee Endowment Movement.

We hope that the preachers of the churches will make room for this lecture and not throw our men out, when they send their appointments, because it wastes their time and in a measure defeats the purpose of the lecture. Each speaker puts his own individuality into his lecture, and while the general topic is the same, there is a variety occasioned by the personality of the speaker.

Young people especially are benefited by this lecture, as it gives a comprehensive view of our educational work as a people.

THE PROGRESS BEING MADE.

Very satisfactory progress is being made, and we hope to move much more rapidly as time advances. Hundreds of names have already been gathered and sent to us, and we expect to reach tens of thousands before the culmination of the enterprise in June 1900. Every name sent in is an inspiration. Will not every one who has had his attention called to this movement send us his name? Surely, any Disciple of Christ will gladly give a dollar for the establishment of one of our great institutions of learning, and many will gladly do much more.

A Noble Work.

No man among the Disciples of Christ was more widely known or more universally esteemed during his early ministry than was the late lamented Jno. A. Brooks. His memory should be just as dear to us as his life's labors. The friends of truth and temperance everywhere are called upon; no, they are given the blessed opportunity of contributing means for the noble and glorious purpose of erecting to his memory a suitable monument that shall reflect the great esteem in which he is held by the thousands who to-day are reaping the benefit of his labors in behalf of home, country and humanity. I had a talk recently with one of the officers of the Memorial Association and he told me that they had hoped to secure two thousand dollars for this work, but he thought they would have to content themselves with seven or eight hundred dollars. The two thousand dollars should be raised in ten days. This work should not be allowed to lag for lack of funds. Offerings may be sent to Hon. W. T. Hickman, 2011 East Ninth St., Kansas City, Mo. Lovers of truth and temperance, send your offerings to-day.

Healthful Cereal Preparations.

The heart of barley, entirely free from bran or hulls, makes a palatable cereal food, which not only nourishes those who enjoy health, but is an efficient diuretic, emollient, nutritive and tonic agent in cases of digestive disorders or intestinal irritation. This new and valuable food is prepared by Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y. It is recommended by physicians as invaluable in Bright's disease and other diseases of the kidneys and liver, and it is a palatable, attractive breakfast dish for those in good health. Analysis of Barley Crystals shows that it contains 99.1 per cent. of the purest flesh, blood, brain, nerve, bone and muscle-building food. Farwell & Rhines are also makers of the noted "Gluten Flour," "Special Diabetic Flour," and "K. C. Whole Wheat Flour." Their goods have come to be known as the "Criss Cross Cereals," the criss cross lines on the face of each package being a part of their trade mark.

The Benevolent Association of the Christian Church.

So many ask, "What is the difference between the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church and the Children's Home Finding Association," that I am persuaded that the following statement is needed.

The two societies are similar in their methods of work; both place children in Christian families as opportunity affords, and receive children from any state in the Union. However, the Benevolent Association, while it conforms with the Home Finding Association in method of work, in placing children, differs very widely in its object, which is to primarily look after the soul-culture of the child. So a home is provided where the child is placed and only put out in a family house when it is decided to be for the best interest of the child. Some children can be better cared for by the Christian Orphans' Home, namely, those who are sick and crippled.

The logic of the association is this: that the love of Christ is more powerfully exerted than under the former environments or hereditary tendencies of any sane child between the age of infancy and 14 years. So far the philosophy has proven correct. But three of the 500 children cared for have turned out bad, and we are led to believe that those would have been saved if we could have had them longer; but our crowded condition and lean purse at times hinders the work.

The accompanying cut is of Nellie and Clara, two girls who are being cared for by the home. They are kind Christian girls, but their unfortunate condition is such that we could not well secure a good home for them, and if we should, we are sure none could do better for them than is being done by the Home. They are being educated and taught the useful arts. Already their skillful needlework is noticeable in the Home. If their health permits they soon will be self-supporting and may go out into the world educated, devoted Christian women, carrying with them the sunshine of gladness and telling the sweet story of salvation learned in the Home. Can the human mind estimate the value of such work?

It is said that Mark Hopkins on one occasion, when asking for funds to build an orphanage, remarked that if but one boy was rescued and saved it would pay for all the cost. Already 90 per cent. of the children cared for by the Christian Orphans' Home, when old enough, have become Christians. Does it pay? Would it if it were your child? We are glad to see the people coming to the rescue of all our institutions of this kind. The care of children is but one branch of work of the B. A. C. C.

It also has as its object the care of the sick and aged of the church; neither of the last two named baanches of work are yet established, but the association is in its infancy. All is being done that can be done by the devoted, consecrated and self-denying women, with the small income at their command. Commencing the orphanage work as they did in '89, with a capital of but $40, they have increased it to the value of the property the association owns, barring the debt of $2,000, which at a moderate estimate is $20,000. And in the meantime they have cared for more than five hundred children and 100 widows during the 10 years. None of the officers except the field secretaries have recieved any salary. It is hoped an Old People's Home will be begun this year. Already several hundred dollars have been subscribed for that purpose.

The Children's Home Finding Association is not under the auspices of any denomination, but receives its support from all denominations, while the two Orphans' Homes of the Christian Church and the Orphans' Schools recieve their support from the Disciples of Christ alone; and in a few years there will be Old Peoples' Homes and Hospitals. The work must be done. God orders it. Let all the churches observe the first Sunday of April, Easter Sunday, in the interest of the Benevolent Association. If you desire programs write Mrs. J. K. JOEL BROWN, Field Sec.

Burris A. Jenkins.

Our religious press has already been apprised of the election of Bro. Jenkins to the presidency of the University of Indianapolis. This is a great honor to Bro. Jenkins. To be called to such a position by the trustees of a great school is surely something to feel well over. Bro. Jenkins is not called to this position that he may have consciousness that the trustees of the university and others feel well toward him. He is called because men interested in the building up of a great university in the city of Indianapolis have discovered his fitness for the position to which he is called.

1. Bro. Jenkins is much by nature. By this we mean that he is richly endowed by nature with splendid intellectual qualities. He is a clear, discriminating and all-around thinker. He has a retentive memory that serves him well in his diverse duties.

2. He is much by nurture. He has received the best intellectual training that the best universities can supply.

3. He is a teacher that awakens those who recite to him to do their best.

4. He is a popular speaker. This is true of him in the pulpit and on the lecture platform. Not knowing whether he has ever been "up stump," I cannot tell how he would be on the stump.

5. One quality that fits Bro. Jenkins to be at the head of a college or university is his ability to reach young people and inspire them with noble aims and purposes. Young men of limited means who are working their way through college often get discouraged. They see days when they would like to sit down by a trusted counselor and tell freely their troubles and learn what is best to do. If Bro. Jenkins has a gift that is not surpassed by any other of his gifts it is his ability to get the confidence of young men and to make them feel that he can be approached by them when they seek sympathy and need counsel. Will parents who seek to give their children a liberal education under the best leadership and advantages please note what I have said?

The church and people of Indianapolis and outside of Indianapolis as far as Bro. Jenkins is known rejoice that he is called to a position which they feel he is so well fitted to fill.

C. W. B. M. Messages.

[The following messages from members of Illinois State Board of C. W. B. M. are addressed to the women in Illinois, but should be of equal interest to our sisters in all the states. These messages will be continued in another number.—EDITOR.]

The First Meeting.

It is with pleasure I recall the first meeting of the ladies at the state meeting in Eureka, Ill., held the first week in September, 1874, called to plan to do systematic missionary work. Also, going from Eureka to Cincinnati, O., with Sisters Dickinson and Lindsay, to the first C. W. B. M. convention, the following October. The work of twenty-five years has gone far beyond what we then expected. I feel gratified.

Then the few of us did little that we could. Now the sisters in the Christian Church are a great host. Every year the work done by the C. W. B. M. has commended itself to all who know of this work. Is it not time that every sister should make an offering to this work? Then we will not fail to raise $99,000 for '99, and we can send more missionaries to help Christianize the world.

With every sister enlisted, what grand results will be reached at the end of another twenty-five years! This is the Lord's work. Let us show our gratitude for our many blessings by being faithful to him.

MRS. JOHN DARST.

90,000 Members in '99.

A ringing call comes from our devoted leaders at Indianapolis for 90,000 members in this our Silver Year. I wonder how our women in Illinois are responding to the call. How busily are we enlisting recruits for our C. W. B. M. army? Sister Pearce, who so valiantly led us to our organization in 1874, says in the January Tidings that she will be responsible for winning two new members, and adds, "Who will join me?" I will. Now who will join us? Sisters, "to the work," and let us verify in our state our motto for the year, "The Lord giveth the Word, the women that publish the Tidings are a great host." ELMIRA J. DICKINSON.

"90,000 Women for '99."

It means vastly more than we will ever know in this life. It means less of self, more of others, and yet, a broader and deeper self, a richer and happier self, a lighter burdened self.

Can you take or send a brighter message than that which Mary hastened to share with others? A risen Lord! The only abiding joy of this life, and the promise that "I will come again and receive you unto myself."

My dear sisters, do you know an indifferent sister? Have you done all you can to awaken her—to show her how to "count her blessings?" If we can enlist "90,000 for '99," there will be no question about the "$90,000 for '99." ANNA M. HALE, President.

DEAR SISTERS:—When we think of what Christianity has done for women, exalting them from a state of degradation and slavery to the place and sphere God originally designed they should fill—surrounded as we now are by all the sweet, ennobling influences Christ's love has brought—with unlimited opportunities for culture and usefulness in life, should we not deem it a privilege and joy to respond to the extent of our ability to the call for "ninety thousand dollars in ninety-nine," for the on-sending of our Master's message of life and light to those yet deprived of its priceless blessings? Certainly we cannot be indifferent to this appeal when we think of the sunshine, joy and consolation it has brought into our own lives, and the beautiful hope that fills the soul of a future permanent abiding-place.

One way in which we could be more helpful is by enlarging our state work, contributing more to its development, remembering, as each state develops, our national work will be strengthened and increased, funds will be supplied for the carrying of the precious story of redeeming love to those who have it not.

MRS. S. J. CRAWFORD, State Treasurer.

Every Member of the C. W. B. M.

Should ask herself, this year of our silver anniversary, What more can I do to help our missionary work move forward? All can pray more, some can secure new members. Most of us can surely pay one dollar more than our dues. And (as we were requested in the December Tidings) bring the first half to the April meeting of our auxiliary, the remainder to the September meeting. But bring the offering then if it is only a dime. If all who can do not help more than ever before we will have reason to be sad and ashamed when our twenty-fifth annual report is read next October. Illinois C. W. B. M. is in danger of being behind. There is not money enough in the state treasury at present to pay the traveling expenses of an organizer. Do not wait for one to come and stir your hearts, dear sisters. Rear the Missionary Tidings regularly. It is largely ignorance of the work that hinders more liberal giving. JANE C. DAVIDSON, Rec. Sec.

SISTERS IN CHRIST:—"What shall the harvest be" from the Young People's Department this year?

Shall we rejoice with them, when the final report is made, that the offerings of their eager hands and loving hearts have amounted to $9,000 in '99, for Builders' Fund, or shall our hearts be saddened with theirs, when we realize they have fallen short?

Can it be possible this work concerns not you and me? Then it concerns us not that hundreds of precious souls, through the training in the societies, have been brought to Christ. It concerns us not that the offerings of these little hands, now larger grown, have amounted to more than $60,000, since 1885, with which have been erected chapels, bungalows, orphanages, schoolhouses and hospitals for the missionaries which we have helped to send out. It concerns us not that 250 children in India through their efforts have been mothered, many of which are now "living epistles" of the everlasting gospel.

Results this year, as ever, shall be what the older ones help the children make.

Let us, then, encourage attendance at the meetings, provide for a wider circulation of Junior Builders and devise ways and means for them to pay for one or more shares of $10 each in the Builders' Fund.

GUSSIE COURSON.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF JUNIORS, INTERMEDIATES AND BANDS:—If the Young People's Department in Illinois is going to do its share towards raising the "$9,000 in '99 for Builders' Fund," we will have to put forth greater efforts in the coming months than we have in the past months of this missionary year. Illinois was apportioned 110 shares of $10 each. At present, only 32 shares have been reported to me as pledged. No doubt many are helping in this work who have not reported to me. Will you not let your state superintendent know all that you are doing to help make a celebration of our silver anniversary an Cincinnati, next October? By making these things known we encourage others to help in the good work ANNIE E. DAVIDSON,

State Supt. Young Peoples Work.

The Joy of Service.

R. B. PRESTON.

Not he who gives to me, but he
Who teaches me to give, to me
Brings richest stores of joy and peace.
To give of self and all, and cease
Not evermore to help and heal,
Is Christlike both to be and feel.

My life with all it has of worth,
I hold from God who gave it birth.
'Tis not a treasure, rich and rare,
To safely keep with anxious care,
But one to be all freely spent
For those to whom, through me, 'twas sent.

Am I, therefore, denied all ease,
With all content and things that please?
Not so, for God is wondrous wise.
In pleasing self no pleasure lies,
But pleasing others for their good
Brings nought but joy, nor ever could.

There's nothing lost that's lost for Christ;
The world for self hath not sufficed
To satisfy the soul of man.
In mercy God conceived the plan,
That labor forth from love should spring,
And love by laboring learn to sing.

Pie-John, or Two Lives that Touched.

BY S. S. LAPPIN.

It's odd how we influence each other. We meet and speak, and though we know it not, are better or worse, richer or poorer, sadder or happier for having met. Is there a universal heart that beats and throbs and thrills as it sends a sympathetic current through the whole social body? Do we, each of us, though unconsciously, receive strength for our daily duties from our relations to others?

Pie-John was not his name nor any part of it, but when, for lack of any other employment, he began to provide luncheon for the trainmen on the noon passenger, the boys gave him that title and it stuck. His home was in a little half-dead hamlet, just over the line in that part of Illinois called Egypt. He had failed at farming, lost his all in a store, and was at his string's end when his wife, who was a famous cook, started him out with a pot of hot coffee and a basket of tempting food to try his hand at catering to the wants of the traveling public. The trainmen were delighted, and the passengers eagerly bought what he had left. He tried it again and again, until it became a regular thing. The business grew till another basket and a pail of milk had to be added to the outfit. A little home was paid for and a bank account started. Pie-John had a tender heart; he believed in casting bread upon the waters. Many a hungry mouth was filled withont pay and many a quarter came back from strangers who had passed that way peniless and found prosperity at the journey's end.

And so his commonplace life ran on; the same runs each day, and yet new faces and experiences continually. When I saw him first I was but a boy, alone among strangers, and homesick besides. I was on my way to the rich corn belt to work through the summer. My mother was a widow and I had to leave home to earn support, that the home might be kept. I was hungry, but my slim purse would not permit me to buy a lunch, though the sandwiches and rich custard pie made my mouth water. I think Pie-John took it in at a glance—my short trousers and threadbare coat and the air of timidity that attends a boy on his first trip from home. When the other passengers had been served he returned to me with a bounteous spread which, as he confidingly told me, was free. I ate it and thanked him, and he talked to me all the while; it seemed to do him a dollar's worth of good to watch me eat. I had little to say, but the pie loosened my tongue a little, and as he was leaving me I asked him, I can't tell why, if he was a church member. A quizzical look flitted across his face and he answered, "No, not just exactly; why?" I stammered out something and he was gone. I was young, but I had obeyed the gospel, and some way that man impressed me as a mighty good man; he made me think of One who "went about doing good," long ago.

Fall came and on my return trip I saw Pie-John again. He had forgotten me, but when I reminded him of the free lunch he remembered and said, "Oh yes, you are the one that asked me if I was a church member." I paid for what I ate this time. That winter I went to school in the village at home, and when spring came I went North again. I had decided to preach, and this time I went to earn money to start me in college. I told Pie-John of my plans, and he wished me well in his good-natured way, just as the train whistled for the station where he was to leave the train. Years passed. I was settled as pastor of a flock and succeeding well. One day I boarded the train for the South. There was a certain young lady at home whom I had known for a long time, and she had agreed to keep house for me. When we returned Pie-John had a special basket for us and a special bow for the bride. We were getting to be old acquaintances now, after a half-dozen ten-minute talks scattered through a number of years. I had been in revival meetings lately and was full of evangelistic zeal. I thought it would be a good time to try a missionary venture; so I followed Pie-John to the car door and we stood out on the platform together in a shower of cinders from the engine, and I preached him a little sermon. I had to almost shout to be heard above the clatter and noise of the train. I said, "Pie-John, I asked you once if you were a Christian and you said no; now say you ought to be; you do lots of good and you ought to do it in the name of Christ. You have lots of friends and you ought to have him for one. You know he said, 'Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you.' I've enjoyed knowing you, John, and you'r too good a man not to be a Christian. I've always liked to eat lunch with you and I'de be glad to know we would eat together of the tree of life. We've often traveled together here; it would be nice if we could walk together on the golden shore." The train slowed up at the last station and Pie-John got off, but he had a serious face as he waved farewell from the depot platform.

I had forgotten the matter, when we went home two years later to take our baby to see its grandpa, but Pie-John hadn't. There was a new light in his eyes, and when he had gone through the train he returned and told me this story: He had taken to reading the Bible after my brief sermon that day and it took a long time for him to get a clear idea of his duty, but at last he thought he saw his way out. There had been a revival in the town and some converts were being baptized at the mill-pond as he passed one day. He watched till the last one came up out of the water and then going up to the preacher said, "Here is water, what hindereth me to be baptized?" True to the passage the preacher answered, "If thou believest with all thine heart thou mayest." "I believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God," responded Pie-John, and began to take off his coat. He was baptized and met the next train in an hour. As he told me, his eyes sparkled and it was evident that, like the Ethiopian of old, he had "gone on his way rejoicing." The train went pounding along over the uneven joints in the rails and Pie-John was silent for awhile as he looked out at the setting sun. As he rose to go he said, as he reached out his hand, "Well, good-bye again, and good luck go with you; I'll remember your kindness to me; you'r the only man that ever spoke to me plain about bein' a Christian." And then, as he brushed a tear out of each eye, he added in a low tone, "We'll eat of the tree of life together, after all, won't we?" Crash! We were thrown from our feet, the car stood up on end and fell over sideways. It got dark to me. I was roused by the sound of escaping steam and pulled myself out through a shattered window. Wife and baby were safe outside and unhurt. It was a bad wreck, but nobody killed, they said. But where was Pie-John, the lunch man? We searched through the ruins and found him pinned down by a heavy timber. We sawed, and pried, and lifted, and got him out at last. It was a good while before he showed signs of life, but at last the honest brown eyes opened. He tried to speak, and I stooped just in time to catch the words that no one else but God could have understood: "Yes, yes, the tree of life, we'll eat of it together, won't we?" and the kindly eyes closed forever, just as the sun hid itself behind the fringe of trees that bounded the flat prarie on the west!

Hang Out the Danger Signal.

BY WILL H. DIXON.

("Let your light shine before men that others seeing your good works will glorify your Father which is in heaven.")

Hang out the danger signal, brother,
Swing the red lights high—
Danger's lurking for our brethren,
Warn them ere they die;
Sweeping out o'er death's dark roadway,
Knowing not that death is nigh,
Signal, brother—give them warning,
Swing the read lights high.

Downward, downward, see them rushing,
Downward, thro' the storm and night!
Do not linger longer, brother,
Signal quickly—raise the light!
Downward precious souls are rushing;
Signal, do not let them die,
Quickly, brother, raise the red light,
Swing the signals high!

The Great Dispatcher sends the message
From his throne on high,
"Signal quickly, raise the red lights,
Do not let them die!"
Then hasten, brother—heed the message,
Stop them on their way,
Signal quickly, give the warning,
Signal them to-day!

Slumbering Demons.

BY J. P. M'CASKEY.

Every man has in his heart slumbering demons. If we live high, with good men and women of the present and the past, with God and his angels—and these we may recognize gladly everywhere if we have but eyes to see, and ears to hear, and hearts to feel—the demons may slumber on, nor wake to life and energy. But it is so easy to live low, on the plane of ignoble aims, meanly selfish, grossly immoral—in an atmosphere where the spirits of evil are at home.

Every man is an animal that seems to take into himself many creatures below him, the higher including the lower, and at times one or another of these lower animals becomes so conspicuous, asserting itself so unmistakably, that men promptly recognize the individual type and say: He is a lion, a tiger, a fox, a mule, a calf, a rabbit, a skunk, a snake, a hog, a mullet or a shark, an eagle, a vulture, or a kite. All literature is full of this suggestion. Brave as a lion, fearless as an eagle, strong as a horse or an ox, shrewd as a fox, mild as a lamb, timid as a hare, tender as a dove, and so on. We might go down into the realms of vegetable life or into the mineral world for hundreds of like expressive similes—fair as a lily, sweet as a rose, rich as a ruby, pure as gold, true as steel—but that is now apart from our purpose. Every discerning spirit recognizes the supreme fitness of all this, the absolute fidelity to fact as we know and feel in our experience of life in the world about us. But our thought now is man in his greatness and in his littleness—this Jekyll and Hyde combination with which we are all so familiar, of which each one of us is representative, which Paul recognized in himself when he said: "I find, then, a law that, when I would do good, evil is present with me. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man; but I see another law in my members warring against the law of my mind and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin. Oh, wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

This greatest of all the great teachers of right-thinking and right-doing, after the Master himself, who fought his fight manfully to the end, whether with wild beasts in the arena, mistaken men, inspired by bigotry and pride, devils incarnate, or disembodied spirits of evil, and went to the block at Rome the grandest victor the world has ever known save him who died upon the cross, taught this as the one great lesson, including all besides, for man the marvelous creature whose range is from the mud to the stars and beyond them: In the beginning, and all the way, and at the end—God the Creator, Preserver and Benefactor.

In doing this he made the world, and you and me, his debtor with an ever-growing obligation. Can we do better than to teach this best lesson to those under our care in the school? Strong thoughts, it has been said, are iron nails driven into the mind that nothing can draw out. Let this great thought of strength and hope and courage be to us and to our pupils as "a nail driven in a sure place." Let it aid us and them in lulling the demon within us to everlasting slumber, and bringing the best into subjection to the man, the angel, in each one of us.

The First Silk Hat in London.

Jan. 15, 1797, was the date fixed by Mr. Hetherington for his first appearance in public with the new hat. He believed that in the natural course of events he would create a sensation, but he was not prepared for the commotion which followed, according to the Hatters' Gazette. It was with no little trepidation that about 11 o'clock in the forenoon Mr. Hetherington emerged from his shop in the Strand. His family advised against it, but he was determined, and forth he sallied.

The Strand, as now, was one of the busy streets of London, and Mr. Hetherington had not walked ten feet before merchants and others, attracted by the unusual sight, stopped and gazed in wonder. Mr. Hetherington, however, moved on, but men who had only stopped to look, now followed after him, and in less time than it takes to tell it, the street was crowded with a howling mob. Those on the outskirts of the crowd did not know the nature of the trouble, if there was any, but they helped to swell the din. How Mr. Hetherington fared, however, is best told by the journals of that date. One gazette gave this account of the remarkable event:

"John Hetherington, haberdasher, of the Strand, was arrainged before the Lord Mayor yesterday on a charge of breach of the peace and inciting to riot, and was required to give bonds in the sum of £500. It was in evidence that Mr. Hetherington, who is well connected, appeared upon the public highway wearing upon his head what he called a silk hat (which was offered in evidence), a tall structure, having a shiny lustre, and calculated to frighten timid people. As a matter of fact, the officers of the Crown stated that several women fainted at the unusual sight, while children screamed, dogs yelped, and a young son of Cordwainer Thomas, who was returning from a chandler's shop, was thrown down by the crowd which had collected and had his right arm broken. For these reasons the defendant was seized by the guards and taken before the Lord Mayor. In extenuation of his crime the defendant claimed that he had not violated any law of the kingdom, but was merely exercising a right to appear in a headdress of his own design—a right not denied to any Englishman."

The Times of the same date (Jan. 16, 1797), in commenting on Mr. Hetherington's appearance, rather inclined to encourage the innovation, saying, among other things: "In these days of enlightenment it must be considered an advance in dress reform, and one which is bound, sooner or later, to stamp its character upon the entire community. The new hat is destined to work a revolution in headgear, and we think the officers of the Crown erred in placing the defendant under arrest."—Catholic News.

WHAT THEY SAY.

"It is one of the most remarkable books ever written on the Apocalypse. It is altogether a unique volume, and is characterized by an originality and freshness quite wonderful. He is perfect master of this portion of the Johanine literature and of the apocalyptic idea. His interpretation is not a borrowed one. He has not so much as made a passing reference to what any one else has said on the subject. His work is purely constructive and is evolved out of the book itself, and its counterpart in the history of the world. His publication of this volume will quicken thought and will lead to a new study of the Apocalypse and the whole history of redemption in the light of it." J. J. HALEY.

"I am delighted with the reasonable way you deal with this wondrous book the Apocalypse." REV. W. C. McDOUGALL.

"The 'Mystery of the Golden Cloth, or The Riven Veil,' by J. S. Hughes, is by far the best work we have ever seen on the book of Revelation." Ind. Christian, Nov. 15, 1898.

"Dr. Hughes has given me the golden key to the meaning of the Apocalypse. Under his guidance the most difficult book of Revelation becomes translucent, and a joy and comfort to the hearer." H. B. TOWNSEND, D. D., Presb. Church, Elkhart, Ind.

"The author has evidently studied with great care this wonderful book. . . . His style is attractive, and the book is at least suggestive." The Presbyterian Banner, Nov. 24, 1898.

"He has made the charm of the Apocalypse intelligible. It will be a comfort to those who are searching the deep things of God by the help of the Holy Spirit." Christian Oracle, Chicago.

Success.

'Tis he who climbs that's lost to sight,
The gazing crowd
See not the hidden summit-light
Beyond the cloud.

'Tis he who climbs that seems to fail—
Sublime success!
Who sees his human glory pale
To blessedness.

'Tis he who climbs that scales the height;
The gazing crowd
By heaven and him are lost to sight
Beneath the cloud!

METTIE CRANE NEWTON.

Within a leafy covert of a wood,
Close by the waters' marge, sits a fair maid.
Golden glints of sunlight fall upon her
Hair and wooing winds steal in to kiss her
Cheek. From her fair hand she casts a pebble
In the placid lake as if she fain would Fire its slumbering heart with somewhat of the Joyous life animating her own. And See! The waveless blue awakes! Ripples and Rings of silvery tints onward and outward
Flow, fainter and fainter grow, till they are Merged in th' eteral seas.

Th' effect of e'en
The smallest acts of life is never lost—
It outlasts time and lives in th' eternities.

How Were the Pyramids Built?

The Egyptian pyramids have perhaps caused more learned speculation than any other existing structures. To the historian, the student of comparative religion, the astronomer, the archeologist, the architect, they are alike the objects of never-ending interest; but perhaps the engineer should claim them as his special property on account of the problem of their erection. How could the ancient Egyptians have accomplished without our vast machinery a task that would be difficult even for us? In Cassier's Magazine (January), W. F. Durfee gives us an answer to this question based on the very positive statement of Herodotus, the Greek historian. After mentioning that inclined planes or "ramps" of earth were doubtless used in old times to assist in building huge edifices, he tells us that in his opinion they were not used in this case. In an old French work on the subject the author, De Goguet, says: "A very simple machine, and, according to Herodotus, very easy to manage, placed upon the first course, served to raise the stones destind for the construction of the second. The second being finished, another machine, of the same kind that I have been speaking of, was fixed upon it, and so on for the rest, one or more of the machines being always left upon each of the courses already laid, to serve successively for raising the stones from step to step. By repeating this operation as often was necessary to form the height of the pyramid, they accomplished the raising of the stones with ease to its utmost summit. Such, by the report of Herodotus, was the manner in which the body of this monstrous edifice was constructed.

"The same author teaches us also the method which they followed for the exterior covering of the pyramids, for it is certain that the pyramids had all, originally, an outward coat, whether of square flags, or marble, or of bricks, or of small stones, in such a manner that they presented to the eye only a perfectly even slope, such as we see at present in most of these building. It is true that at this time the great pyramid presents to us on each of its sides only a kind of stair; but it is easy to convince ourselves that this enormous mass was originally overcast with marble, which has disappeared through the injuries of time, or rather by the avidity of the Arabs. Herodotus tells us, then—what good sense alone would have dictated—that is to say, that they began the coating of the pyramids from the summit.

"Rawlinson, translating Herodotus, tells us that 'after laying the stones for the base, they raised the remaining stones to their places by means of machines formed of short wooden planks.' "

Some little description may illustrate Goguet's conception of the kind of mechanism employed by the pyramid builders. It is substantially a lever crane. Cranes on this principle were well known at a very early date. The lever was in common use in ancient Egypt and the pulley was also known and used prior to the destruction of Nineveh (B. C. 625), and is found figured among the sculptures discovered in the ruins of that great city by Ledyard.

That some specimens of hoisting mech anism was used by the old Egyptians for placing obelisks in position is known from the statement of Pliny, that Remeses (1250 B. C.), fearing that his engineer would not take sufficient care to proportion the power and strength of the machinery employed to raise an obelisk ninety-nine feet in height, to to the great weight to be elevated, ordered his own son to be bound to its apex, to insure more effectually the safety of the moment.

The inclined plane—the simplest of the elements of mechanism—was, without doubt, the earliest mechanical expedient used by man for raising large masses. As a preliminary to the building of the great pyramid, the engineers of Kufu (Cheops, 3050 B. C.) constructed an inclined plane of masonary for raising the stones from the level of the river to that of the rock platform on which the pyramid was erected—a height, according to the French survey, of 144 feet above the level of low water in the Nile. This inclined plane, or causeway, was over 3,000 feet in length, and had a width of 60 feet. Its eastern end was contiguous to a canal communicating with the Nile, by which the boats carrying the stones from the quarries could deliver them in readiness to be dragged up this vast "ramp"—doubtless the first artifical structure of the kind—on sleds, by men or animals, to their destination.—The Sunny South.

Parsnip Complexion.

A majority of the ills afflicting people to-day can be traced to kidney trouble. It pervades all classes of society, in all climates, regardless of age, sex or condition.

The sallow, colorless-looking people you often meet are afflicted with "kidney complexion." Their kidneys are turning to a parsnip color, so is their complexion. They may suffer from indigestion, bloating, sleeplessness, uric acid, gravel, dropsy, rheumatism, catarrh of the bladder, or irregular heart. You may depend upon it, the cause is weak, unhealthy kidneys.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble and both need the same remedy. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy will build up and strengthen weak and unhealthy kidneys, purify the diseased-kidney-poisoned blood, clear the complexion and soon help the sufferer to better health.

The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases, such as weak kidneys, catarrh of the bladder, gravel, rheumatism and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble. It is sold by druggists, in fifty cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y.

Habit-making and Habit-breaking.

"How shall I a habit break?"
As you did that habit make.
As you gathered, you must lose;
As you yielded, now refuse.
Thread by thread the strands we twist
Till they bind us neck and wrist;
Thread by thread the patient hand
Must untwine, ere free we stand;
As we builded, stone by stone,
We must toil, unhelped, alone,
Till the wall is overthrown.

But remember, as we try,
Lighter every test goes by;
Wading in, the stream grows deep
Toward the center's downward sweep;
Backward turn, each step ashore
Shallower is than before.

Ah, the precious years we waste
Leveling what we raised in haste;
Doing what must be undone
Ere content or love be won!
First, across the gulf we cast
Kite-borne threads, till lines are passed,
And habit builds the bridge at last.

An Acrostic Psalm.

Our English translations of the Bible can do very little, of course, toward exhibiting the poetry of the Hebrew original. Here, for instance, is a free translation, by Dr. W. E. Barton, of Psalm 111, showing how, in the original, the lines begin with the successive letters of the alphabet. It is taken from his recent work, "The Psalms and Their Story."

HALLELUJAH!

1. All my heart shall praise Jehovah
   Before the council of the upright, and in the congregation.
2. Deeds of power are the deeds of Jehovah,
   Earnestly desired of all them that have pleasure therein.
3. Forever endureth his righteousness;
   Glorious and majestic is his work.
4. He hath made his wonderful works to be remembered;
   In Jehovah is grace and fullness of compassion.
5. Jehovah hath given meat unto them that fear him,
   Keeping forever his covenant.
6. Let the power of his works be shewed to his people,
   Making for them the heritage of the nations.
7. Nay, the works of his hands are truth and judgment;
   Ordered and sure are all his precepts.
8. Planted securely forever and ever,
   Righteous and true are his precepts.
9. Salvation hath he sent unto his people;
   True shall be his covenant forever:
   Unutterably holy is his name.
10. Verily, the fear of Jehovah is the beginning of wisdom.
    Yea, a good understanding have all they that do thereafter;
    Zealously shall he be praised forever.

The Supply of Babies.

It has been computed that about 36,000,000 babies are born into the world each year. The rate of production is, therefore, about 70 per minute, or more than one for every beat of the clock.

With the one-a-second calculation every reader is familiar, but it is not every one who stops to calculate what this means when it comes to a year's supply. It will, therefore, probably startle a good many persons to find, on the authority of a well-known statistician, that, could the infants of a year be ranged in a line in cradles, the cradles would extend around the world.

The same writer looks at the matter in a more picturesque light. He imagines the babies being carried past a given point in their mother's arms, one by one, and the procession being kept up night and day until the last hour in the twelfth month had passed by. A sufficiently liberal rate is allowed, but even in going past at the rate of twenty a minute, 1,200 an hour during the entire year, the reviewer at his post would have seen only the sixth part of the infantile host.

In other words, the babe that had to be carried when the tramp began would be able to walk when but a mere fraction of its comrades had reached the reviewer's post, and when the year's supply of babies was drawing to a close there would be a rear guard, not of infants, but of romping six-year-old boys and girls.—Woman's Life.

A Question of Trains.

TRY IT, BOYS, IT IS EASY OF SOLUTION.

A train starts daily, let us say from San Francisco to New York, and one daily from New York to San Faancisco, the journey lasting seven days. How many trains will a traveler meet in journeying from San Francisco to New York?

It appears obvious at the first glance that the traveler must meet seven trains, and that is the answer which will be given by nine girls out of ten to whom the question is new.

The fact is overlooked that every day during the journey a fresh train is started from the other end, while there are seven on the way to begin with. The traveler will, therefore, meet not seven trains, but 14.—The Sunny South.

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

The Society Meets.

As the clock struck four, George rose to his feet. "Ladies and gentlement," he said, "as you are aware, the object of this meeting is to found a branch of the Advance Society. I don't know whether all of you want to go into it or not. I will tell you the five resolutions again, and then, if you agree, hold up your hands."

Tony Stubbs, a boy of about twelve, who was always moving, as if he had never overcome the inertia of his start into life, here held up his hand. "Now don't you begin your tricks," said Horace Blount, severely. Horace attended the high school and he considered it his duty to keep small boys under subjection.

"These five resolutions," said George, frowning at Tony, who was trying to balance his pencil on his chin—a feat no boy has succeeded in accomplishing—"are: first, to read five pages of history every week, and thirty lines of poetry in the same length of time."

"How long is that?" inquired Tony.

"Tony Stubbs," said Mildred Taylor, the girl who was fond of reading, "I wish you would be good! How can George make a speech when you are turning it into a duet?"

"In the third place," continued George, glaring at Tony, "you are to read a verse of the Bible every day. Fourth, memorize a quotation from some standard author once a week. I forgot to say that the history you are studying in school don't count. Fifth, get a notebook and write in it what you read, and how much of it you read, and try to keep faithful for twelve weeks, so that you can get on the List of Honor. Ladies and gentlemen, what is so important as the cultivation of the faculties which distinguishes mankind from—from pigs—yes, pigs, ladies and gentlemen!" George had burst forth into such impassioned eloquence, and his gestures were so dramatic, that for a moment the audience had been quite thrilled. George was himself surprised to find how his words were pouring forth, and he did not know but what he could speak on that way for an hour. But suddenly his ideas had come to a dead stop, and it was with a great effort that he seized upon pigs and dragged them into his climax. The audience giggled. George determined to soar once more and redeem his eloquence.

"Ladies and gentlemen, by the regularity which you will acquire in keeping these resolutions, you will be fitting yourselves to become those stars of the future republic which shine down upon the unprogressive masses. What shall I say of the boys and girls who do not like to read? What shall I say of those who shy from a book as if it were a piece of paper fluttering in the road when along comes a skittish horse? What shall I say, ladies and gentlemen?"

"Say 'pigs!'" cried Tony. And the little audience roared with laughter. At this moment Jim Dancy suddenly siezed George's coat, and that orator vanished in the depths of an arm chair, red but laughing. Of course all agreed to the resolutions. Then they wrote a constitution, each one offering different suggestions. They were to meet not oftener than once a week nor less than once in two weeks, at the homes of the members, taken alphabetically. At these meetings all would recite the quotations learned during the week. There would be, besides, a regular program with two kinds of duties; either to write a brief sketch of the history read in the past week, telling the main points, or a similar account of the poetry read. The following officers were elected: President, George Weston; vice-president, Mildred Taylor; secretary, Tony Stubbs; program committee, Jennie Weston, Tattie Marsh, Horace Blount.

"Now we are all officers except Jim Dancy," said Tony. So they made Jim treasurer. The term of office was limited to twelve weeks. Those who succeeded in being printed on the List of Honor would have the privilege of wearing a short red ribbon with the letters "M. Av. S." (Missouri Advance Society) worked on it in old-gold color. Those not announced, or until they were announced might wear the badge with the letters in black. Since this was the beginning of the society all would start alike, with black letters. The girls agreed to work the letters if the boys would furnish the ribbon. Business being finished, Tony, who had been scribbling very industriously, announced that he had the minutes ready, and it would not be necessary to print them in the New York Sun! So he was called upon to read them. Tony accordingly arose, and imitating George Weston's eloquent voice and wild gestures, he read: "Minutes of the Mizzouryville Advance Society. First we met, and then we set. The boys was as solemn as history, and the girls prettier'n poetry. George Weston did most of the talking and we let him because he liked it. While he was catching his pigs, Jim Dancy took a great big chocolate drop, with a big, fat yellow hickerynut atop of it, out of his pocket and dropped it into his mouth, where it was lost. Then a beautiful smile rippled over his features as if he would say, 'This is too good to be true!' Horace Blount, with that grown-up air for which he is justly distinguished—"

At that moment Jim Dancy, who resented the record of his part in the exercises, hurled his cap with such good aim that it struck the minutes and sent them scattering over the floor."

"Mr. President!" cried Horace Blount, jumping up, "I rise to a point of order!"

"I appeal to the chair!" cried Tony. "Here Jim Dancy has gone and knocked my minutes into seconds, and if this is the way—"

"State your point," said George to Horace.

"I had the floor first," said Tony, pretending to be indignant.

"The chair sustains Mr. Blount," said the president, with awful dignity.

"Then I appeal to the vice-president," cried Tony. "I don't care about the chair if I can get the influence of the sofa. Miss Mildred Taylor—"

"This is very irregular," proclaimed George. "It's against the rules for you to appeal to the vice-president while another is appealing to the president. I am sure my honorable colleague"—here he waved to Mildred Taylor—"will agree with me."

"I don't understand rules," Mildred said, "but I think it irregular for Jim to be throwing his cap at the minutes."

"So do I," cried Jennie and Tattie.

"Of course, what one girl thinks all think," said Jim, as if he had invented a new proverb.

"This is my point," began Horace Blount. He expected to be interrupted, but as everybody had decided to hear him, the silence embarrassed the parliamentarian. He blushed, coughed, and forgot what he was going to say. The others began to laugh. "This is my point—" he said severely.

"It must have got broke off," Jim suggested.

"Why don't you go on," said the president. "Has your telephone got out of fix?" They were still laughing when the door opened, and Mrs. Weston entered, looking disturbed. They knew it was not on account of their enjoyment, for she was not that kind of mother whose teeth are put on edge by the hearty laughter of children. She seated herself and they drew about her anxiously.

"Dear boys and girls, Mr. Weston has just received a telegram that calls him and me to St. Louis. The train leaves in about two hours. It is upon very pressing business. Mildred, run at once to cousin Harriett and see if she can take care of our house while we are gone, and if she is willing to oversee George and Jennie." Mildred was an orphan and lived with her aunt, Miss Harriet Taylor; and Miss Harriet was a cousin of Mrs. Weston's.

George and Jennie were very much surprised, but their mother told them not to ask about the sudden trip; when they returned they would tell all. Mildred hastened away, and presently brought back the news that Miss Harriet was willing to shut up her cottage, and she and Mildred would come to the Weston house. Of course Mildred would sleep with Jennie. The big Shepherd dog, Horace Greely, usually addressed as "Gree," which, for about a year, had taken charge of Miss Hariet's interests, would also exchange his home for the woodshed in the Weston yard. The entire Advance Society went to the station to see Mr. and Mrs. Weston "off." Mrs. Weston, discovering tears in Jennie's eyes said, "Children, it would only disturb you to know why we are called away. So you must be just as happy as you can until you have some reason to be otherwise. We may be back in a week. I know you are not like some who take advantage of their parents' absence to make trouble. Be as happy as you can, but never indulge in a pleasure that will injure you or annoy others. Jennie promised to be happy, though the tears were rolling down her cheeks. She stood wiping them away as the train vanished in the distance. (Continued in two weeks, but next week—Dogs and Cats.)

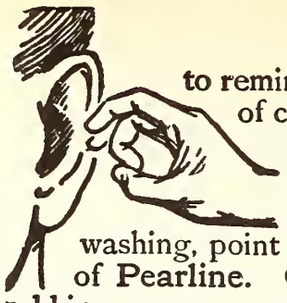
THREE MONTHS IN THE FOUR GOSPELS.*

If the anticipation of pleasure and profit from the study of the Gospel of John was great before the opening of the year, the realization enjoyed in the lessons of the past quarter has been even greater. The inexhaustible richness of this picture of the life of Christ becomes more convincing with the progress of our investigation. It might be possible for one to master the facts and teachings of the Synoptic Gospels, dealing as they do so much more with the external life of Jesus, but the fourth Gospel remains evermore superior to all our attempts at mastery, and invites to ever fresh study by the very mystery and depth of its teachings as well as by its beauty and majesty. Many of the characteristics of this Gospel have been touched upon in our readings hitherto, but some of them will suggest themselves for emphasis in the review of the quarter. In a preliminary way it may be noted again that this Gospel does not follow the ordinary story of the life of Jesus as told with so many points of agreement by the other narrators. It pursues a different method, selecting material here and there from the life of Jesus in order to supplement the earlier narratives and to give a more intensely spiritual picture of the Master, as only a mind like John's could grasp it at the close of the century. It has also been noted that this Gospel gives far more space to the Judean ministry than do the others. One need only notice how much of the work of Jesus in the lessons we have studied was done in Jerusalem and Judea to appreciate this characteristic as contrasted with the Galilean character of the other writers. This does not argue disagreement, but rather the supplementing of the others by this. Taking the lessons of the quarter we may divide them into four groups, each characterized by a particular element characteristic of this Gospel.

The first group includes the three lessons on the purpose of the gospel, the choice of the first disciples and the miracle at Cana. These serve to illustrate the object of the writer to present the life of Jesus as the incarnation of God in terms of human life. This is the express statement in the prologue: "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." This may be called the text of the gospel. That Word, or revelation, which had been coming into the world through prophets for centuries was now embodied in the human life which was still divine, God manifest in flesh. To convince men of this fact the whole ministry of Jesus was designed. He gathered about himslef a group of choice spirits, whom he not only selected with exceeding care, but educated to become bearers of his message in regions which he could not enter and in days to which he could not survive. The disciples were drawn to him by what they beheld in him of power, and their education consisted in the deepening of this impression until they were profoundly convinced of his Messiahship and divinity. His use of miracle was primarily for their sakes, and in the story of the wine at Cana we are distinctly told its object was reached in the fact that "the disciples believed on him." Thus the incarnation grew in significance to the disciples as its purpose was reached in impressing them with Christ's purposes and in creating within them a spirit like his. They were thus fitted to become his representatives because they reproduced his spirit. It was his purpose to perpetuate his work through men, and though he himself constituted the historic incarnation, it was his purpose to make his followers living representatives of himself and the Father, so that the fact of the incarnation might be no isolated event of history, but perpetuated through the years in the church. Every true Christian becomes a fresh embodiment of the life of God in the world through contact with Jesus. Any conception of Christian life which does not lead to such a reincarnation of Christ's spirit and purposes is inadequate.



The second group of lessons, those relating to the interviews with Nicodemus, the Samaritan woman and the nobleman who requested the healing of his son, illustrates an element in the fourth Gospel, brought out much more prominently than in the other Gospels, viz., Jesus' estimate of individuals and his willingness to spend time in teaching one person regarding his designs. The Old Testament is the history of a nation, and it may be said that prior to the days of Jesus the emphasis had always been placed upon the nation, the tribe or the group, not upon the individual. Jesus discovered the individual. He never thought it time wasted to speak to the humblest and most obscure person, and he always talked of the most important things. To Nicodemus he spoke of the profoundest fact of spiritual experience, the new birth and its necessity. To the Samaritan woman he proclaimed his Messiahship and at the same time quickened her conscience. In the nobleman he discovered a faith in himself which even those of his own nation did not possess, and gave assurance of his approval in the healing of the boy. He always held the spiritual value of the individual as the chief consideration. The place of a man in the divine program was more important than any other consideration. He recognized man as not simply a part of society but a being of immortal and infinite value. King Frederick William IV., of Prussia, once visited a school, according to his custom, and among the questions he asked were some relating to the various departments of organic and inorganic life. Picking up a stone he asked the children "To what kingdom does this belong?" They replied, the mineral kingdom. Picking up a flower, he was told it belonged to the vegetable kingdom. "And to what kingdom," said he, "do I belong?" A little girl raised her hand and innocently responded, "Please, Sire, you belong to the kingdom of heaven." This impressive fact of man's spiritual heritage Jesus sought to reveal in every interview, of which so many are recorded in the fourth Gospel.

A third note of emphasis is given in this Gospel to the growing opposition which followed the first ready response to the ministry of Jesus. In the lessons on Jesus' proclamation of his divine authority, in the story of the five thousand fed in the desert place to which he had found it neccessary to retire because of his enemies, and in his bold assertion of his character at the feast, we have the disclosure of that growing unbelief which finally compelled our Savior to confine his work, for the most part, to the circle of the few men he had chosen to be his disciples. The opposition of the Jewish rulers seems most unreasonable and wicked to us, and yet we may well question whether we do not ourselves resist the work of the Master in our own hearts and in the community in which we live by our selfish seeking of our own interests and pleasure, and our forgetfulness of his will. Only when we make his will supreme can this mistake be avoided.

Once more, these lessons show the work of Christ as set forth in the fourth Gospel. To use miracle as suggestive of the greater power of spiritual renewal was the custom of Christ. The cleansing of the body from disease was the suggestion and proof of his power to cleanse the soul. Jesus came to bring life to men; to make them whole in body and in spirit; to free them from sin as well as from its consequences. The atonement, accomplished by his life and death, is the ground of this assurance. He is thus the Good Shepherd, who not only redeems us from our sins, but watches us and guards us through life by his presence through the Holy Spirit.

The Experience of a Wisconsin Farmer.

Mr. W. J. Hurst, a prominent farmer in the neighborhood of Wild Rose, Wis., wants to benefit suffering mankind. Mr. Hurst writes: "I desire to let you know my gratitude to Dr. P. Fahrney, of Chicago, Ill., inasmuch as I have entirely recovered from a severe illness with which I was taken down in November, 1896. I received 21 visits from local doctors without help. Dr. ——, of Wild Rose, called three times and Dr. ——, from Wautoma, 18 times. They agreed that I had catarrh and inflammation of the bladder. I suffered terrible pains. Completely discouraged, I gave up the doctors and commenced using Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. It was not long before I commenced to feel better, and the improvement has kept right on. I also had pains in my limbs and feet, they did not swell, but were very painful. This medicine is grand. I want to benefit humanity and therefore all my influence shall be spent in behalf of the Blood Vitalizer. I live five miles from the postoffice on my own farm."

When all else has failed, use Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer, but why wait till then? Thousands have gladly testified to the merits of this remedy. Sold to the people direct through local agents by the proprietor, Dr. P. Fahrney, 112-114 South Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 26.

TRUE PENITENCE.

(2 Cor. 7:1-11.)

The hermits scourged themselves, cut themselves with stones, went barefoot and lived alone and in starvation, thinking they were doing penance. This was no true penitence; this was no godly sorrow. It was the sorrow of the world, which worketh death, and not the godly sorrow which worketh repentance unto salvation.

There is a sorrow for sin which is more remorse than repentance. Remorse is the death of the soul; repentance is its life. Remorse cries out, "All hope abandon;" repentance says, "Try again." Too great sorrow for sin cuts the nerve of effort. Forget those things that are behind and reach forward to those things that are before. Forget past failures as well as past successes, and try, in either case, to do better. This is Paul's manner.

There are dark moments in every one's life which one ought gladly to forget, moments which take from the joy of the past, which destroy the tranquility of memory; but Nature is a kind mother, and gradually draws oblivion down over these scenes, if we let her. Let us never try, by overmuch sorrow, to keep such memories alive. Far better to forget and never repeat the wrong.

The words of the Persian poet, Omar Khayyam, meant perhaps in a different sense, are nevertheless true of this oversevere repentance:

"In the fire of spring
Your winter garment of Repentance fling:
The Bird of Time has but a little way
To flutter—and the Bird is on the wing."

Do not, then, waste time in worrying over past weaknesses, but be doing better, for time is short.

"Whether at Naishassur or Babylon,
Whether the cup with sweet or bitter run,
The wine of life keeps oozing, drop by drop,
The leaves of life keep falling, one by one."

Nevertheless, one should not, as this same Persian poet, snap his fingers in carelessness at the past saying, "Ah well, I am made so as to sin. I inherit my evil tendencies. No fault of mine!" No matter what evil trait we may inherit, we are responsible to God to correct that wrong inheritance.

Daniel Webster at a dinner one night was asked—it is an old story—what was the greatest thought that had ever come to him. He replied, "My personal responsibility to God!" and for twenty minutes he talked as they had none of them ever heard him talk before, of religious themes, and then, excusing himself, went out. Whatever may be the mysteries surrounding our life and the tendencies of evil in us, it is certainly true that we are responsible to God for our conduct.

David sinned, repented, sinned again, and again repented. Poor, weak David! Yet he did not sink lower and lower; but each time seemed to come nearer and nearer, with each successive repentance, to the right. Such is the true penitence, which wears its sackcloth and ashes for a time, to be sure, but rises washed and anointed for a stronger fight.

A Wonderful Book.

The past week I have reread "Missionary Addresses" by Bro. McLean. I never realized its real value before. It surely is a wonderful book. Here in one volume is the fruit of years of reading. It is a remarkable array of facts. It ought to be read by every Disciple of Christ in the land. It is worth five times its cost to the preacher as a work of reference. If you have it not, get it. C. Concerning the Disciples.

By F. D. Power, Director.

Our first-year readers have been studying the evils of human creeds and the authority of Jesus Christ, the place of ordinances in the Christian system, the opposition to our movement, and yet its rapid progress, the deepening of spiritual life and the evangelistic spirit among the Disciples. These are themes of intensely practical and vital importance. Everything hinges upon the answer we give to the question, "What think ye of Christ; whose Son is he?" If he be supreme, the author and finisher of the faith, the Son of God, whose Word all men must hear and obey, then any tendency to displace him must be resisted; his authority, legislative, judicial and executive, must alone be recognized by his church; and the institutions of his house, as baptism, the Lord's Supper, must be observed as he has delivered them to us.

Naturally, in that day of the exaltation of creeds, the position of Stone, the Campbells and Scott was grossly misunderstood and bitterly opposed. Never was sectarianism more deeply entrenched in the hearts of men, the craft was in danger and men felt called of God to destroy, if possible, this heresy. But God was with our fathers. The plain preaching of the facts, commandments, and promises of the gospel in place of the speculations of men, the clear, satisfactory, scriptural instruction as to the conditions of pardon, instead of the vague, uncertain and unbiblical teachings to which they were accustomed. The New Testament plea for a union of Christians in place of the strifes and divisions which cursed the church, these were causes, and are still, for the mighty power of this movement with the people and its rapid progress in numbers and influence. Let the Disciples be true to the plea made by the fathers. The religious world still needs it. There is a perennial beauty about the old gospel. Though much for which we have battled is conceded to-day, yet there are those still who see men as trees walking. No pulpit among us, no Sunday-school teacher, no religious journal, no private member of the church in his teaching and work can afford to neglect the fundamental principles of this great nineteenth-century movement to restore as in the beginning the Christianity of the New Testament. With its complete restoration in letter and spirit to all believers shall come the triumph of the gospel in all the earth.

Our second-year readers have been dealing with Walter Scott, John Smith, J. T. Johnson, Samuel Rogers and Jacob Creath, Sr. and Jr. In no way could the position of the Disciples be better illustrated than in the lives of these pioneers. They are wonderful men. Their lives are a glorious inspiration. The text-book gives but a hint of the riches in this Klondike of our history as a people. Let our readers get the fuller biographies and study them, and let the leaders of circles by all means make a specialty of the local pioneers not named in the handbook. Volumes would be necessary to recount the virtues and excellencies, the labors and sacrifices of these godly men. One of our pastors is giving "Half-hour Talks on the Pioneers" at his prayer-meetings. This is a happy thought. In this Jubilee Year there could be no more profitable line of investigation for preacher and people. We would call no man "father" in the sense that our Lord commanded; we should not. But we would honor the men who labored in the heroic period of our movement, and into whose labors we have entered. At least let us know them.

The examination papers are being received, and in general are very satisfactory. Why should not every circle, and every member of every circle take the quarterly examination? It pays to write these papers. Our work is growing and is accompiishing great good.

BULGARIA.

This Turkish province, originally settled by the Finns, is now inhabited by a mixture of the Finnish, Russian, Turkish and Tartar people.

The men of Bulgaria formerly wore a short open jacket over a loose blouse and a garment greatly resembling a full divided skirt buckled at the knee. Their legs were swathed with folds of flannel.

The women wore skirts above the ankle and a loose cloth coat over a bodice. Their headdress was a small stiff cap ornamented with gold or silver coins.

The current issue of the Singer National Costume Series represents a family of Bulgarian peasants, the women appearing in the ancient style of dresss, but the man in a more modern costume.

Bulgarian women are experts in the art of embroidery, the rules governing harmonious color and design having been passed from mother to daughter for generations.

The most marvelous art stitching and embroidery can be accomplished on Singer Sewing Machines; copies of the finest paintings are made with wonderful fidelity; intricate patterns of lace and embroidery are reproduced with much less labor and with a finer finish than can possibly be accomplished by hand.

"WHAT A YOUNG WOMAN OUGHT TO KNOW." By Mrs. Mary Wood-Allen, M. D., and Sylvanus Stall, D. D. The Vir Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa., publishers. Price, $1.00; 264 pages.

This book addressed to young women is dlvided into three parts. The value of the body and its hygiene, the special physiology and laws of maturity, and the third wisely and judiciously treats of love, engagements and marriage. The author brings to her task the training of a physician, the sympathies of a mother, and the tact of a wise and judicious writer. We should be glad if every young woman in our whole land might read this book and profit by it. It will equip young women to meet the dangers and difficulties which lie before them in untried experiences, make them intelligent and receptive to life's deeper meanings and higher possibilities. It is a worthy companion volume to Dr. Stall's book, "What a Young Man Ought to Know," issued by the same company.

An illustrated book of 80 pages has been prepared by Miss Mary and Miss Margaret W. Leitch, who for eleven years were missionaries of the American Board in Ceylon. The book (paper cover) is called "Ceylon a Key to India," and is published in an "extra" of the Missionary Herald. A hasty glance through its pages gives one a very painful consciousness of the awful results of centuries of idolatry in India and arouses a corresponding anxiety to hasten the end of this awful misery and fearful superstition by hastening the evangelization of those lands wlth the gospel of Christ. This magazine is a splendid missionary document and may be had by addressing Chas. E. Swett, No. 14 Bacon St., Boston, Mass., at ten cents per copy.

MAGAZINES.

The timely topic of Mormon polygamy, and the opinions of the late Brigham Young and various Mormon wives regarding it is tactfully discussed by Mrs. Frank Leslie, in an illustrated article which is one of the principal features of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for March.

There are frauds in soaps as well as other things. Sometimes a grocer will offer you a substitute for Ivory Soap, because his profits are larger on the substitute. He and the purchaser are losers in this transaction. The dealer ultimately loses the customer, and the customer suffers from the mischief of the substitute. A person accustomed to Ivory Soap will not be satisfied with any other. Ask for Ivory Soap and insist upon getting it.

A WORD OF WARNING —There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

To the North American Review for March Demetrius C. Boulger contributes an interesting article on "The Dissolution of the Chinese Empire," maintaining that however slow or intermittent the process may prove, there is no longer any reason for doubting that dissolution is inevitable and that in the least changeful land of "the changeless East," a new constitution and a new method of maintaining political life has to be devised or discovered.

The Treasury of Religious Thought for March, 1899, presents as frontispiece the portrait of the Rev. Dr. Cortland Myers, of the Baptist Temple, Brooklyn, with a picture and sketch of his church, and a sketch of his remarkable career. Something of his quality appears in his able sermon on "Making a Life," which has the leading place in this number. The opening illustrated article of the number is a very full account of the "Young Men's Christian Association in New York," which describes the remarkable growth and work of that fifteenfold organization.

These leaflets can be furnished at $2.50 per thousand, plus cost of transportation. Samples, together with a practical plan for easily putting them into every house in a community, will be sent free on application. Address League for Social Service, 105 East 22nd Street, New York City.

The Great Revival and the Little Tent Meeting, or "Christian Experience" of To-day, by J. S. Lamar, is the opening of the Christian Tract Series which the Christian Oracle Co. of of Chicago, Ill., proposes publishing. These magazine tracts are to be issued monthly at 50 cents per year; but by taking advantage of a special advance offer now they may be secured at 25 cents per year. The opening tract is a fine introduction to such a series and this new method of giving to the public select tracts ought to prove a popular one. As to the high character of the above-named tract, there is no better guarantee than that it is issued over the name of J. S. Lamar.

He was killed by a falling tree while at work in the timber on Feb. 6. The writer knew him well, as a faithful and noble Christian. Dow, of Iowa City, one of our well-known Iowa preachers. Sister Dow became a Christian 60 years ago. Though she now rests from her labors, her works do follow her.

T. W. COLLINS.

IDEN.

On Friday evening, March 3, 1899, Archie Addison Iden died at the age of 23 years, nine months and 27 days. He was the beloved son of Thomas and Abba Iden, whose loving nurture he fittingly set forth. Three years ago, under the ministry of M. C. Wilson, he heard the Word of God and was buried with his Lord in baptism. He put on the armor of God, enlisted in the service, fought a good fight, finished the course and kept the faith. In the service of song, in the church and Endeavor he was our sweetest singer. His death of heart disease was calm, triumphant. "It's better, mother," he said, and so he is ever with the Lord. Services held Lord's day, 5th, by the writer.

WM. B. CLEMMER.

Under her influence he came into the Christian Church and lived a consistent Christian till death released him from service and promoted him to that home where sickness and sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more. She leaves 10 children, all faithful members of the church; one is a preacher, two are deacons and the daughter, Mrs. T. J. Haden, is president of our Ladies' Aid. Sister Jennings has been a member of the church for over 40 years. In her life was blended the careful serving of Martha, the good deeds of Dorcas and the devotional spirit of Mary. KING.

Hilleary T. King was born in Calvert County, Maryland, Nov. 10, 1814. Dec. 3, 1835, he married Miss Louisa Dorsey. Of this union were born seven children, of whom two sons and one daughter survive on earth. His father was a slaveholder and offered him great inducements to remain on the old homestead, but such was his hatred of slavery that he took his young wife and in poverty began life in Illinois, settling in Madison County. June 9, 1860, his wife died; June 20, 1861, he married Miss Elizabeth Higbee. To them were born three sons, all of whom are yet on earth. In 1874 the family moved to near Drakeville, Davis County, Iowa. Oct. 30, 1886, mother died. Father rented the farm, and for a time visited relatives. August 23, 1887, he married Mrs. Annie M. Haughey. They remained on the farm until November, 1895, since when Omaha, Neb., has been their home. Father united with the Methodist Episcopal Church when 14 years of age. In September, 1865, he was baptized by Elder H. W. Osborn, and took his stand with the people who desire to be Christians only. Much Bible study preceded this change, but once made father could always give his reasons for it. He was of a nervous temperament and quick temper, and had many a battle in his own heart. He despised the things that are untrue, dishonorable and vulgar, and loved the good. His last years were very calm and peaceful. He suffered much, but bore it quietly. As it became apparent that the end was near he arranged for his funeral, and then simply waited. His last earthly words were of his children and the church. To Brother Will who reached him Friday night before he departed he said, "The Lord has called me." On Monday, Jan. 16, he fell asleep as gently as an infant. After a short service at the home the remains were brought to Drakeville. Bro. S. B. Downing preached the sermon. Loving neighbors and brethren assisted, and we laid the poor old body beside mother's to await Christ's call. May we be as ready as he when our work is done. O. H. KING.

Colfax, Iowa, March 1, 1899.

MEANS.

Prof. Samuel R. Means was born in West Moreland County, Pa., May 24, 1834; he died in Perry, Oklahoma, Feb. 27, 1899. He was married to Miss Tilda Gonser, of Ohio, in 1861, and was widely and favorably known in Iowa, Kansas and Oklahoma as teacher, probate judge and county superintendent. Bro. Means joined the M. E. Church when a boy, and transferred his relationship to the Christian Church twenty years ago. He was soon appointed an elder, and remained such till death. He was timely in council, and generous in everything that had for its end the good of humanity. E. M. BARNEY, pastor.

MOONEY.

Octavia Mooney, whose maiden name was Kelley, was born at Evansville, Ind., June 11, 1822, and died at Astoria, Ill., Feb. 21, 1899, aged 76 years, seven months and 10 days. Very early in life she united with the M. E. Church, but in 1865, under the ministry of Bro. Wm. Garrison, she became a member of the Christian Church. She was a firm believer in Christ, and lived and died in full hope of living at God's right hand in the home of the soul.

H. C. LITTLETON.

Astoria, Ill., March 2, 1899.

SIDENER.

Another of our pioneer preachers has passed away, having nearly completed his fourscore yeurs. Elder John Allen Sidner died at the home of his son-in-law, Hon. J. S. Woods, in the town of Kaufman, Tex., on the 28th day of February, 1899. He was born in Fayette county, Ky., on the 21st day of August, 1821. He had lived a consistent Christian life for more than 60 years and had been a preacher of the gospel for 50 years. His father and mother were immersed by Barton W. Stone, and with him and others constituted the Church of Christ at Old Union, Fayette county, Ky., one of the oldest churches in the Reformation, having been organized before Alexander Campbell ever visited Kentucky. Elder John A. Gano, who preached for this church more than 50 years continuously, baptized Bro. Sidener at the age of 16 years. On the 11th day of February, 1849, he was formally set apart to the ministry by Elders John A. Gano and Samuel Bryant. In 1856 he sold his farm in Kentucky and located at Chillicothe, Mo., where he ministered to the church for some years. In 1861 when the war broke out between the states he refugeed to Texas; and at Paris on the 2nd day of December, 1862, he married Miss Sallie A. White, of Columbia, Tenn. She died Feb. 25, 1874, leaving him five children, four of whom still survive. After his wife's death he traveled and preacned extensively in several states and territories, and was perhaps personally acquainted with more of the preachers of the Reformation than any other one person. He numbered among his acquaintances Campbell, Stone, Johnson, McGarvey and other great leaders in the Reformation, and was present at the great debate between Campoell and Rice at Lexington, Ky., in 1842, when Henry Clay acted as one of the moderators. Last March, while at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Lillie B. Freeland, San Angelo, Tex., he wrote to the Christian Leader, "I am in good health, scarcely feel age and my voice is clear and strong as ever." But in less than a month from that time he was stricken down by disease, and was from thenceforth almost continually confined to his bed. He was patient under his afflictions and met death with resignation as becomes a Christian. D. B. MIZELL.

STEPHENS.

Mrs. George Stephens died of consumption at Topeka, Kan., Feb. 19, 1899, aged 59 years. She was born in Brown County, O., and moved to Clay County, Mo., when quite young. From thence to Atchison County, Kan., where she resided until October, 1898. Her maiden name was Mary Elizabeth Payne, and she was married to George Stephens, March 23, 1858. Five sons and four daughters were born to this union. All are living but Mrs. Frank Mowne. One son belongs to the 20th Kansas regiment now at the Philippines. Her devotion to Christ and her family impressed all who knew her. D. STEWART.

WILLOCK.

Andrew Willock was born March 11, 1818, died at Astoria, Ill., Feb. 23, 1899, aged 80 years, 11 months and 12 days. He obeyed the gospel of Christ becoming a member of the Christian Church one-half a century ago. He was a strong believer in Christ and as we believe lived and died in the hope of reaching the home prepared for God's children's beyond death and the grave. H. C. LITTLETON.

Astoria, Ill., March 2, 1899.

WISDOM.

Mrs. Anna Soyster Wisdom was born in Cumberland, Md., July, 1840. Died at her home in Warsaw, Mo., Feb. 27, 1899. Was married to Major John Huntley in 1864, and left a widow in 1878. Was married to Judge A. J. Wisdom, by N. M. Ragland, Oct. 19, 1881. Sister Wisdom was a consecrared, cultured Christian. The Warsaw church never had a better worker, or the poor a more helpful friend. She was a worthy representative of all that is noblest and best in Christian womanhood. The funeral service was conducted by the writer, at the church, Tuesday afternoon, Feb. 28. G. L. BUSH.

Publishers' Notes.

Competent judges speak in the highest terms of Prof. Fairhurst's late book, "Organic Evolution Considered." Among those of high authority we are glad to mention the editor of the Living Church, Chicago, and give the following extract from what was published in that paper in a recent number: "Being deeply interested in the subject, and even anxious to accept evolution as true, we have read everything that has been written upon the subject that we could obtain, and we have been unable to find any answer to even a few of the many difficulties with which this book is crowded. We imagine Prof. Fairhurst has had just the same experience. He has marshaled his objections in logical order and put them forth in this book. The work seems very strong and well done. There is no air of supporting a theory, or of refuting an antagonist, but a manifestation of what seems to us the true scientific spirit—a careful examination of all claimed results of investigation, and an honest effort made to weigh them, not as making for or against any particular theory, but as very fact. The universality of Prof. Fairhurst's reading, and the broad range of this special examination, relieve him from any fair charge of special pleading."

This book contains 386 pages, and the price is $1.50, postpaid.

Allow us to send you samples of our Sunday-school supplies before making your order for what your school will need for the second quarter of 1899. If your Sunday-school is not using the literature published by the Christian Publishing Co., of St. Louis, write to them for a sample set of their supplies, and make a careful examination of their list before ordering for the coming quarter.

The Christian Publishing Co. is anxious that all superintendents and their teachers should see their extensive line which is offered to the Sunday-schools. We believe an examination of the supplies will convince the superintendent of their superiority over all others. Send your order now.

The large number of those who have read T. W. Grafton's "Life of Alexander Campbell" will be glad to know that he has just completed a book which he calls "Men of Yesterday." The Christian Publishing Co. is glad to announce that "Men of Yesterday" will be issued from their press about the 1st of April. This book is a series of character sketches of the following prominent men among the Disciples of Christ: Walter Scott, Barton W. Stone, John Smith, Isaac Errett, Barton W. Johnson and Otis A. Burgess.

The book will contain photo-engravings of of each of the above persons, made with latest modern skill, for this volume. It will be printed on excellent book paper, and bound in latest style cloth binding. The size will be 12mo., and the price $1 00, postpaid.

The little book, "Wonders of the Sky," from the pen of W. J. Russell, is delighting those who read it. High authority is glad to express itself when having read this book.

A. McLean, corresponding secretary of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, testifies to the merits of "Wonders of the Sky," after reading it, in the following manner: "On the train I read every line of this book. It is most fascinating throughout. It is packed full of good and beautiful things."

This work is bound in beautiful illuminated cloth, and is especially attractive to the eye of the young. The book can but have an elevating influence on the minds of all its readers. The price is 50 cents, postpaid.

Good Alike to Renewals or New Subscriptions.

The good work continues. Our circulation is growing steadily. Evidently the brethren appreciate more than ever what an agency for good the religious journal can be.

Bro. Robt. Duncan has kindly consented to act as agent for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST at Bowling Green, Ky. Will the good people of that fine little bluegrass city receive him kindly—and subscribe at once.

If the Christian paper is a needed and effective means for promoting the cause of religion, then you as a Disciple owe it your hearty and earnest support.

Do not lose sight of the fact that right in the lead of this march of expansion or progress will be found the quality of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Its present high standard will not be lowered, but rather elevated, just as our readers manifest in a practical way their desire to have it so. We will not be satisfied with being "the best paper in the brotherhood" until "our brotherhood" means all Christendom—as it should.

On reading the editor's Easy Chair in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST recently, in which the editor was speaking of his 57th birthday, I could but stop reading and think how many heavy hearts he had cheered and blest by his work, and I prayed God to give him many more years and bless his work in the future as he has done in the past. How many times the dear old paper has cheered my lonely heart when I was burdened with the cares of life during the twenty years in which I have been a reader of it. MRS. ANN GAVER.

Kenoma, Mo.

"Enclosed find order for $1.50 to pay for 1899. This is my 28th year as a reader of its pages, having begun taking it the first of 1871, when it was published as the Evangelist at Oskaloosa, Ia. I expect to be a life subscriber." WM. G. DORTHY.

"I find very little in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from which I dissent. Generally I have been able to see, after a time, that some things that you have written and to which I have objected at first, have been correct. On the whole, the weekly visits of your paper hav been a stimulus to greater endeavor. Say what we may, good counsel regularly administered will tell in time. One thing I have always admired was your Christian forebearance and brotherly kindness shown toward those who differ from you. Speaking the truth in love is what I admire. I have taken papers which did not do that, but I did not take them long. I do not think you will fully realize the power for good you have been until the final day of accounts. You are building better than you know. Your editor through your paper has a place close to my heart."

Holley, Ore. J. R. SPRINGER.

Don't forget that by paying your own subscription to 1900 and sending us the name of one new subscriber together with $1.50 to pay for one year's subscription to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST you may obtain, without cost to you, a copy of W. J. Russell's book, "The Wonders of the Sky." Send during March and be sure to ask for the premium.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT? For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

America or Rome? Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. Peolep will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the ope.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Cuban Military Assembly by an almost unanimous vote has impeached and condemned Gen. Gomez for insubordination and disobedience to the Assembly. Gen. Gomez accepted the offer which President McKinley made through his agent, Mr. Porter, to furnish $3,000,000 to be divided among the officers and men of the Cuban army when it should be disbanded. The Assembly did not authorize the acceptance, denounces the niggardliness of the United States and impeaches Gomez for driving a bad bargain. It serves notice upon us that it, the Military Assembly, has not agreed to any $3,000,000 proposition and does not propose to. This impeachment of Gomez by the Assembly does not give us a great deal of information about Gomez, but it tells us some things about the character of the Assembly. A self-appointed aggregation of Cuban army officers who, seeing that the days of purely military government are passing away, are trying to form themselves into the semblance of a civil government which shall endure supreme after the army has been disbanded, and meanwhile are claiming to control the army; a group of men who have instated themselves in office and are now masquerading as the representatives of the people of Cuba, whom they represent about as much as Aguinaldo and his councilors represent the great mass of the Filipinos; a set of officials who are so lacking in the simplest elements of sound sense that they will make a gratuitous attack upon the most able man and the most popular leader in the Cuban ranks, and whose vision is so lacking in true perspective that they believe the United States will shower more millions upon them if they only crack their whip loud enough. It is scarcely necessary to observe to an American audience that the Cuban Assembly has not enough back of it to make its threats highly effective.

General Gomez has accepted the sentence of the assembly with an air of patient grief, which may be the sincere expression of an emotion akin to a father's sorrow over the ingratitude of his children, or may be a pretense adopted as most likely to win sympathy and secure a following for himself. The general-in-chief acknowledges, in words at least, that the Assembly has power to deprive him of his rank, but at the same time he does not leave his friends and the public generally without hope that he will continue to serve as commander of the army in spite of the Assembly if he is wanted. The announcement of the impeachment caused a profound sensation. There were wild demonstrations of devotion to the General and contempt for the Assembly. An announcement was promptly made by the American authorities that the subsidy of $3,000,000 would be distributed through Gen. Gomez as soon as it arrived, entirely ignoring the Assembly and its action. This word was doubtless gladly received by the army, but it has stirred up unexpected dissatisfaction among many of the same people who were shouting for Gomez the day before. They virtually refused to recognize the action of the Assembly, but are offended because the American authorities ignore it. Meanwhile, Gomez awaits developments. It is a question whether the influence of the general-in-chief or the assembly has most weight with the Cubans. Gomez lacks some of the qualities of the perfect patriot, as was evident when after the death of Garcia he began his negotiations for the subsidy. But at least he has some, common sense and ability to grasp an idea, and these are qualities in which the assembly is notoriously and conspicuously defective.

Business has begun in the Philippines. Since it has become evident that the insurgent natives would not accept civilization in the pleasant and agreeable form in which we proposed to administer it, they must, for the good of all concerned, take their medicine without the sugar-coating. General Wheaton, with his flying column, has advanced eastward from Manila to the towns of Pasig, Goudalupe and Binangonan, which he has captured and garrisoned. The resistance has not been strong enough to occasion a genuine battle, but the expedition was a protracted skirmish in which the American forces suffered some slight loss. Geo. Otis' oft-quoted dictum that "this is not a picnic, but a war," seems to represent the true state of the case. Manila is no longer considered safe as a place of residence, and the families of the United States officers and the natives who have property are leaving. An order has been issued from Washington prohibiting officers who are going to Manila from taking their families with them. Much of the country about Manila has been desolated and there are many innocent sufferers. This is a situation painful to contemplate, especially when much of the devastation has been wrought more or less directly by our own soldiers. The justification of it lies in considering the character of the enemy which has made this destruction necessary—not a band of noble patriots representing the mass of their fellowcountrymen, but a horde of irresponsible individuals who have as little inherent right to rule the Philippines as we have, and who have as yet displayed no capacity for that function, even if they had the right. The Filipinos would have absolutely no chance of self-government under Aguinaldo. It is our business to save the many Filipinos who are unarmed and unorganized from the misrule of the comparatively few Filipinos who have Mauser rifles and a certain measure of military organization under a despotic chief.

Professor Knapp, of the Department of Agriculture, has just returned from Manila and has some sensible things to say about affairs in those islands. He wisely calls attention to the fact that the peoples of the Orient are in general more zealous for the maintenance of their petty customs and forms than for resisting the sovereignty of a foreign power over them. The people of China are not disturbed by the threatened partition of their empire among the European powers, but they make passionate resistance to every attempt to change one jot or tittle of their ancient customs and traditions. For half a century England tried without success to supplant native forms of government by English forms in her dependencies in the Pacific. Satisfactory administration was secured only when she learned to retain the native forms and rule, for the most part, through them, thus keeping the visible tokens of foreign dominion as much out of sight as possible. So in governing the Philippines, we must disturb their forms and customs as little as possible. We cannot Anglo-Saxonize them. Prof. Knapp's investigation of the population of the islands has led him to the conclusion that the number of inhabitants has been much exaggerated. His estimate is 4,000,000 instead of 12,000,000, the figure ordinarily given. The advantage of the land for agricultural purposes he finds to lie not so much in the richness of the soil as in the climate, which is marked by remarkable evenness of temperature, which is favorable to the production of sugar and a heavy rainfall, which makes rice a sure and profitable crop. The climate, he says, is such that Americans can accustom themselves to it and live there without inconvenience.

The treaty of peace has been signed by the Queen Regent of Spain. The war is not yet technically at an end, however, and will not be until the ratifications have been exchanged. The French embassador, M. Cambon, who has represented Spanish interests in Washington since diplomatic relations were broken off and who signed the protocol on behalf of Spain, will probably be the agent in the exchange of the two copies of the treaty signed respectively by the President and the Queen Regent. It will be observed that it took considerably more time to make peace than to fight out the war. The declaration of war was on April 24; the protocol was signed and hostilities ceased within less than four months from that date. But more than senen months elapsed between the signing of the protocol, Aug. 13, and the signing of the treaty by the Queen Regent, March 17. It is expected that one of the first acts of the new Spanish Minister will be to make overtures for the negotiation of a commercial treaty between Spain and the United States.

Our new ambasador to Great Britain, Mr. Choate, has recently made his first conspicuous public appearance in England. At the dinner of the Chamber of Commerce, in London, he was the guest of honor and made the speech of the evening. Of course, the burden of his speech was the friendly relations between England and America, and of course, too, that thought met with an enthusiastic reception. The follwing paragraph will serve to indicate that the brotherhood idea in Mr. Choate's mind is not all sentimental gush, but that it is quite consistent with a recognition of the real facts of the situation: "I beg that you will not mistake my meaning. I do not believe that, although friends, we shall ever cease to be rivals. In the future, as in the past, we on our side and you on yours will still press every advantage that can fairly be taken; but it shall be generous and loyal rivalry, and all questions, disputes and controversies arising shall be settled by peaceful means, by negotiations, by arbitration, by any and every possible means except war." The English press was highly complimentary in its estimates of Mr. Choate and his speech, and the statement was more than once made that he is a worthy successor of Lowell and Bayard.

The condemnation of Americanism in the Pope's recent encyclical has been followed by a prompt renunciation of Americanism by Archbishop Ireland, who has always been considered the most conspicuous representative of that spirit, so far as it has found representation in the hierarchy. The Archbishop hastens to put himself right with the Pope by a letter addressed to him, from which this paragraph is taken: "With all the energy of my soul I repudiate all the opinions the apostolic letter repudiates and condemns, those false and dangerous opinions whereto, as His Holiness in brief says, certain people give the name of Americanisms. . . . The whole episcopate of the United States, in their own name and in the name of their flocks, are ready to condemn them." But if all the bishops and all their flocks condemn Americanism in the Catholic Church, how can it be that there is any Americanism to condemn? Who holds to it, if none of the bishops or their flocks? Yet the Pope explicitly says that these erroneous views are held by many, and the very fact that he has made them the subject of an encyclical is a recognition of the serious character of the situation. The Archbishop's extreme humility actually leads him into something very like a suggestion that the Pope doesn't know what he is talking about, that he is condemning errors which nobody holds and making a stir over a situation which does not exist. This is really scant reverence for an archbishop to show toward an infallible pontiff. But the Pope does know what he is talking about, Archbishop Ireland to the contrary notwithstanding. The thing which he condemns, under the name of Americanism, has a very real existence. Doubtless the episcopate stands ready to condemn it or anything else at the command of the Pope, but that is of little consequence. No reform ever came from the episcopate. The Catholic laity is less servile and more open to ideas, and it is among the laity that Americanism is to be found—the very Americanism which the Pope defines and condemns, but which he is powerless to destroy.

Italy has decided not to press her demand for the cession of San Mun Bay by China. It has been officially announced that the demand was not made until England had been consulted and her approval secured. In her attempt to get a footing in China, therefore, Italy is to be regarded as the ally of Great Britain. There is little question that the withdrawal of Italy's claim is also out of deference to a request from Salisbury. The Italian Minister at Pekin, Signor Martino, has been recalled, his action disavowed and the care of Italian interests put in the hands of the British Minister. Great Britain's policy in the Far East has been somewhat devious during the past year and not easy to interpret, as set forth in the Chinese bluebook, recently published, and the meaning of this Italian episode is still more difficult to determine. Either Italy is a new member of a combination organized by Great Britain to check Russia in the Orient, or else this demand for the cession of San Mun is simply another step toward the ultimate dismemberment of the empire. In the latter case, Great Britain's approval would seem to indicate that she despairs of realizing the "open door" scheme and is willing that the partition of China should proceed.

A new national political party may be about to be organized. A circular has been sent out by a committee, of which Gov. Pingree is chairman, calling a "National, Social and Political Conference," to meet at Buffalo, June 28 to July 4. The purpose is set forth only in general terms in the circular, as being "to consider the present condition of American politics and economics and what is the next thing to do. We are in the midst of important changes in political issues and parties and industrial conditions, and it is felt that a frank and friendly interchange of opinion on the part of thoughtful and serious men may lead to united effort and efficient in important directions." This may not mean the launching of a new party, or it may. At any rate it means emphasis upon new issues, and that is something much needed. Expansion ought not to be made a party issue, free silver can scarcely be and the slight justification which there may once have been for dragging the tariff into party politics has long since ceased to exist. We need new issues. If that involves new parties, then we need new parties. The seventy-one members of the committee which calls this conference are for the most part men of national reputation, whose names inspire respect. They include senators, congressmen, governors, judges, preachers, professors, editors, social reformers and labor leaders, with a few cranks interspersed in the several classes, but not many.

AMERICANISM AND ECCLESIASTICISM.

An article in the Outlook of the 11th inst., on "Americanism Versus Catholicism," by Victor Charbonnel, an ex-Catholic priest and Professor of Rhetoric in the free college of Meaux, France, throws a great deal of light on the recent controversy between the American party in the Roman Catholic Church and the Romish party, resulting in the Pope's late letter on the subject. The movement among Catholics known as "Americanism" had its origin five or six years ago, according to this writer, and is steadily growing in importance. Cardinal Gibbons' discourse on "The Church and Democracy," delivered at Rome, and some lectures of Monsignor Ireland in Paris, awakened great interest among the more liberal class of European Catholics. Then the action of these two American prelates in reference to the "Parliament of Religions" gave great hope to the class of priests in Europe to which Father Charbonnel belonged. He says:

"What joy it was for us, towards the close of 1893, to learn in what spirit of generous tolerance the Catholics of America, courageously directed in this course by Cardinal Gibbons and Monsignor Ireland, had agreed to send delegates to the Parliament of Religions! The young church beyond the seas was leading the old European Church into new paths. This seemed to promise an evolution which might become fundamental. For many ideas had been expressed at Chicago, many tendencies indicated in regard to the respect due to sincere consciences, to the conciliation and the peace of souls, to the acceptance of a common liberty for all denominations and religious sects, and in reference to what might be called the social utilization of faiths."

Encouraged by this action an agitation was begun in Europe for a Congress of Religions to be held in some European country. This was frowned upon by the ecclesiastical authorities as an effort to "Americanize" the church. Whereupon, Charbonnel left the Roman Church, seeing he could not serve the church and God at the same time. The "Life of Father Hecker," founder of the Paulist Order, with an introduction by Ireland, and later a letter of approval by Gibbons, added fuel to the controversy. It was not the book itself that caused the commotion, but the significance attached to it by these two distinguished American Catholics. Henceforth "Americanism" became a living issue in the church which receives its orders from Rome. Father Charbonnel defines the meaning of "Americanism" in this controversy as follows: "Less subjection to external institutions and ecclesiastical authority, more internal force and individual liberty." Monsignor Ireland's introduction to the "Life of Father Hecker" is summed up thus:

"The mechanicism of external institutions must not be permitted to subject the different nations of the world, nor successive generations, to one uniform and depressing discipline. On the contrary, men capable of religious action must, like Hecker, take into account the needs and aspirations of each nation, each generation. The conscience of races, individuals, the various epochs of humanity, and its inner power, must be respected. And may the church never exercise its apostolic functions without respecting that conscience!"

As to the kind of men arrayed on the two sides of this new issue in the Roman Church, ex-Father Charbonnel says: "In the ranks of Americanism are the imposing figures of men of action, intellectual and moral authority, vigor, enthusiasm, youth. On the side of the adversaries of 'Americanism' are to be found the Jesuits of every order and every sort; the domineering, the uncompromising, the conservatives of tradition, routine and old lumber." It ought not to take a prophet to foretell what the issue of such a contest must be. It is always safe to predict the ultimate triumph of "intellectual and moral authority" over dogmatism and devotion to outgrown traditions and doctrines, even though the Pope and all the ecclesiastical machinery be on the side of the latter.

It is really refreshing to know that such an issue has been made in the Roman Catholic Church. Our sympathies are with the liberal prelates in this contest, and we believe that every schoolhouse, and every other agency for disseminating information, is on their side. As to the result of this agitation, hear another Roman Catholic, Abbe Klein, author of Father Hecker's "Life:"

"Does no one see that the clearest result of all these maneuvers against 'Americanism' will be to furnish a pretext for the easy objections of Protestantism and stop the progress of conversion to Catholicism now going on in all the Saxon world? Is it not enough that we lost the East in the ninth century by the schism of Photius, and half the West in the sixteenth through Protestantism, and in the last two centuries the half of what was left us among Latin nations through unbelief and indifference? After having tried in this country [France] to make people believe that the progress of science and civilization is incompatible with Catholicism, are we going to undertake the mad task of making men in other countries believe that it will never be able to harmonize with the free genius of a race controlling half the globe?"

All of which is exceedingly interesting to Protestants and to every one interested in the current movements of the time. If the outcome of it all is to be what Charbonnel predicts, "separation from the Roman Catholic Church," on the part of all who cherish and defend "free consciences and an inner life," we can only say, with him, "Let things, therefore, take their course."

IS OUR CIVILIZATION HEDONIC.

The first man to formulate the animal conception of existence, known as Hedonism, into a philosophy, was Aristippus, a disciple of Socrates. He taught that pleasure was the summum bonum and the end of life, and that it was the duty of a wise man to enjoy pleasure without being controlled by it. This control was to be acquired by knowledge and culture. Epecurus, another philosophic voluptuary, the lineal descendant and successor of Aristippus, taught the same view; but while the masters were careful to add that a wise man should enjoy pleasure with out being controlled by it, the rank and file of their disciples, not being wise men, forgot the qualifying clause and practiced the doctrine that there was nothing better for man than to eat and drink.

If this is not the philosophy, it has always been the practical belief of the majority of mankind. Man lives, if he can, for the indulgence of his senses, for the gaatification of his flesh, for animal enjoyment and amusement. We know of but one world, says the Hedonist, and let us make the most of that. Work if we must, he says, but play if you can. If he preaches it is always from one text: "The people sat down to eat and drink and rose up to play." The sermon is agnostic as to the existence and claims of a spiritual world and the higher nature of man. Man, he informs us, may be an angel, he may be a god, he may bc a devil, and he may be a mixture of all three; but we know he is an animal; turn him loose, as far as you dare. Eat, drink and be merry, for to-morrow you die. There may be a God, and there may be a devil; there may be a heaven and there may be a hell, and there may be neither; but we know there is a present life, says this pagan Hedonist, and that is all we do know, and knowing this let us adopt for our motto the declaration of a German socialist: "This world is my paradise, and in it I will revel and not rot." He began with that and ended with this: "This world is my paradise, and in it I will revel and rot." Abingdon Baird, the "Jubilee Plunger" when he was 21 years of age and came into possession of ten million dollars, adopted the motto of the German socialist, and when at the age of thirty it was all gone and he died a horrible death from the effects of debauchery and dissipation—which was the truer description of his life?

There are multitudes of people on the same plane of existence, in varying degrees of excess and moderation, many of them educated and apparently refined. They belong to the sporting category that looks chiefly to the animal side of life for its pleasures. A few years ago when the writer was spending a few days in London, he went with his wife to Highgate Cemetery to see the tombs of some of the great people buried there. We met a well-dressed young Englishman to whom I said, "Can you direct us to the tomb of Coleridge, Samuel Taylor Coleridge, poet, philosopher and man of letters?" Didn't think he was buried there. "Can you tell us where Michael Faraday, the scientist, is buried?" said I. He may have heard of science, but it was clear that he had never heard of the scientist Faraday. "Are we not in the immediate neighborhood of the tomb of Mrs. Henry Wood, the novelist?" I further inquired. He did not know that such a person had ever lived, and when, to relieve the situation, I was about to express the opinion that the graves of George Elliot and George Henry Lewes were in that part of the old graveyard lying in the direction of the city, he interrupted me by saying, "But I can tell you where Tom Sayer is buried." "Come," he continued, "and I will show you Tom's grave and the marble statue of his big dog." We followed him along a winding path through a wilderness of marble slabs till we came to the spot that held the dust of the great pugilist. There was the tomb and the marble form of the faithful dog lying upon it in a posture of peaceful repose. "Ah," said John Bull, Jr., with a sparkle of enthusiasm in his eye, "Tom would have whipped Henan if he hadn't got his arm broke." We had dragged ourselves on a warm summer day all the way across the city of London to see the graves of some of England's illustrious dead; we were thinking of poets, scientists, novelists, historians and philosophers, but this fellow was thinking of prize-fighters and dogs! This is Hedonism on the underside. The Prince of Wales is the Prince of Hedonists. He spends his days at the races and his nights at Baccara. More than two billions of prayers have been offered for him in the EstablishedChurch alone, and he is no nearer the kingdom of God than he was forty years ago.

If you had made general and promiscuous inquiry after the health of Rudyard Kipling during his recent illness, about nine American citizens out of ten would have stared at you and said, "Who is Rudyard Kipling?" but everybody knows Jim Corbett, Bob Fitzsimmons and Nancy Hanks! Our newspapers devote more space to prize-fighting and horse racing than to any other subject, and politicians rely on the strong arm of free whisky in the election of men to make and execute our laws. On the higher intellectual plane minor poets and novelists begin with a smile of Hedonism, believing that life is all pleasure and end with a pessimistic howl in the profound conviction that life is all pain. It is significant that those who began by making everything of this life end by making nothing of it. The Hedonism that beguiles youth is the pessimism that destroys the hope of age. If there is no outlook for humanity beyond the boundry line of the present existence, there is nothing for man to do but to consecrate himself on this brief span of physical life and make the most of that in whatever direction his inclinations may lead him. To such a goal does materialism and Mammonism lead us. The only salvation for a civilization based largely on the lust and pleasures of youth and the despair of age is the religion of Jesus Christ that calls us to the recognition of God, duty and immortality.

Hour of Prayer.

GRATITUDE FOR A RISEN SAVIOR AND WHAT IT INSPIRES.

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, March 29, 1899.)

(1 Cor. 15:14-22; 51-58.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: In Christ's resurrection our faith is confirmed, our salvation assured, our hope in the life hereafter established, and we are placed under highest obligations to devote ourselves unreservedly to the work of the Lord.

The lesson deals with the fundamental fact of the gospel, namely, the resurrection of Christ from the dead. We are reminded that if that be not a fact, then those who preach Christ are false witnesses, our faith is vain, we are yet in our sins, and those who have fallen asleep in Christ, instead of entering upon a new and higher life, have perished. For it is clear that if Christ be not risen from the dead there is no such thing as resurrection and the life beyond. How much then, indeed, all that makes life worth living, would be taken away from us if this great fact were overthrown.

But the apostle turns away from this awful hypothesis to affirm, with the confidence born of personal conviction on personal evidence, that "now hath Christ been raised from the dead, the first fruits of them that are asleep" (v. 20). Paul had seen Him after His resurrection, so also had Peter and the twelve, and at one time He was seen by "over five hundred brethren at once, of whom the greater part remain until now." His resurrection as the first fruits is the pledge of the full harvest of redeemed humanity. "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection from the dead" (v. 21). Through Adam came death, through Christ came resurrection from the dead. Blessed be His name forever and ever!

And so, the apostle, looking at the future in the light of the open sepulchre at Jerusalem, is able to anticipate the time when it shall be said: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the power of sin is the law; but thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (vs. 55-57). This is the meaning, the outcome, of Christ's resurrection.

No wonder the apostle closes this great chapter on the resurrection by this exhortation: "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not vain in the Lord." This is the practical conclusion to which our faith in the resurrection of Christ leads us. No man ought to live the same life that he once lived after this great fact comes into his soul through faith. Life has a new meaning and purpose. Henceforward we are to live under "the power of the world to come" and make the life that now is a fit prelude of that immortal life that lies beyond the veil.

PRAYER.

O God, our Father, we thank Thee for the vindication which Thou hast given in Thy dearly beloved Son, in that He hath been raised from the dead and crowned with the power of an endless life. We thank Thee that through his death Thou hast made a way for our salvation, and through his resurrection Thou has given us assurance of the reality of the spiritual world and the life beyond. In view of these great facts we beseech Thee to help us to devote ourselves more wholly to the work of the Lord, knowing that our labor is not vain in the Lord. For His name's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

When Diogenes, the Grecian philosopher, found the solution of a much-studied problem, while in his bath, and rushed on the streets exclaiming, "Eureka! eureka!" he had no thought of furnishing a name for so many towns, and so many other discoveries. It was natural that when the curative properties of these mountain springs in Northern Arkansas became known that they should be called "Eureka" Springs for they seemed to be then, and time has proved them to be, a happy solution of the problem raised by many of the ills to which flesh is heir. It seemed like a mere accident that while a hunter was seeking to dislodge his game from a bluff in these wilds, his boy, who was afflicted with sore eyes, should have bathed them in the stream that ran from beneath the bluff, and received such marked relief as to attract the attention of of others. But who knows what is an accident, or whether there be any such thing as an accident, in a proper view of God's providence?

It is not easy to believe that these sparkling springs with their health-giving qualities were placed in these mountains where the air is pure, and the climate mild, by mere accident. Nature, that is to say, God, has provided here a sanitarium and health resort, and if so, the events leading to its discovery may well be regarded as providential. The town has long since passed its experimental stage, as also the stage of excitement and speculation, and has settled down to legitimate business. The people here belong, in the main, to two classes: those who are here for their health, and those who are here to supply the demands of health-seekers. "Furnished Rooms for Rent," and "Boarding," are signs that one sees constantly. It is fortunate that one can live here very cheaply, if it be necessary, while those who desire first-class accommodations can find them at the leading hotels. The season proper is only just opening as yet. While at the "Magnetic" Spring, yesterday—one of the numerous cluster of springs here—we met a gentleman from New York, who had come all the way here to enjoy these waters. Most of the people here now are from the region north of this. Later in the season people from the South predominate.

"Christian Cottage!" That is a good name, suggestive of peace and restful ness. It is not misplaced when applied to our quarters. The cottage—a three-story frame, backing up against the eastern side of a steep bluff, or hill, so that one can step from the roof on terra firma without going down — faces the east and south, with porches all around, catching the morning and afternoon sun, where one can take a sun-bath at almost any hour of the day. The panorama of hills and mountains beyond the valley, eastward, forms a pleasing change for eyes accustomed to look out upon rows of brick or stone houses and granitoid sidewalks. If anything were needed to make the situation well-nigh ideal, it is supplied in the grace and good cheer of host and hostess, widely known among the Disciples of Christ, especially the latter, who, as national organizer for our C. W. B. M., has come in contact with many of our churches and people. Bro. C. is more widely known in temperance circles as a prohibition advocate. Thus, surrounded by missionary and temperance influences, our readers may feel easy as to our safety!

Reclining to-day upon the south side of one of these tall hills that sentinel these springs, on a carpet of last year's leaves, we felt ourselves a part of nature. The birds came close to us and twittered, unmindful of our presence. The pines sang their monody as the breeze played with their boughs. Looking out upon this scene we thought of a story a friend told us the other day about Henry Ward Beecher. The great Brooklyn preacher was spending a few days one autumn in the Catskill Mountains. A man who was lost heard some one walking on the mountain side below him, and standing still, he watched to see who or what it was. He soon discovered it was Mr. Beecher with his arms full of bright autumn leaves. He laid them down, and then laid himself down and drank at a spring that gurgled from the side of the mountain. Raising himself up and looking at the scene of beauty, he lifted his hands heavenward and began to talk to his Heavenly Father, thanking Him for all the glory and grandeur with which he had clothed the earth, and for all His tender mercies to the children of men. The man stood awe-struck, and though not a religious man, he felt he stood on holy ground. When he had finished his prayer, he regathered his leaves up in his arms and went on his way. The lost stranger managed to intercept him a little further on, and inquired his way. Mr. Beecher walked a distance with him to show him the right way, talking all the time about the wonderful beauty and glory of the autumnal woods. The man, who afterward relates this episode, said he left Mr. Beecher with a new conception of religion. We esteem Mr. Beecher more highly because of this incident.

Why this change of base from the city to these mountain springs? A little surcease from the routine duties of office work, a measure of rest, the pure mountain air, the tonic influence of these waters, a change of scenery and situation, a closer view of the works of God in nature, more sunshine and outdoor exercise—these are some of the things we came here in quest of, and we feel sure our numerous correspondents will co-operate with us in securing these ends by allowing their letters to wait for answer a little while.

The Religious World.

The Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church was held in this city last week. The sessions were generally well attended and full of animation. Handsome presents were presented to three retiring presiding elders. The reports from the presiding elders were generally optimistic. Progress was reported in the extension of Methodism throughout the state. Some of the themes up for discussion were "A Mutual Fire Insurance Association for Churches," "the Deaconess Work" and missionary work. The report of the "Book Concern," West and East, was very encouraging. Their combined sales last year amounted to $2,000,000. Over half of this amount, however, was made by the Western house. The largest amount of profit has been made in the St. Louis house. From the founding of the general Methodist Book Concern it has distributed $70,000,000 in cash. It has given away $5,000,000 in dividends to the preachers. A resolution introduced by Dr. T. H. Hagerty concerning the Sunday-closing law was passed unanimously and sent at once to the State Legislature.

In an article in a recent number of the Outlook, from George Kennan, on the regeneration of Cuba, the following account of a flourishing mission appears. This information is of value in the light of the statements by Catholic bishops against the introduction of Protestant missions in Cuba and other Catholic countries, on the ground that they could not be made a success. It is also encouraging testimony in favor of the speedy evangelization of those islands by evangelical Christianity. The mission spoken of in the following paragraphs is in Santiago:

Two or three nights ago, as I was strolling up Enramadas Street, on my way to the plaza, my attention was attracted to a large private house from whose open doors and windows came the blended voices of two or three hundred people singing the familiar Sunday-school hymn, "What a Friend we have in Jesus!" Upon crossing the street and making an investigation, I discovered that the music came from a mission church which had been established here by the Southern Board of Foreign Missions, as long ago as September, 1898, under the direction and pastorate of the Rev. Jose R. O'Halloran. The parlors of the house, which had a seating capacity of about two hundred and fifty, were filled to overflowing by a congregation of neatly dressed men, women and children, and there were groups of interested listeners around the doors and on the opposite side of the narrow street.

At the close of the service, when I was able to make further inquiries, I learned that there was not room in the house for half the people who wished to attend; that the church had received 140 members by baptism since the 30th of September; that it supported a Sunday-school with 146 and a free day-school with 148 pupils, and that its work might be greatly extended if a larger building could be found.

So far as I know, that is the first and only mission church established by a Protestant denomination in this province; and the Southern Baptist Board deserves great credit for its quickness in seeing and its promptness in occupying a field where so much good may be done. All that I have seen of the Roman Catholic Church in eastern Cuba, and of the generally apathetic attitude of the population—particularly the men—toward it, leads me to believe that the Protestant churches of the United States are destined to play an important part in the moral training and enlightenment of this people.

Archbishop Ireland is now placed in an embarrassing situation before the world. He is the author of the preface of a book called the "Life of Father Hecker," in which he endorses the views and doctrines of the book. This book is now condemned by the Pope on account of its liberal inclinations toward American ideas. This preface commits Archbishop Ireland to the liberal views of Father Hecker and the Pope's condemnation of the book puts him out of joint with the papacy and orthodox Catholic doctrines. It is hinted in a Catholic journal that one object of Archbishop Ireland's trip to Rome this winter was to prevent the Pope from issuing this letter, but he failed. And now to recant his liberal sayings about America will put him in an unfavorable light at home, and to go on in his liberalities is forbidden. What he will do in the matter or what will be done with him remains to be seen.

The first detachment of Russian doukhobors reached Halifax, N. S., Jan. 20th, en route for the Canadian Northwest. This detachment, numbering about 2,300 men, women and children, came over in the ship Lake Huron and are said to be the largest cargo of emigrants ever landed at an American seaport. They were 29 days on the ocean and were pronounced free from any serious sickness on their arrival at Halifax. A Quaker from Philadelphia named Elkinton raised an invocation to providence for the safe voyage of the doukhobors and prayed that the blessing of the Almighty might accompany the new colonists in the land of freedom, whose shores they sought.

The Interior says that a leading Methodist Church in Chicago has adopted the flowing black gown as a choir vestment. This is quite a departure from the former boasts of Methodist simplicity.

Current Religious Thought

The following timely words are from a report of a recent lecture delivered in this city by Father Brown, for the poor, published in the Church Progress:

There is no use in blinding ourselves to the fact that cold, heartless Dives is in our midst. He is, and his number is increasing. Greed is proving itself to-day what it has never failed to be, a menace and a curse. What are we to oppose to this condition? Legislation? Yes, it can do much, but it cannot reform. It cannot reach the source of evil. It cannot enter the black heart of Dives and fill the aching void that is there. It cannot give man back his God, and until that is done, selfishness will never be stifled. Nothing can do this but the religion of Jesus Christ. We are badly in need of a Christianity that displays itself, not in the Sunday hymn or the lugubrious countenance, but in the justice and fairness of everyday life. Give us a Christianity that is a friend of the poor, because the relentless enemy of oppression; give us a Christianity that will destroy the widespread official corruption, and our people will embrace it and save themselves and the state. It is our solemn duty as Catholics to be enthusiastic members of our church, showing by the honesty and justice of our lives that the safety of our country must be looked for in the teachings of Jesus Christ.

The Religious Review of Reviews for January contains a warning against idolatry from the Archbishop of Canterbury in his recent visitation that is well worthy of wide publication in the religious world. We reprint below a part of the Archbishop's address:

The true purpose of religious observances is to sanctify the life by bringing it nearer to God, and if the life be not really holier, religious observances are of little value. But, besides this, the perpetual tendency of depending, not on God's grace, but on the help of his creatures, is to weaken the sense of duty of our own vigorous exertions in the spiritual conflict. We look for God's help in the form of added grace. The help will be within and not merely without. He inspires, he inwardly strengthens; and he calls us to the fight. His help is ennobling, elevating and sanctifying. The help that his creatures can give, if they can give any at all, is of necessity external. They cannot give grace, they cannot enter within us. In so far as we appeal to them we are asking for such help as man can give to man which, whether much or little, is not in itself a new power within the soul. There is a temptation to rely upon this outside help and to believe that if we can but get it we need not exert ourselves so much. And, lastly, which is more important than anything else, there is an ever-present danger of trenching on God's prerogative, and approaching if not committing idolatry, not, perhaps, breaking the Second Commandment, but breaking the First. Let it be granted that those who pray to the saints if they be properly instructed, do not worship them, but merely ask for their aid, just as we may ask a living man to give us his prayers. Yet the passage from asking an invisible being to help us is so dangerously near to putting such a being in a divine position that our church dare not and will not run the risk. There is nothing like such prayers in the Bible, and the Church of England will not permit them to her members. And for these reasons, and for other reasons like these, the Church of England has swept away all worship except the worship of God himself. No worship is allowed even to the mother of our Lord, the Blessed Virgin. No worship is allowed to any apostle, no invocation to any saint. And in order to guard against all approaches and temptations to breaches of this rule, even the appearance of such worship is forbidden.

The Literary Digest, quoting at considerable length a series of articles by Prof. Friedrich Paulsen, of Berlin, in the Christliche Welt, on the question, "Did Christ Use Irony?" gives several instances cited by Prof. Paulsen, two of which we give below:

A closer analysis of some of the discussions held between Jesus and his adversaries will show to what extent this is the case. The first meeting of the Master with the Pharisees is found in Matt. 9. Here the latter criticized Jesus for sitting at meat with the sinners. Christ heard this, and turning to them said: "Not the strong have need of a physician, but the weak." Without doubt this was uttered with the smile of irony, as though he would say: "Certainly, people of such robust moral health, of such absolutely correct habits of life as the Pharisees are, do not need me or any Savior; such people need no physician; but those people who sit with me at table actually do need me." And then, with his smile turning into an earnest expression, he added: "That they who know the law and justice should go and study what it means, that God desires mercy and not sacrifice."

The same smile of irony we find in connection with the story of the woman caught in adultery (John 8). Here again we see Jesus between the respectable and the non-respectable class, and siding with the latter. He addressed her accusers with the demand that he who is without sin should cast the first stone upon the woman. He would say, as it were, that he in his associations with the common people might not occupy the high level held by those who brought the woman; but ye, who are the correct and pure in character and conduct, do not allow yourself by my inability to apply the law to be prevented from doing that which the law both permits and commands. His irony silenced her accusers and his tempters.

In reply to frequent questions relating to Christian and Jewish baptisms, the Chicago Israelite, March 11th, contains the following interesting statements from I. M. Wise, son of Rabbi Wise, of Cincinnati, Ohio:

REV. J. H. HADEN—Dear Sir: December 30th you addressed to me a number of questions evidently under the impression that I am a New Testament student, but I am only a reader; hence I cannot criticise the various translations and variations. I can only tell you what I know from the ancient sources preserved in our libraries.

1. Tabilah, "baptism," from the Hebrew root, tabal, signifies everywhere "submersion," never "sprinkling," or the substitute of pouring nine quarts of water over the naked head and body, called in the laws nine kabbin bath.

2. Pharisees of old considered it a divine law to perform this baptisement, to wash the hands every morning (and face, too).

Before every meal.

Before every prayer (hence also after the meal before saying grace).

Bathing every new vessel used in cooking or on the table.

Bathing (submerging) in cold water every penitent sinner.

Bathing every proselyte.

Bathing after every sperm issue with man or woman.

In all these cases they have fixed a Berachah or benediction becoming the occasion. This proves that these washings and bathings are very ancient customs, as the name of God, as "JHVH our God, King of the world," is in every Berachah, and the Pharisees considered it a capital sin to pronounce the name of God in vain.

The bath every morning was taken only by persons of special and rigorous piety. This is also the case with the bath on the eve of the day of atonement, and washing the hands coming from the market. These men were called pedobaptists. The origin of all these washings and bathings was especially with a certain association called Haberim, the associates, most likely learned of the Essenes the exact date cannot be fixed. That these observances had become generally accepted among the largest class of the Hebrew people (which the Pharisees were) we learn from the Talmud, the New Testament and the earliest fathers of the church.

As sanitary measures and symbolic actions these observances are easily understood, especially in olden days and hot climates. But I can not understand why you suspect that these observances should have made the water very impure. We do the same bathing, washing, scrubbing and flushing now all over the civilized world, and the water is not very impure yet. You must understand that all these submergings had to be done in what they called "live water," i. e., water flowing in the river or flowing freely from the river or spring, and flowing off freely and by itself.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE FIRST MISSIOM FIELD.

B. B. TYLER.

The story of the organization of the American Christian Missionary Society is fresh in our minds as told by an eyewitness of and participant in the proceedings of the convention in which this mother missionary association was born.

The first question of importance to be decided was in regard to the definite field to be cultivated. This was a grave question. The selection was made with deliberation.

"The field is the world;" but what portion of this wide field ought we now to enter? This was the question. It was put in this sensible way: "What part of this extended field is now most important, and in the end will yield the largest and most satisfactory results?"

It was said that if immediate results are considered the Karens are those to whom we should go with the good news. If the largest single field is to be taken, and because it is the largest, then we ought to go to China. If ignorance and wretchedness are to decide this question, then we ought to go alone to those who are in idolatry. If contiguity is to be the controlling thought, the people with whom to begin our work are the North American Indians. "But the dictates of a discriminating judgment and sound policy plainly indicate," said a writer in the Christian Age, understood at the time to be Dr. James T. Barclay, "that our first efforts should be expended more in reference to permanent effect and extended influence in order to ultimate success than to immediate results, and hence our labors should be devoted to that nation which when evangelized will exert the most powerful and widespread influence."

This principle guided those in authority in the newly organized society in the selection of our first Foreign Mission field. This rule of action caused them to decide against going with the life-imparting message to the Chinese, the Karens, the North American Indians, the idolators of Africa and Polynesia. It also prevented the inauguration of an effort in behalf of what was called "the semi-Christianized nations of Europe," and the "isolated Japanese, although they never yet have heard the glad tidings of salvation." This was in 1849, ten years before the first Protestant missionaries reached that most interesting people.

"Permanent effort and extended influence" could not be seen in any of the directions here indicated. With their honest, earnest eyes fixed on what seemed, and seems, to be "a sound rule of action," the good men who had been elected to guide the infant society in its initial efforts said, after due consideration and with one voice: "The first offer of 'the ancient gospel' should be made to the ancient people of God—the sons and daughters of Abraham." Their evangelization, it was believed, promised "permanent effect and extended influence" beyond that of any other people.

It was also said that there has been a general neglect of the Jews on the part of the friends of missions. Notwithstanding this indifference on the part of Christians to the spiritual welfare of the children of Abraham and their apparent abandonment of God, it was believed that they are even now "beloved for their father's sake," and it was said that "no nation on earth presents so strong a claim on our consideration as this noble race—none for whose conversion such strong inducements are presented—none of whose recovery such glorious consequences are predicted." It was also said that "to no people on earth are we so indebted as to the Jews, and nothing less than a great missionary effort in their behalf can cancel the obligation resting upon us that 'through our mercy they may obtain mercy.'" "The evangelization of no people will promote the interests of Christianity to such a degree as will the evangelization of the Jews." "Were they once converted to Christianity, what a noble army of missionaries would their circumstances and natural endowments constitute them. Judah and Benjamin to the lapsed churches of Greece and Rome, within whose territories they are principally dispersed, and the other ten tribes to the Mohammedans and pagans among whom they are scattered." "They are an energetic people." "They hate idolatry." "They dwell in every nation under heaven." "There is no language nor speech where their voice is not heard." "In all that pertains to missionary qualifications no people in the world can compare with the children of Abraham." The signs of the times also seemed to be auspicious for a successful presentation of the gospel to this historic people. In the beginning of Christianity the missionaries of the Christ preached exclusively to this people for years. They continued, in fact, to do so until "they were at last specially summoned by the Holy Spirit to the work of Foreign Missions among the heathen." Even after this, wherever they went it was their custom to offer salvation first through the Christ to the Jews. Paul felt such an interest in the people of Israel that he expressed a willingness to be anathema from Christ for their sake. Can we, who plead for the restoration of apostolic Christianity remain indifferent to the spiritual welfare of these people and be innocent before God?

Moved by such considerations they decided to send "the ancient gospel" to the people of Israel.

The next question was as to the place in which to begin work.

It was known that multitudes of Jews resided in Salonica—the ancient Thessalonica. They were also numerous in Constantinople, in Smyrna and in other cities on the shores of the Mediterranean.

After considering the claims of various places in which the people whose evangelization had been determined upon lived in large numbers it was decided that "the Holy Land is the place where we should first establish a mission." It was regarded and spoken of as "the great center of sympathies" where "a blow struck" "would be felt much more sensibly than anywhere else." The land of Palestine seemed to be the strategic point in the evangelization of the Jews throughout the world.

The ultimate restoration of the Jews to this their ancient home was generally accepted as the teaching of the Bible. How appropriate, how wise, how truly Christian, previous to this event, to bring the Jews residing in the Holy Land into the fellowship of the Christ and into to the enjoyment of "the great salvation!"

At that time the Turkish Government, in control of Palestine, was believed to be favorable to the Christian religion. An enthusiastic advocate of the Holy Land as the place in which to begin work said that "twelve moons ago, apostasy from Islamism to Christianity was punished with death and confiscation; now," said he, "such encouragement is offered to Franks"—a term for Protestant Christians—"as almost to constitute a premium for Christianity." "The Crescent," he said, "truly is rapidly waning, and the Euphrates fast drying up."

It was thought that from Palestine as a base an effectual assault could be made on the religion of the Arabian Prophet. "The last sands of the prophetic period assigned to the Moslem Desolator are now running out." "The Little Horn of the East shall gore no more, and no more shall the desolating abomination practice and prosper!" It must, in candor, be confessed, that in connection with the foregoing apparently practical views there was a bit of sentiment.

Much was thought and spoken about what was called the "ancient gospel," and the place in which it was first preached.

"It is nothing to us," they exclaimed, "it is nothing to us that the fairest portion of the earth—the garden of the Lord, in whose fertile soil and genial clime grew the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley—whose pure apostolic Christianity once flourished in all its glory, is now in possession of the 'worst of the heathen.' Has not Jerusalem long enough been 'trodden down of the Gentiles?' Are the mercies of the Lord toward his once favored land and people clean gone forever? No, he is waiting to be gracious. How long shall it be, then, before the fountain again be opened to the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and uncleanness? Are the pools of Jerusalem and the waters of Jordan no more to be the emblematic grace of the penitent believer?"

THE WORD OF GOD.

D. S. HENKEL.

"God having of old time spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers portions and in divers manners, hath at the end of these days spoken unto us in his Son" (Heb. 1:1-2, Revised Version.)

"For the Word (Logos) of God is living and active, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, of both joints and marrow, and quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart, and there is no creature that is not manifest in his sight" (Heb. 4: 12,13, R. V.).

"Of his own will he brought us forth by the Word (Logos) of truth" (James 1:18, R. V.).

"In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God and the Word was God" (John 1:1, R. V.).

"And the Word became flesh and dwelt among us" (John 1:14, R. V.).

"Christ founded his church, not upon a book, a statement, a series of propositions, but upon himself. 'Jesus is the Christ' is the creed of Christianity." (F. D. Power, in "Our Plea as a Religious People.")

The object of this article is to show that there may be a distinction between a religion founded upon Christ and a religion founded upon a book, although that book be the Bible itself. In support of this proposition the above citations are made.

Many theological writers use the term Word to denote the Bible. It is contended that the Bible is the Word and that the Word is the Bible. It is also contended that the Word—the Bible—is the regenerating power used by God in the conversion of sinners. That as Christ said, "My words are spirit and they are life," he meant that after his ascension into heaven the Holy Spirit should dictate a book which, when written, should of itself be spirit and life—which should be the divine Word, possessing within itself regenerating and life-giving power. In support of this proposition dogmaticians rely upon the following texts: "It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Rom. 1:16). "For the Word of God is quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword" (Heb. 4:12). "Born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever" (1 Pet. 1:23). "Receive with meekness the engrafted Word, which is able to save your souls" (Jas. 1:21).

The term Word, as used in the foregoing texts, has no reference whatever to the Bible. The New Testament was not then written, and to have referred to it would have been without meaning to the readers or hearers of these declarations. These people had heard of the Word that was made flesh—of Him whose flesh had been given for the life of the world; they could and did understand that the name Word meant the Christ of God.

The writer of this article does not want to be understood as in the slightest degree questioning the divine inspiration of the sacred books of the Bible. The writers of the several books were undoubtedly inspired to enable them with perfect accuracy to describe and faithfully record the life, character and actual experiences of Christ and his followers. But that those men were inspired by God to write a book, which should become the foundation of a system of religion, this writer does not believe. Christ himself, and not a book, was and is the foundation of the Christian religion.

It is true that the Bible is the only guide we have to lead us to this religion of Christ. Without this book we should perhaps know nothing of Christ. But we have no right to substitute the book for the Christ. The technical and scriptural use of the term WORD in the New Testament is to denote the Christ of God.

The term Word occurs many times—more than two hundred and fifty times—in the New Testament, but it is never used to denote the Bible. Whenever sacred writings are referred to in the New Testament, they are denominated the Scriptures, and only the several books of the Old Testament were referred to. The New Testament had no existence as a writing at that time. Nearly thirty years elapsed after the ascension of our Lord before any of the books of the New Testament were written. The Gospel of John was not written until sixty years after the ascension of Christ. Of the four Gospels one was in Rome, one in Southern Italy, one in Palestine and one in Asia Minor. There were twenty-one letters; five were in Greece and Macedonia, five in Asia, one in Rome. The rest were in possession of private individuals. Theophilus had the Acts. These books or writings were not compiled into a single volume until after more than a hundred years had elapsed. In the third century the New Testament consisted of the four Gospels, Acts, thirteen letters of Paul, 1 John, 1 Peter and the epistles of Barnabas and Hermas. Later on these two last epistles were rejected and others substituted. The Book of Revelation was not received as of divine authority until the sacred canon was closed in the fourth century. Previous to this the Word was preached and thousands of men and women were converted to the religion of Christ. To preach the Word was to preach Christ. Paul instructed his son Timothy to preach the Word. He could not have referred to a written Word, but to Christ the living Word. At that time the written Word had no existence. In the same letter Paul admonished Timothy to 'give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed, handling aright the Word of truth. (Revised Version. The Greek for Word is Logos.) There could not have been any reference to a division of sacred writings. They did not then exist, at least the New Testament did not exist, in written form. The confession of Peter, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," was the central truth in every sermon. This confession opened the way into the heart for the incoming Christ. This same Christ was the divine Word, the divine seed, the incorruptible seed, that germinated into the new life from above. Christ himself and not the written book is the fountain of all spiritual life. The written book is the channel through which this life is received. A wire connected with a dynamo is the channel through which electrical power is communicated to the trolley car, but the wire is not the power; so, too, the Bible is the channel through which we receive power to become the sons of God, but the Bible is not that power; Christ is that power. Christ is the seed of God. In the parable of the sower (see Luke 8:11), our Lord says, "The seed is the Word of God." The term Word here denotes the Christ. At that time no other word could have been referred to. Paul in his letter to the Galatians, chapter 3, verse 16, calls Christ the seed. (See also verse 19.) Men are then made Christians by the implanted Word—the implanted Christ. "He that hath the Son hath the life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life" (1 John 5:12). Christ in the heart, the hope of glory (Col. 1:27) was the great doctrine revealed to and taught by the Apostle Paul. "My little children, of whom I am again in travail until Christ be found in you." The first man Adam became a living soul. The last Adam became a life-giving Spirit. "When Christ who is our life shall be manifested," "I have been crucified with Christ; yet I live, and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me." The life-giving power is Christ. He is the life. This life has never been transferred to any writing or book. If it be predicated of the Word that it gives life, Christ is that Word. If it be said that the truth makes us free, Christ is the truth. Christ is the Word, the truth, the life. If the study of the Bible brings men to Christ, puts Christ in the heart, then it becomes the means used by him for saving the soul. If the study of the Bible only makes scholastics and theologians, then it were as well to study the Alcoran as the Bible.

There are many men who, for valuable consideration, are preaching the Bible, but scarcely ever mention the Word that was made flesh. They can see God in the rocks, the fishes, the birds, the streams, the mountains and in the firmament, but they rarely speak of him as seen in the manger, in the streets, at the sea of Galilee and on the slopes of Golgotha. They preach a system of religion made up of approved doctrines, dogmas and tenets of faith, drawn as inferences from the Bible, but a religion that means a personal acceptance of the divine Word, the Word who was born of a woman, the Word who was crucified, the Word who laid down his life that he might impart to all who would by faith accept him, is considered too mysterious for practical teaching and too idealistic to be received. Hence this WORD is only referred to as an absent Savior who has ascended into heaven and left only an inspired book from which we may learn what he has done for us and what we may do in order to get to heaven when we die.

"ONE OF JOHN SMITH'S SERMONS."

W. G. SURBER.

I am the owner of a small notebook, presented to me by Sister Ringo, a daughter of John Smith, when I first came to Mexico, Mo., nearly thirty years ago. The book contains notes on seven sermons preached in Georgetown, Ky., in April and May, 1852, besides "mottoes" or texts of many others, and references to the Scriptures quoted in elucidating his subjects. The notes are written in his own hand. Notes on the following subjects are contained in the book:

"Utility of the general judgment" (Matt. 25:31).

"The law of the Spirit, or the law of pardon" (Rom. 8:2).

"The difference between merit and the measure of enjoyment" (text not given).

"Experimental or heartfelt religion" (Eph. 3:14 to close).

"The connection between the meritorious sufferings of Jesus Christ and all the ordinances and commandments of the New Testament" (Jno. 12:48, 49, 50; Deut. 18:18).

"The difference between the means by which religion was established and the means by which it is to be perpetuated in the world" (1 Cor. 13:1 to close).

"Blasphemy against the holy spirit" (Matt. 12:31, 32).

I herein copy the notes of one of these sermons which is a fair sample of them all:

"On the first Sunday in May, 1852, my topic was, the connection between the meritorious sufferings of Jesus Christ and all the ordinances and commandments of the New Testament. My text was John 12:48, 49, 50; and Deut. 18:18. I first showed that the name of Jesus Christ includes all that he is as the Son of Mary and the Son of God. It also includes all that he did and all that he suffered —his death upon the cross, his burial in Joseph's tomb, his resurrection from the dead, his ascension to his Father's throne and his intercession in heaven.

"This I proved by showing that for his name the disciples suffered (Matt. 24:9). In his name they met together for worship (Matt. 18:20). They forsook all for his name (Matt. 19:29). Paul was commanded to bear his name before the Gentiles, etc. (Acts 9:15). His name was lawfully called upon all the Gentiles and all others who did lawfully seek after him (Acts 15:17). They cast out devils in his name and in his name performed all the miracles which they had wrought (Mark 16:17). They baptized in his name (Acts 10: 48). They held fast his name (Rev. 2:13). They would not deny his name (Rev. 3:8). Salvation is in his name (Acts 4:12). They preached remission of sins in his name (Luke 24:27). Believers had the promise of remission of sins through his name (Acts 10:43)."

The reader of even these brief notes will be impressed with the fact, as I have been that John Smith was a gospel preacher. He was set for the defense of the name of Jesus, as were all the pioneers of this great movement for the restoration of primitive Christianity. They, like Paul in Corinth, were determined to know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified for salvation. And in this is found their marvelous success in winning souls to Christ.

WHAT THE TRUTH CAN DO.

W. O. MOORE.

Then said Jesus to those Jews that believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.—John 8:31, 32.

It was by hearing the truth that they were regenerated. The Apostle Peter said, "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with pure hearts fervently." If they continued in his word they would be his disciples indeed. They would not be his disciples by profession merely. They would be his disciples in all that it is possible for the term disciple to mean. If they continued in his word they would be made free in the fullest and best sense.

1. They would be made free from ignorance. They would have a knowledge of Christ and of all that is necessary to be known in order to blessedness here and in eternity.

2. They would be free from faith that destroys. The infidel has a faith that is not of God. His faith comes from hearing and seeing what is false. Very many ungodly men are infidels. They have a faith that says, "The church is needless. It is not necessary to be a Christian." The truth when properly received can free one from such a faith.

3. They would not only be free from a false faith, but would be free from weakness with respect to the true faith. They would be grounded and settled in the faith. They would be strong in the faith.

4. They would be free from love that destroys. They would be free from the love of darkness, the love of sin, and all improper fellowships. They would abound in love for Christ.

5. They would be free from the hatred that destroys. Many hate what is pure. Many hate those who labor to suppress sin and evil places. They do not like those who seek to destroy the saloon and other bad places. Many hate their enemies. Those made free by the truth will abound in the right kind of hatred. They will hate iniquity.

6. Those made free by the truth are free from joys that destroy. They rejoice not in iniquity. They rejoice not in what can work ill to another and themselves. They rejoice in no disposition to avoid labor in the Lord. They are ready to toil and to endure trials for his name's sake.

7. Those made free by the truth are free from sorrows that destroy. Some sorrows work death. Those whom the truth has made free in the fullest sense will have sorrow for those in heathen darkness, for those about them who are in sin, and for their enemies. They will be free from sorrow that many have when they see their idols perish or their false ambitions not satisfied.

8. Those made free by the truth are free from improper contentments and discontentments. Many are in the way that leads to death. They are contented. They are satisfied with the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye and the pride of life. Those made free by the truth are satisfied with godliness and the contentment it yields. Many church members are discontented to be church members because of duties they are called to perform. They are contented to do little for Christ. The way to be free from discontentment which is not of God is to seek the truth more and more and its blessed Spirit. Many who are without God and without hope in Christ are discontented with their condition. This discontentment is the result of the influence of the truth on the heart. This discontentment should abound. It should cause them to come to Christ and be his true disciples.

9. They who possess the truth and make proper use of it are free from doubts with respect to the gaining of heaven. They know that they are in the right way.

But love bridges over the chasm between human souls, and makes it—if more blessed to give than to receive—still a blessing to receive, for under the law of love, both giving and receiving are directed by a wisdom born of loving thought and care. This is the lesson which we must learn over and over again, coming back continually to the point of view of Christ.—Social Law of Service.

ANOTHER UNITY.

GEORGE DARSIE.

"One Lord, one faith, one baptism," we have long emphasized, and the other "unities" that go with them. A religious body cannot have too many, provided, of course, they are of the right sort. The more it has, the more completely will it be one. And appreciating this fact all will rejoice at the recent acquisition of "another unity" in the shape of a list of Uniform Prayer-meeting Topics.

I am glad to learn from many sources of their widespread adoption and of the universal satisfaction they give. All of us have enough of the soldier in us, specially in military times like these, to enjoy "keeping step" with our great brotherhood. It is a thrilling thought that all over the land our prayer-meetings are pitched to the same keynote. That if a traveling brother from Cincinnati, or Denver, or San Francisco "happens in" on prayer-meeting night at one of our St. Louis churches, he needs but consult the schedule in his pocket to know beforehand the topic that will localize the prayers, songs and talks of the meeting. To know this gives him a home feeling to start with, and will go far to draw from him a ripe thought or two for its interest. And the more so if he has happened on one of our religious weeklies in his wanderings and has seen its suggestive articles along the same line.

Our prayer-meetings already feel the inspiration of having a common topic, and will feel it yet more and more as the custom grows and our churches everywhere fall into line. A new meaning will come to the old hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds," as we realize that more than "our fears, our hopes, our aims are one, our comforts and our cares." We will be reading the same Scriptures, singing the same songs, offering the same prayers and cherishing the same spiritual longings and aspirations. It will be indeed a tie that binds.

And when at the first meeting in each month we have our concert of prayer for missions, and the thought of our people is centered on the brave men and noble women who, in far-off lands, are giving their lives to redeem those who "sit in darkness," as well as on those who in our own land are out on the skirmish line doing and daring under the banner of our great Captain, new courage will come to those heroic toilers, and new zeal to our people in holding up their hands and speeding them on their way. I feel sure that a fresh impulse will be given the work of missions among us by this feature of our Uniform Topics, and that becoming and proportionate emphasis will thereby be laid upon all its phases, both at home and abroad.

Those preparing the topics for the present year, not making the claim of infallibility, freely consent that their work can be improved upon. A second year will doubtless see another set of topics still better, and each succeeding year will mark, let us hope, a continual improvement. The eagerness with which they have been welcomed is strong evidence that they have, therefore, come to stay. Wisdom suggests that we promptly adopt and use them, and do all we can to extend their blessing among us.

They do not, of course, rank with the "one Lord, one faith, one baptism" of the inspired Word, but there is good reason to believe that they will, nevertheless, prove "another unity" to cement the ties of brotherhood among us, that they will increase the spiritual profit of the weekly prayer-meeting, and in many ways promote our efficiency in doing the work of the Lord.

Our Budget.

—The church was made for missions.

—Missions are the salvation of the world.

—The offering for Home Missions comes next.

—The May-offering literature begins in this paper.

—One hundred thousand dollars are wanted for Home Missions this year.

—An unusual amount of church news will be found in this paper.

—We still have many letters and articles awaiting an opportunity to appear in our columns.

—Our issue next week will be our Easter number. We will appear in our new Easter cover.

—We do not understand why winter is being so frequently encored, unless for its successes over mercury when the battle was on.

—One of the most readable and enjoyable departments of our paper is that of J. B. Ellis, With the Children. Bro. Ellis knows just how to talk to children, and what pleases children, as a rule, pleases the grown-up folks. His article on "Children's Pets" in this paper is a genuine feast. The fascination of children for pets fairly sparkles in every word the writer puts into their hearts. No wonder the children want to join the Advance Society. If sermons were always as attractive and pleasing as these talks to children there would be no complaint about empty pews at the church services.

—The million-vote movement against the saloon mentioned in our columns some months ago seems to be making headway toward its goal. The plan is to get a million voters pledged to vote for the removal of the saloon from the land. The pledges are not to become operative until the million votes have been secured. If you are interested in this movement, send your name to 1119 The Temple, Chicago, Ill , where a book is kept for the enrollment of all such names. Address Walter J. Miller, as stated, for further particulars.

—Hon. John D. Long, president of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Union, and third vice-president of the American Anti-Saloon League, also Secretary of the Navy of the United States, has issued the following order:

After mature deliberation the department has decided that it is for the best interest of the service that the sale or issue to enlisted men of malt or other alcoholic liquors on board ships of the navy or within the limits of naval stations be prohibited.

Therefore, after the receipt of this order, commanding officers and commandants are forbidden to allow any malt or alcoholic liquor to be sold to or issued to enlisted men, either on board ship or within the limits of navy-yards, naval stations or marine barracks, except in the medical department.

We regret that the canteen was not put out of the army by a similar order from the commander-in-chief. We regret also that the congressional bill against the canteen was not as solid and sure as this order from the Secretary of the Navy.

—DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I enclose a penny that was given to me for a keepsake. Please lay it up in heaven for me by adding it to your missionary money for this our Jubilee Year. This mite and my prayers are all I have to give, as I am an invalid, a shut-in, and am very poor. So I hope you will accept and not despise my little offering, which is given through love for Jesus and my fellowbeings.

A SISTER.

All that we know about the above letter is what it says. We have forwarded the penny to the Foreign Missionary Society on the ground that the collections this month are for that society. We also add the prayer that this penny may be used of God to greatly increase the joys of its "shut-in" giver in this life and the inheritance of that one in the life to come. Let us not forget what Jesus said of the widow's mite.

—In voting $9,000 for a statue of Frances E. Willard for the National Hall of Statuary Illinois has not only conferred a justly earned honor upon one of earth's great and noble characters, but also an honor upon women. That the statue of a woman shall stand side by side with the great statesmen and warriors of the nation is a new thing in the world's history. It is an unexpected innovation upon the customs even of our own land, but a just one, and Illinois has done herself honor in leading the way. The National W. C. T. U., now more than 300,000 strong, not only rejoices in this honor conferred upon the founder of their order and indirectly upon their order, but also all lovers of purity, the home and of a sober life are likewise pleased. "It is right that Frances E. Willard should be allowed to stand among statesmen, warriors, patriots, philanthropists, for she was all of these."

—We have completed the introductory period of the Reformation of the 19th century, by Prof. Loos, with the exception of an article on "The Beginning," which he will supply at his leisure during the year. Prof. Loos has done faithful and conscientious work, and our readers have expressed their appreciation of his thoughtful articles. In this issue we begin Period II, from the organization of the American Christian Missionary Society until the outbreak of the Civil War, which will be treated by a member of our staff, Dr. B. B. Tyler. We trust our readers will continue to assist us in giving the widest publicity to this series of articles.

—We are informed by the Illinois Christian Citizenship League that a bill is before the Illinois Assembly which if passed would permit saloons in towns where the majority of voters are against them. It permits of a trick by which a majority of aldermen can be selected who are favorable to the saloon. The plan consists of a peculiar way of warding out the town. This shows how alert the enemy of righteousness is to his trade. Would that the good citizens of the country were more persistent in their demands for righteousness in all things and more determined that the saloon men shall not make laws in their favor nor ignore those on the side of righteousness and order. And especially do we hope that this particular bill above mentioned may be defeated in the legislature of the great state of Illinois.

—Huntsville will be the chief attraction of our people in this state this week. It is the Lectureship and Ministeral Association week, and thither will our thinkers gather; at least a goodly number of them. The program will bring them. The themes to be discussed are timely and our preachers want to give and receive the latest and best thought of the day on them. We regret that editorial duties prevents our presence there this week. We had hoped to be there for lo these many days, but the absence of a part of our force from this office precludes the anticipated feast. We shall, however, manage to secure a good report of both the Lectureship and the Association for our readers next week.

—I have just read your article in last CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST entitled, "Fellowship in in Service," and I want to thank you for it. It touches the heart of the matter, and throws light on the reason for the frequent changes in pastorates. C. E. POMEROY.

Marion, Kas., March 11, 1899.

—Three churches in this city will be in need of pastors by the first of April of this year. They are Beulah, the Fourth and the Second. As the board at each place is in correspondence with men for these pulpits it would be useless for preachers seeking new fields to apply for any of these places. J. H. Crutcher, of Sedalia, Mo., has about arranged to preach a part of his time for the Carondelet Christian Church and will move to this city. The pastor of the Compton Heights Church is now conducting a protracted meeting there. He is assisted by J. Q. McCanne, of the First Church, as singer. H. A. Northcutt will begin a protracted meeting at the Beulah Church, April first. F. G. Tyrrell is still at Cincinnati assisting A. M. Harvout in a protracted meeting. The Chicago papers are reporting that one of the Christian Churches of that city has extended a call to F. G. Tyrrell, this city, and that we are likely to lose him. We shall know more about this, however, when he returns from Cincinnati. In the meantime we are awaiting the Congress, to be held in this city next month, with growing anxiousness for the good things it will bring to our souls.

—The Christian Standard could not finally retire from its assault on the editor of this paper without repeating its absurd charge that the course of this paper in offering its columns for a symposium on the subject of Christian Endeavor was "disorderly." This is the most amazing fact in modern religious journalism. The spirit of "bossism" it manifests is simply intolerable. The brethren will have none of it. The Standard claims, too, that "the Board and the secretaries would aver, if necessary, that the Standard's position is well taken." Let the Board try the experiment, if it wish, of approving the course of the Standard. Let it assume the right to control the action of our religious journals, and condemn as "disorderly," the action of any paper that calls for an expression of opinion from the brotherhood on any matter connected with our public interests, and note the result. We predict the Board will take no such action. We are not a people that take kindly to any sort of ecclesiastic or (to coin word) boardistic dictation. The responses from scores of representative brethren in a dozen or more states are belittled by the Standard as "the effort of two or three men," playing the part of the "three tailors of Tooley Street." In a former editorial the Standard called the judgment of these brethren "an outside court," apparently forgetful of the fact that we called for an expression of judgment from the power that makes and unmakes boards—the people.

—The Standard still insists that "the convention left the election of Bro. Tyler, as well as the raising of his salary, to the Board." We simply appeal to the report unanimously approved by the convention. If that does not show that the convention endorsed Bro. Tyler for national superintendent and instructed the Board to provide his salary if it could see its way clear to do so, then we do not know the meaning of language. Suppose the Board had received the funds for such salary, would it have felt at liberty to have elected somebody else? If not, why not? The simple truth is, the editor of the Christian Standard is not in harmony with the wish and action of the Chattanooga Convention on the subject of the national superintendent. We find no fault with him for this, for he has a right to his opinion, but we do object to his seeking to carry out his opinion under cover of the convention.

—Now we have done on this subject, unless there is a disposition to establish a dangerous percedent by this officious interference with that freedom of action which freemen in Christ will never surrender.

—With these "few remarks," as the preachers say, assuming that we still have the liberty to shape our course, we shall proceed to help make the jubilee offering for Home Missions the largest by far in our history and one worthy of this Jubilee Year. We invite the Standard to a generous rivalry with us in this good work, and if it should see proper to have a symposium on the subject, we shall not object, even though we may not think the character of it the best suited to accomplish the end. We will use our methods, it will use its own, and other papers will use the same liberty, and all together, we will try to arouse the brotherhood to the greatness of the opportunity that is before us and to the demands of this jubilee occasion.

—Hon. A. W. Campbell, nephew of Alexander Campbell, died very suddenly at the home of his sister, Mrs. Jane C. Dawson, at Webster Groves, near this city, on the 13th of February last, in his 66th year. Mr. Campbell graduated from Bethany College in 1852, and afterwards traveled in the West as its financial agent. In 1856 he purchased the Wheeling Intelligencer, and devoted the remainder of his life to literary editorial work. He was a man of large abilities, warm-hearted, broad-minded and of wide acquaintance with the leading men of the nation, and was himself one of the foremost statesmen of West Virginia. His death was a shock to a host of friends throughout the state, and especially at Wheeling where he had so long resided.

—In our issue last week there appeared an article by Joel Brown, field agent for the Christian Orphans' Home, in this city, distinguishing between the work of this Home and that of the Home Finding Society. The distinction is clearly pointed out and important. We would also urge all schools that can to hold an Easter service for the benefit of the Orphans' Home, as requested in that article.

—It seems that the going to pieces of denominationalism in England is gaining headway rapidly of recent months. The Baptists are throwing the doors to their communion table open, and even receiving into membership persons from other churches on their baptism. The new Catechism, greatly abbreviated and more flexible, has been widely adopted, and now comes the information that there is a growing desire among the laity and ministers of the Church of England to baptize adults by immersion. Some of the rectors, it is said, have been borrowing the use of baptisteries from the Baptists, and others are putting baptisteries into their churches, declaring that they ought to return to the long-neglected practice. The parish church of Lambeth has built what is teachnically called a font grave. The baptistery, which is dedicated to the memory of Archbishop Benson, is to be lent to any clergyman who may apply. And thus it appears that in the disintegration of denominational walls there is a corresponding trend toward primitive Christianity, in some respects at least.

—The three Sundays of trial at closing the saloons of this city show that it can be done, but it also shows that it will require continued vigilance on the part of the citizens to keep them closed. The persistent efforts of many saloonkeepers at defying the law of the state reveals a condition of anarchy among saloonkeepers that is alarming. As a class they are not law-abiding men, and it will require severe treatment to give them a wholesome fear of the law. There ought, therefore, to be in every city in the state an organization whose duty it shall be to see that the law is enforced. We cannot depend upon popular meetings alone to fight this battle out with them. The people soon tire of mass meetings. There should be an organization with money at its command to employ watchers continuously for this work. Both the saloonkeepers and the policemen need watching in this matter, and there should be trusty, courageous men employed for this work until the law is established in every city and town in the state.

—The protracted meeting at the First Christian Church, of this city, in which J. Z. Tyler, of Cleveland, Ohio, assisted the pastor, F. O. Fannon, closed on Tuesday night of last week with a very delightful service. The entire meeting was a delight to the church. It was a school in which the Disciples of Christ were greatly advanced in their knowledge of the Bible, the kingdom of heaven and the spiritual and practical sides of the Christian religion. Bro. Tyler's sermons are remarkable for their simplicity, their grasp upon the vital things of this life, their biblical promises and logical conclusions. There is no question in Bro. Tyler's mind about the oracles of God as authority on conversion and vital union with Christ in the daily life. Unfortunately for Bro. Fannon, he contracted a cold that not only prevented his activities, but prevented his presence on the last night of the meeting. He had planned well for the meeting beforehand in all its essential departments and everything went well to the close, but his absence on the last night was deeply felt by the audience. He has, however, recovered and is at work again in his characteristic earnest way. The singing throughout the meeting was in charge of R. A. Boltz, one of the leading chorus leaders of the city, and was always an enjoyable, restful feature of each service. At the close of the meeting on Tuesday night an opportunity was given the audience to shake hands with Bro. Tyler and with one another, and this no one in the large company present failed to improve. There were 32 additions to the church during the meeting, chiefly by obedience.

—The report that the army canteen was finally wiped out by the late session of Congress will gratify a large element of the population throughout the entire country.

The above statement was made by a state journal published at Lincoln, Neb., and the correspondent sending it asks if such a bill was passed. A bill abolishing the sale of liquor in the army by any army regulations or men was passed, but the opinion has been expressed that this bill does not prevent a man not connected with the army from running a saloon for the accommodation of soldiers. Here is the bill that was passed:

SEC. 17. That no officer or private soldier shall be detailed to sell intoxicating drinks, as a bartender or otherwise, in any post exchange or canteen, nor shall any other person be required or allowed to sell such liquors in any encampment or fort or any premises used for military purposes by the United States; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to issue such general order as may be necessary to carry the provisions of this section into full force and effect.

—The attention of all friends of Eureka College is called to an announcement elsewhere in this paper from President Hardin for a conference to be held at Springfield, Ill., May 15th. Eureka is putting forth every effort to come to the front as an educational institution and her claims are worthy of the attention of all Christian people. All our colleges, in fact, are in an unusual state of activity. We hear from Hiram almost every week and note the progress of the effort to raise an endowment of a quarter million dollars in the near future. Bethany is also making heroic efforts to attain a more firm footing upon the platform of future educational institutions. Then comes word also from Lexington, Drake, Cotner and our own state institutions, all planning for larger endowments and greater usefulness. We have articles on file for publication from several of these colleges to appear at the earliest possible date. We are glad that our columns are thus appreciated by all our institutions as a medium by which they can and do have articulation with the church and the world.

—The program of the Congress to be held in this city in April by the Disciples of Christ appears in this paper. After reading it we think you will experience a desire "to be there." Well, St. Louis is big enough to entertain all that can come, so you can make arrangements to gratify that desire. It will be an intellectual and spiritual feast.

—We are glad to see by the report from the secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, published elsewhere in this paper, that the scale has turned from a loss to that of the same period last year to gain. The society is now ahead of its last year's record in offerings and we trust is to stay ahead to the close of the year. About all of the churches will try to at least raise their apportionment before the year closes, or more, as many have already done, and thus bring the total offerings for the year up to the $150,000 mark. The churches are not going to be defeated by a stormy day in so important a matter.

—Bro. Wright, the author of the following note, claims to be an eye-witness to the evolution of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from the beginning. He says:

BRO. GARRISON:—I think I can go Bro. G. W. Nance "one better." I have witnessed the evolution of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST in every stage of its development. I was a subscriber to the EVANGELIST for several years. My recollection is that it was established by D. Bates and D. Pat Henderson, though A. Chatterton was editor sometimes. As I have none of the numbers at present, I may be mistaken. I can't give dates. I was a subscriber to the Gospel Echo, published by E. L. Craig, at Carrollton, Ill. Was a subscriber to the Christian Herald at the time it was merged into the Echo, published by J. C. Reynolds and J. H. Garrison, and have been a subscriber ever since. A. WRIGHT.

—The Journal and Messenger seems to regard "open communion" in a Baptist Church as the beginning of the end of that church. We had supposed that Baptists were immunized against any non-Baptist custom in other churches. In speaking against the state of affairs in England the Journal and Messenger says:

Now is the crucial time among English Baptists. The outcome of this centennial effort will determine whether, at the end of another century, there will be such things as Baptist churches in England. Either the "open communion" and "open membership" idea must prevail and the denomination lose its identy, or the restricted membership idea must prevail and thus the "open" section be sloughed off. Baptists of England cannot go on as they have been going and continue for another century.

What called out the above opinion of our esteemed editor of the Journal snd Messenger was the following defense of the growing custom of "open communion" amongst the Baptists of England previously quoted in the same editorial paragraph:

I challenge my beloved brethren to prove that they are justified by either the letter or the spirit of the Scriptures in excluding from a Christian Church, on the simple ground of non-immersion, any loyal soul who, through believing, has already been accepted by our Lord. . . . Unless our brethren can quote text and context, precept or example, for an

—A large number of successful protracted meetings have been held during the past winter in various places, notwithstanding the storms.

—We ask the attention of our preachers, interested in the study of the Book of Revelation, to the advertisement of "The Mystery of the Golden Cloth," by J. S. Hughes, which appeared in our issue, March 16th. Mr. Hughes has made a special offer of this book to preachers, good until April 1st, and the opportunity of this offer should not be lost. This book interprets the symbols of the Revelator upon an entirely new basis and should be read by every one seeking light thereon before adopting any other theory. The book has been produced at an immense outlay of intellectual and physical energy, embracing years of hard reading and study and contains a marvelous collation of scriptural facts and principles. You should have "The Mystery of the Golden Cloth" in your library by all means. Send $1.10 to J. S. Hughes, Station O, Chicago, Ill., and get a book which, after April first, will cost $1.50, the regular price.

—The biographical sketch of N. A. McConnell, whose picture appears upon our first page this week will be found in this paper.

—The Orphans' Cry, for March, contains a large group picture of the children of the Home and others. While the children look cheerful and happy, the sight of so many orphans in one group is enough to touch the heart of any reflective person. But the reflection is not wholly pensive. That they can be thus cared for, makes the heart glad rather than gloomy. Herein appears one of the striking differences between the Christian and heathen religions. The former cares for the widow and the orphan; the latter do not. Just in proportion, therefore, that we contribnte to the support of widows and orphans, just in that proportion do we remove ourselves from heathenism and declare for the religion of Jesus Christ. We are glad to hear of the support that has been given this Home in the past and pray that it may not only be continued, but greatly enlarged. May God bless the Christian Orphans' Home, its board of managers, the editors of the Orphans' Cry and all who contribute to the support of the Home and the Cry.

—A letter from H. W. B. Myrick, Gentryville, Mo., claims that he was misrepresented in a Budget paraprag h in this paper recently, referring to an article of his in Christian Standard, entitled "What Our Papers Ought to Publish." We understood the article to criticise "one of our papers" for publishing articles from members of other religious bodies, on the plea of "hearing both sides." He claims that this was not his meaning, but that what he criticised was the printing of such articles without reply, and thus depriving the readers of hearing "both sides." We gladly give Bro. Myrick the benefit of this explanation, though we think his article might easily bear a different interpretation. The habit of replying to every sentiment that does not wholly accord with our own, in articles whose general tenor is correct, comes of a nervousness about the safety of truth which we do not feel.

—The following paragraph from The Way, edited by Barton O. Aylesworth, Denver, Col., on the patronizing and indifference of our brotherhood toward Christian Endeavor and about the imp rative need for the immediate extension of our work, touches points of such vital importance that we give it a place in our columns:

The Way lifts its young but vigorous voice on behalf of the immediate extension of the Christian Endeavor work among the Disciples. Our attitude towards this first great organized result of our plea outside of our own body has been altogether too patronizing and indifferent. The time has come for an entirely new work on its behalf. Not only do we need wider and better organization of our young people but the greater need is that the whole church shall be aroused upon the subject. This cannot be done by letters, by pamphlets nor by our papers. It must have the voice and heart of a man as large as the idea itself—a man whose very personality stands for breath of movement and for depth of spiritual power. In the judgment of The Way there is but one such man among us. Others may possess the elements, but have not had the training for the work. The church can crown a great work and crown a great life by sending Bro. J. Z. Tyler to the field in the name of Y. P. S. C. E.

—March 5th was a dry one for St. Louis. The saloons were closed. Attempts to defy the law caused numerous arrests At our preachers' meeting in this office last Monday morning a resolution was passed commending the police department for their effort at enforcing the law and calling upon all good citizens to continue their influence in this direction. As the law in question seems to be unfamiliar to the people generally we give it a place following, herewith, and inasmuch as it is a state law we hope that the good people of the state will insist upon its enforcement throughout the state or know the reason why. This law ought to be read before every public audience in the state that all the people may know of its existence and nature:

(Revised Statute of 1891. Sec. 21.) Any person having a license as a dramshop keeper, who shall keep open such dramshop, or shall sell, give away or otherwise dispose of, or suffer the same to be done upon or about his premises, any intoxicating liquors, in any quantity, on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, or upon the day of any general election in this state shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not less than $50 nor more than $200, shall forfeit such license and shall not again be allowed to obtain a license to keep a dramshop for the term of two years next thereafter.

Sec. 28. A dramshop keeper shall not keep, exhibit, use or suffer to be kept, exhibited or used in his dramshop, any piano, organ, or other musical instrument whatever, for the purpose of performing upon or having the same performed upon in such dramshops, nor shall he permit any sparring, boxing, wrestling or other exhibition or contest or cock-fighting in his dramshop; and it shall be unlawful for any dramshop keeper to set up, keep, use or permit to be kept or used in or about the premises of his dramshop by any other person, or run or to be run in connection with such dramshop, in any manner or form whatever, any billiard table, pool table, or any other gaming table, bowling or ten-pin alley, cards, dice or any other device for gambling or playing any other game of chance; and the keeper of such dramshop shall not permit any person in or about his dramshop to play upon any such table or alley, with cards, dice or any gaming device of any kind. Every person violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine not less than $10 or more than $50, and in addition to such fine shall forfeit his license, and shall not again be allowed to obtain a license to keep a dramshop for the term of two years next thereafter.

PERSONAL MENTION.

W. H. Waggoner, Stanford, Ill., has held institutes on missions this year at Secor, Cantrall, Armington, Carlock, Menier. He is to visit Tuscola this week and Ashland the next.

The silver anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick D. Power is announced for their home in Washington, D. C., for March 20th. We send congratulations, and wish that it may please God to permit them to celebrate the 50th anniversary of their marriage.

L. W. Spayd, of Owasso, Mich., has accepted a call to preach for the church in Willoughby, Ohio, and has been in his new field since March 1st. He says that fifteen years of service for the Master in Michigan has made it hard for him to leave that state. The many kindnesses from brethren created strong ties in Christian fellowship.

The resignation of C. E. Pomeroy, of Marion, Kansas, was recently accepted by the church in that place. The Marion Record says that his departure will be generally regretted by the people of Marion regardless of denominational lines.

A. McLean, of Cincinnati, O., has been invited to deliver one of the addresses of the Endeavor Convention at Detroit, next July, and has accepted.

J. A. Harding, Nashville, Tenn., launched a new monthly journal, called the Way. He is both editor and publisher. It contains 32 pages half the size of this paper, filled solid with literature on religious themes.

We are informed that the name K. D. Olive, signed to the report of meetings at Liberty and Newkirk, Okla. Ter., in our evangelistic column for March 2, is in error. R. D. Olive is an elder of the Liberty congregation instead of Newkirk.

J. W. Coggins, who was at Benton, Mo., but now in Swannanoa, N. C., has been sick for a month, but is now improving. He is with his parents and fears that he will not be able to resume his work again this year, if at all. We regret to hear of this sickness, but pray that it may not be of long duration. Bro. Coggins is one of God's useful men in the ministry.

Mr. John Ryan, of Chicago, Ill., was married to Miss Ethel Ellington, of Buffalo, Ill., in the Christian Church at the latter place, Jan. 5, 1899, by H. H. Jenner, pastor.

J. N. Crutcher, pastor of the First Christian Church, Paris, Tex., preached a sermon to the returned heroes of the late war last night. About 25 of the soldiers were present. The auditorium was handsomely decorated with the national colors, and the music was especially well selected.

The Montgomery Standard speaks of H. A. Denton, of Sedalia, Mo., who has just concluded a meeting at Montgomery City, Mo., after a unique but complimentary fashion. He is the "little short man" without clerical appearance, but thoroughly conversant with the Scriptures and deeply in earnest in the salvation of souls. His illustrations are modern and his points plain. He talks like he was one of the people, but continually presses upon them the beauty and power of the Christ-life which, after all, is the measure of success in the preacher's life.

A note from J. E. Hawes, dated at Ada, Ohio, March 16th, informs us of the death of his father on that date. His father had been in the Master's service 43 years. With the many friends of Bro. Hawes we join in sympathy for his sorrow.

J. A. Seaton, of Rock Rapids, Ia., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Christian Church at Spencer, Iowa, whose pulpit has just been vacated by J. M. Hoffmann. He expects to move there by the 15th of April. Rock Rapids is ready for a minister.

Dr. Albert Buxton, of Fairbury, Neb., has accepted the chancellorship of Add-Ran University, Waco, Texas. This calls Dr Buxton into a greatly enlarged field of usefulness, and he is a man that will not lose an opportunity to build up and increase the usefulness of that institution of learning, and the cause for which it stands in the great state of Texas. We congratulate both Dr. Buxton and Add-Ran on the call.

We beg to direct our readers' attention to the advertisement of G. H. Boehmer, Shoes, 613 and 615 Olive St , St. Louis, beginning with this issue on page 372. This shoe establishment is one of the oldest and largest in the city and enjoys a patronage in volume and quality equal to any.

Mr. Boehmer is proud to say that he has many patrons who have been served by him for nearly twenty years, and some who believe him to be the cleverest shoe man in the business.

A pleased and satisfied customer is the best advertisement, and no one is allowed to go away or remain unsatisfied.

This and the uniform courtesy of himself and all of his assistants are partly the reason of his great success.

For readers out of town a handsome catalogue will be sent on request when this paper is mentioned.

Mail orders are given prompt and special attention.

Autobiographical Sketch of N. A. McConnell.

[The following sketch of his career is contained in a letter from Bro. McConnell, in response to a request from the editor of this paper, for some of the facts of his life. It was intended as data for us to use, but we do not see that we can make any improvement on it as he sends it. See picture on our first page. —EDITOR.]

You request a photo of my Quaker face. While a Quaker my face was not photographed, and it is now so far in the past (59 years, two months and 12 days) that no one would recognize it if I had one. I will, however, send you one taken about 11 years ago. My name has been before the public so long, especially in Iowa, and there has been so much said about me, that it seems to me a sketch of my short life would not be of much interest to your readers.

I was born of Quaker parents in Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 23rd day of the "first month," A. D. 1824. Worked on a farm until I was 13 years old.

At the age of 13 my father apprenticed me out to a merchant. I continued to "hop the counter" and "cut tape" for five years. I then quit the trade and worked at "carpenter and joiner work" for seven years. When I was in my 16th year I heard John Henry, Marcus Bosworth and Charles Edward Van Voorhis preach the good news concerning "the Christ" and was "convinced of sin, of righteousness and of judgment," confessed my faith in Christ and about nine o'clock P. M., on the 12th day of the 12th month I went about half a mile from the meeting house to "Bradfield's Run," near East Fairfield, in a snow storm (we had no warm water tanks in those days, and I could not wait for summer) and was buried in immersion into the Christ by the above-named C. E. Van Voorhis.

On the 10th day of the seventh month, A. D. 1845, I was married by James E. Gaston to Sarah Ann Brisbane who, I am glad to say, was a devoted, intelligent Christian girl, ten months to a day my junior. She was my counsel, stay and human comfort until her departure hence on the 5th of March, 1890. She bore me five children, only two of whom are now living.

In the month of September, 1848, a conference was held in New Lisbon, O., composed of one messenger from each of the eight churches in that county. I was called to the ministry of the Word and sent to those churches to "labor in word and teaching." This I continued to do, with what success God knows, until Oct. 1, 1849.

On the 7th of November, 1849, I landed in Davenport, Ia., whither I had been called and engaged to labor for a co-operation of churches and scattered Disciples, in district No. 2. This district was bounded on the east by the Mississippi River, on the north by a line extending due west from the north line of Jackson county to the Missouri River and on the south by a line commencing at the mouth of the Iowa River, thence to the Big Muddy. My salary agreed upon was $300, $287 of which was pledged. I bore my own traveling expenses. The salary was all paid and a little sum was donated.

In October, 1850, my family settled in Marion, Linn county, where they resided 17 years, while I was the only regular preacher employed by the Marion church. In modern phrase, I was "THE PASTOR" at Marion for 17 years. In 1856 I engaged in the state work, but still holding the place at Marion. The first five and a half months I spent in Iowa I rode on horseback 1,800 miles, preached 140 sermons, prayed and exhorted as best I could, and talked almost incessantly till late almost every night, and the Lord added 40 to the saved. From Aug. 1, 1863, till Aug. 1, 1866, I was in the state work.

I have traveled generally in an open buggy or on horseback, through some 70 of the 99 counties of Iowa. I am now past my 75th year and for the last four years have had no regular work; have supplied when called upon. I am regarded as a back number, too old and not able to preach. However, in the month of December, 1898, I preached 16 sermons in 13 days for the church at Lafayette, Linn county.

I am in fair health and able to do some work, mentally and physicaly. I subscribed for the first number of the EVANGELIST ever issued. It was then a 32-page monthly in pamphlet form, costing $1.00 per volume. It was edited and published by Daniel Bates, from Mt. Pleasant, A. Miller and Aaron Chatterton, co-editors. I have taken it ever since, following it through all its changes and removals. I like it still, barring some features of so-called higher criticism. For the last 20 or 25 years you have known me personally and are familiar with my career.

On the 13th of March, 1893, I married Mrs. Adeline Martindale Daybread, who departed this life on the 15th of May, 1898. She was one of the purest Christian women I ever knew. I am alone again, and to travel for a few days without that companionship so essential to the comfort of the old. I am a life member of the F. C. M. S. and a life member of the I. C. C. I have not succeeded financially as some of my brethren have, but "having food and raiment I am striving to be therewith content." Make such use of this as you think wise.

Your unworthy brother,
NELSON ANTRIM MCCONNELL.

Reasons Why.

Five reasons why you should send an offering to the Christian Orphans' Home, 915 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Because we have cared for 500 children and 100 adults from 21 states and territories. Because we have placed 150 children in Christian families in 17 states. Because we are about $2,000 in debt and have but $500 endowment. Because we now have 107 children and 15 adults in the home. Because there are many old people applying to us for a home, and we are having to refuse all babies, turning away seven this week, and we want to start a home for old people and babies; and because these Homes are for the Christian Churches of any state, hence belong to every member of every Christian Church and is the Lord's work and yours.

MRS. O. C. SHEDD.

Attention, C. W. B. M, of Illinois.

At the last quarterly meeting of the state board of the C. W. B. M., of Illinois, our corresponding secretary and organizer, Miss Gussie Courson, resigned this work. It was then arranged that Miss Anna M. Hale take the work till Encampment. She accordingly began the first of March, and with her accustomed vigor and devotion is going right on with it. We bespeak for her from the churches the same cordial reception and co-operation in this C. W. B. M. work that has been given her in the college and Sunday school work.

Is it Malaria or Alum?

[Popular Science Monthly.]

Languor, loss of appetite, indigestion and often feverishness are the common symptoms of a physiological condition termed "Malaria." All these symptoms may be and frequently are the effect of the use of alum baking powders in food making. There is no question about the poisonous effect of alum upon the system. It obstructs digestion, prostrates the nerves, coagulates and devitalizes the blood. All this has been made clear, thanks to physicians, boards of health and food commissions. So "highly injurious to the health of the community" does the eminent head of the University of Pennsylvania, Dr. Barker, consider the alum baking powders that he says "their sale should be prohibited by law."

Under these circumstances it is worth the while of every housewife to employ the very little care that is necessary to keep so dangerous an element from the food of her family.

A pure cream of tartar baking powder, which is the only kind that ought to be used, ought to cost about 45 cents to 50 cents a pound. Therefore, if you are paying much less, something is wrong; if you are paying 25 cents or less, per pound, the powder is certainly made from alum.

Always bear these simple facts in mind when purchasing baking powder.

Criminal Record of the City of Paris for 1898.

During the past year more than 30,000 persons were prosecuted in the city of Paris for violation of the penal code. It is encouraging to be able to say that the record for this year is better than for the two years just preceding. The little gain in this respect is more than offset by the increase in crime among the young of both sexes. The official report shows that the three crimes the most prevalent are vagabondage, begging and theft. Paris boasts of having the largest army of vagabonds and beggars outside of London, one unfavorable point in which the Anglo-Saxons are superior to that of the French. Of the 9,180 vagabonds prosecuted in 1898, more than one thousand were women. Very interesting from a social point of view is the fact that 6,116 came from the provinces, doubtless in the hope of finding employment, or of the more easily avoiding work; for there is a universal belief on the part of country people that life is easy, profitable and agreeable in the great city. Yet Paris is a city of pleasure more than a commercial metropolis. One never lacks for amusement in the sunny French capital, but he often lacks work. Yet every Frenchman from the ambitious "literateur" down to the peasant would like to live at Paris; it not infrequently happens that the would-be successors of Victor Hugo, Dumas, Michelet, Taine and Renan are compelled to sojourn among the vagabonds, not altogether derogatory since the history of letters has made the public familiar with more than one name that once figured in the lower courts, or at least on the list of vagabonds. Of the 4,256 beggars last year, 894 were women and 3,094 former inhabitants of the country or small villages. Here is the place to add by way of digression that France has an army of 28,000 criminal vagabonds and beggars—we make no mention of the thousands who are never arrested—of which number 21,000 had been previously before the courts for the same offense. The repeated arrests, imprisonment and release of a vagabond or beggar is a way organized society has of saying to itself that it has not in any respect solved the problem. Very much like the Frenchman who covers the blackboard with figures and equations in the vain effort to reach a solution acceptable to the professor. France worked "mighty hard" last year and spent an enormous sum of money to condemn 28,000 vagabonds. The veritable and sincere socialist, who loves humanity, has the right to pose as professor and say, Your work is vain; it neither proves nor solves. The problem is just where it was.

The French capital is the rendezvous for 6,459 thieves, including 1,356 women, yet the French pickpocket has nowhere near the skill of the London individual. Persons who resist or in any way outrage the police number 909, a decrease since in 1897 there were 2,540. This category of criminals varies with local circumstances. The excitable disposition of all Frenchmen make them, whether they be deputies or senators or just vagabonds, the constant victims of their violent passions. They have but little sang-froid. It is necessary to see him at the Chamber of Deputies in order to appreciate this side of his nature. "Like a chicken with its head off" is the only expression which can give the reader any idea of the French deputy in the heart of a legislative discussion.

By far the more important item in the criminal report for 1898 is that relative to crime among the young. French laws make the youth over 16 amenable to the free penalty. Under this age of discernment the boy or girl may be returned to the family or sent to the house of correction. Of this class of child-criminals, 440 were prosecuted in 1898 for theft, 549 as vagabonds, 119 as beggars, thirteen for murder, one for assassination. The year 1897 showed about the same result, about the same brutality and degradation among the gamins, or as they are called nowadays, the "gosses" of Paris. Startling as such a record is, that which follows shows an even greater degree of depravity. Above 16 and under 20 for last year alone, 2,506 prosecutions for vagabondage, 627 for professional begging, 64 for rape, 372 for assault and battery and 10 for assassination or unsuccessful attempts. This frightful showing is at the same time like a condemnation of the social order and system of instruction; nor is it a recent condition. On the contrary, for several years past the condition is scarcely better. Brutality and immorality has become common among the children and youth of Paris. It is necessary to add that on the threshold of the twentieth century, in one of the most civilized cities of the world, the large per cent. of crime is committed by persons under 20 years of age. For the statistics for the year 1898 give 7,870 as the number of persons of this age tried for one crime or another, from begging and vagabondage down to rape, assassination and murder. This is the climax, for above 20 and under 30 the number of criminals is already less, being 7,179, including 1,134 women. The decrease continues perceptibly and rapidly above the age of 30 and under 40. Including 1,044 women there were but 5,512 condemnations; over 41 and under 50, including 825 women, 3,881 over 50 and under 60, 2,728 condemnations, including 611 women; over 61 and under 80 still 1,513 of which number, 460 women. Octogenarians are not apt to be criminals, though not too old to figure among the beggars and vagabonds. Paris had 33 of this class in 1898, the only category in which the number of women exceeds that of the men, there being 17 women against 16 men.

These additional figures verify the deplorable fact stated above, that the most important criminal class at Paris is made up of children and youth under 20 years of age; that is, minors. Nor is the outlook encouraging. The month of January had hardly opened before several murders had been committed by boys under 19, having for accomplices their mistresses of the same age.

In this report no account is taken of general immorality, which seems beyond control here as well as elsewhere, but the public disrespect for marriage among the working classes is probably the most fruitful source of child-beggars, vagabonds and criminals. In the place of marriage "free unions" exist, which are naturally often temporary, lasting at most a few years. The children born in such circumstances are turned on the streets at the earliest age possible, endowed with ignoble instincts and base appetites. These "free unions" are by no means confined to the lower classes. On the contrary, the "student and his mistress" are inseparable terms, though he is not long contented with one. To use his own expression, he goes "from flower to flower." This sort of marriage in which the pretty working girl of Latin Quarter is the victim, is known among the intellectual youth of France as "collage" (from coller, to glue). The social problem, as may be easily seen, has little to expect from a class of students so thoroughly averse to serious conceptions of morality. They are always ready for a political revolution, but don't talk to them about a moral revolution, for which they have little taste.

Women who suffer with any of the Ailments Peculiar to their Sex, and who are discouraged by past experience with Doctors, patent medicines, and so-called sure cures, should write to Mrs. Adeline Hardy, Box 12 Indianapolis, Ind. She has had placed in her hands (by a noted physician of Germany) a remedy which absolutely cures every form of female disease. It will be mailed free to any reader of this paper. The doctor considers it his religious duty to place his infallible cure within the reach of every sufferer.

Student Religious Organizations in Germany.

The student conferences held at Eisenach last summer in the interest of religious work in German and other European universities attracted much attention and were productive of what one may hope will be permanent results. The first was a conferance of representatives of German universities, and the second was intended to embrace all European institutions of education, and to promote the work of the college department of the Young Men's Christian Association of the world. The introduction of this movement into Germany is a notable enterprise, and in time is certain to be as effective a means of religious life as it is in the States. But it encounters special difficulties on German soil which will retard its growth. A glance at some of these difficulties will at the same time reveal the striking characteristics of German students.

A prominent element in the German character which especially manifests itself in student life is devotion to Wissenschaft, or the scientific acquirement of knowledge. The love of knowledge and the pursuit of knowledge for its own sake amount almost to a passion among these people, and every movement is viewed from the scientific and critical angle. This is particularly true of the university life because that stands at the period of a man's career which is supremely devoted to the acquirement of intellectual furnishment and methods. This atmosphere, which prevails as a matter of course in the departments of philosophy, history and science, is not less characteristic of the biblical and theological work. The study of the Old and New Testaments, of Church History and of Dogmatics is carried on in the same fashion, with supreme devotion to the application of scientific principles of investigation and interpretation. This does not argue the absence of what one may term religious feeling in the instructors or students, and it is indeed true that not infrequently the lecture room is the scene of earnest expressions of the strongest religious emotion. But it is nevertheless true that this type of thought is to a large extent repressed as unbecoming the quiet and earnest effort to reach the truth in these matters of supreme moment. One finds, therefore, very little of the tendency to "preachment" in the instructors as inconsistent with the best form and traditions of German university life. This influence has its effect upon the student body in the direction of repressing the open expression of religious feeling and relegating it almost exclusively to the secret places of life, the closet or the church. It also finds expression among small groups of students who come into intimate relations and share the confidences of their spiritual life. But such associations are probably more rare than with us. The period of university life is regarded as devoted supremely to the intellectual equipment of the future preacher or religious teacher. He is not permitted to preach until this period has been completed, which is probably a wise provision. At its conclusion he enters an institution which corresponds somewhat more closely to our theological seminary, where he is given special training in preaching and pastoral work and not infrequently is placed under the supervision of some experienced pastor to learn the most approved methods of Christian work. It is in this period of his career that the outward expression of Christian feeling is given greater prominence than during his university career.

It will thus be seen that the atmosphere of the university in Germany is not conducive to the growth of distinctively Christian organizations like the Young Men's Christian Association. Circles for scientific Bible study, clubs for the discussion of Dogmatics, seminaries for the investigation of Church History, and societies for literaray research there may be, but an organization directly intended to promote the religious life appears to the German somewhat out of place in the university, and neither professors nor students look with favor upon the attempt. It must be further noted that such an organization is usually regarded as intended to exalt religious emotionalism, and of this there is no doubt danger. It is not infrequently the case that a group of young men of earnest piety, deeply interested in the spiritual welfare of their fellowstudents, come to lay extravagant emphasis upon the religious emotions and use the somewhat cant phrases of a pietistic type which repel the quiet intelligence of men who drop into the meetings, and who at heart have real sympathy with the purposes of the movement. This is true in American colleges, and it is more true here where the few men who embrace the idea of a distinctly religious organization are apt to go to the extreme, and thus give the impression of fanaticism, which they are far from feeling.

A second reason for the slow progress of the world's student movement is the inborn suspicion of everything foreign which characterizes the German mind. Taught from childhood to believe that the fatherland is the nursery and home of every movement and organization which has special value for the age, he is reluctant to admit an idea which comes with a distinctly foreign air and name, and whose successes have been hitherto entirely achieved on foreign soil. This characteristic shows itself in the reluctance to admit foreign inventions and the anxiety to disguise them under German names when their introduction is no longer to be resisted. It shows itself in the translation of military and naval terms universally recognized, and the jealous preference for German nomenclature and notions everywhere observable. It is further seen in German reluctance to accept scholarly results achieved on other than German soil, or to admit that educational processes employed elsewhere have any value. It is not surprising, therefore, that an institution coming as does the student Y. M. C. A., from across the Atlantic, should receive scant welcome in German university circles.

A third obstacle to overcome is the strength of the Verbindung idea among the students here. These Vereins, or societies, partake somewhat of the character of our debating societies and somewhat of the Greek letter fraternity order. Standing midway between the two they have a hold upon the German university student which is perhaps the strongest tie that binds him during his university career, and it is difficult to introduce a movement which is still another organization, but yet so much more open and accessible than the Verbindung. These societies have often high and sometimes heroic purposes. It takes no small amount of moral courage to stand up in protest against the universal practice of student dueling which is sanctioned by all grades of society from the Emperor down; and yet at least two of the societies in the University of Berlin are pledged against the practice and wear the colors which are recognized as a standing plea for its abolition. Other societies have still other purposes, literary, scientific, political; and some, as might be expected, are little more than dueling and drinking clubs. But they all have a history back of them, and the creation of a new society of foreign character and emphasizing the distinctively religious element in the student life is a difficult processs.

And yet the idea is already rooted on German soil and is growing. Here in Berlin there is a small society of perhaps twenty members, which appears sufficiently insignificant in an institution numbering more than five thousand students, but which it may be believed is destined to accomplish notable results. It meets in apartments placed at its disposal by Count Pueckler, a wealthy man and an earnest Christian worker, the president of the first Eisenach conference, and a promoter of every good cause in the empire. He is often present at the meetings, which are conducted much after the manner of American Y. M. C. A. gatherings, and gradually the circle of members is increasing, though all lament the heavy indifference of instructors and students to this type of work.

It need hardly be said that no organized student work among women has yet been undertaken. The body of women students in German universities is small as yet, though rapidly increasing, and up to the present time receives scant courtesy from professors or students, with, of course, some exceptions. But already the beginnings of a woman's student Christian organization are being planned, destined, no doubt, to achieve notable results.

Jubilee City Letter.

THE SELBY-WATTS DEBATE.

There has been an interesting diversion from the ordinary events of religious life in Cincinnati, the past fortnight, in the "battle of the giants" over problems of Christian evidence and secularism. Readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELST are by this time more or less familiar with the name of Isaac Selby, for several years pastor of one of our largest Australian churches, in Melbourne. Bro. Durban had aroused no little anticipation of his coming when he spoke of him in his "English Topics" as an "intellectual colossus." Those of this city who have heard him, more or less, through two debates, his series of lectures, and the evangelistic meetings with Bro. Geo. Miller in Covington, agree most heartily with Bro. Durban.

He is not only logical and possessed of encyclopedia information, but a most eloquent speaker.

After his first course of lectures in Covington, the Secularist Society challenged him to debate and brought a gentleman of some repute from Cleveland to meet him. At the close of the discussion they manfully wrote a letter to the chairman of our committee acknowledging a thorough rout, but asking that they might bring the most able man to be found for another debate. After some consideration the proposition was accepted and Mr. Chas. Watts, of London, Eng., vice-president of the English Secularist Union, and March 6th, 7th, 9th and 10th fixed as the dates, Mr. Selby to affirm that "It is reasonable to believe in a God, who is the Creator and moral Governor of the universe," and that "Man has a soul designed for immortality;" Mr. Watts to affirm that "Christianity is not of divine origin, neither designed to meet the needs of mankind" and that "Secularism is sufficient to satisfy the needs of mankind." Unfortunately, Mr. Watts was not able to appear the first two nights, so a Mr. Jameson was substituted. He proved an intellectual pettifogger with some humor and a great deal of ridiculousness, but entirely unworthy of his opponent. So all were rejoiced to see Mr. Watts appear on the third night and many faces were written with anxiety at the close of his first speech, which was masterly in its logical arrangement and greeted with triumphant applause by his followers. But Selby was yet to be accounted with. He now had need of his Damascan sword and rejoiced to draw it. Watts had forged, like Vulcan, with his hammer and tongs of learning and logic, but Selby flashed Jove's lightning and rent the strongest affirmations of his opponent. He proved himslf just as learned as Watts; indeed, was able to meet every reference to authority with utmost familiarity, and in his keen logic show to the most untechnical mind its truths and fallacies. Added to this was his splendid generalizing and rapid, eloquent speech which held his audience fast and close and enabled him to marshal twice as many facts and arguments as his opponent in the same length of time. Watts' shafts were strong and sent from the bow with strength, but Selby's were equally strong and feathered for their flight to boot and sped with even more skill. Under his hard, materialistic interpretations Scripture passages came from Mr. Watts, hands like dry, lifeless roots, but when touched with the wand of Selby's fine spiritual interpetations, blossomed into life like magic, often winning most generous applause. Mr. Watts limped badly at the close of the last night, and ill-naturedly accused his audience of being dull of comprehension, because his opponent was in such evident favor. The Daily Enquirer, which had showed decided favor to the opposition before, said at the close that "Mr. Selby had no difficulty in disloging his antagonist from every trench, and in conclusion left him at sea without a paddle, sail, screw or rudder."

Space will not permit a resume of arguments further than to say that Watts was unable to fix any of the "crimes done in religion's name" or the Christianity of the gospel, and failed utterly to show one thing offered the world for moral betterment or progress by secularism that Christianity in its purity does not offer.

Any one who desires Bro. Selby's course of lectures should write to J. H. Fillmore, 119 W. 6th St., Cincinnati. Especially should they be given at our colleges.

New York Letter.

We are enjoying a visit from Bro. J. A. Erwin and wife, who on the 11th sail for San Juan, Porto Rico, as our missionaries under the auspices of the American Christian Missionary Society. They expect to open up educational and religious work in that Porto Rican city immediately. As is known, Bro. Erwin made a tour of that island as special commissioner of our home board last autumn, and was the very first official representative of Protestantism to do missionary work there. On his journeys from place to place he distributed tracts, Bibles, Testaments, Gospels, and preached to the people; and in this way tested the attitude of the inhabitants toward Protestant evangelism. The experiment demonstrated the eagerness of the people to hear and accept the plain and simple teaching of the gospel of Christ. The Disciples do not propose to countenance any proposal for an agreement looking toward a division of the territory between the missionary boards. If they did this they would in effect thereby confess that one missionary will teach as much of the truth of the gospel as another, and practically nullify their claim to be the exponents of a distinctively pure, full gospel. No, we believe our commission is to all the world, and we cannot agree to withhold the teachings of Ohrist from any people simply through courtesy to others. "Whether it be better to obey God rather than men, judge ye."

We feel that our board has made a wise choice in the selection of Bro. and Sister Erwin for the Porto Rican mission. He was for several years a successful lawyer in the Southwest, but upon becoming a Christian he decided to give his life to the ministry of the gospel. His work as such has been successful, and he delights in evangelism. Beside this, a knowledge of the Spanish language fits him for immediate service as a missionary among that people. This is a great advantage to begin with. Bro Erwin preached an excellent discourse at the 169th Street Church Lord's day morning, March the 5th, and occupied the pulpit at 56th Street Church in the evening. We purchased a goodly supply of Spanish religious literature from the American Tract Society to be used in the missionary work at San Juan. Bro. and Sister Erwin will be among the very first heralds of the gospel in that land under the new regime. And the very fact that the American Christian Missionary Society has entered that field so promptly is a strong appeal to the churches to make a liberal offering to this work the first Sunday in May. Let all the Disciples of Christ have fellowship in the work of redeeming Porto Rico.

Bro. and Dr. Gordon, of India, are in the city, and expect to sail for their new field in a few days. We were sorry not to have had them at some of our services, for we are always glad to have the messengers of Christ visit us and tell what the Lord has done through them. Dr. Butchart is still in the city, extending his medical knowledge and equiping himself for a larger and better work in China. Bro. E. S. and Dr. Nina Stevens, of Japan, are expected in New York soon. And so we are blessed by coming in contact frequently with many of our heroes and heroines of the cross. They always do us good.

Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, in a recent discourse, said some things deserving of repetition. He was preaching on the self-sufficiency of the gospel, and said in part:

Evangelization conducts to civilization, but civilization has no necessary bearing on evangelization; that is to say, there is in civilization no energy inherently calculated to yield gospel effects. Culture is not even third cousin to holiness. What is said about trying to make men better or about trying to make nations better by introducing among them the subduing influence of letters and arts is nine-tenths of it—not to say ten-tenths—aside from the mark.

By carrying schools and arts, trade and manufacture, among people that are now savages, you may be able to refine the quality of their deviltry, but that is not even the first step toward making angels or even saints of them. An elegant thief, an educated libertine, an accomplished courtesan, is no nearer the kingdom of heaven than is a loathsome cannibal. The style of a man's depravity will very likely vary with the degree of civilization, but, judging from Christ's way of dealing with all sorts of sinners, the different styles of depravity leave but little to choose between.

The instant Christianity begins to lean on anything its divine vitality dries out of it. The cause of Christ prospered in the Roman Empire till it became the state religion—till it came to have the government back of it—then Christianity deteriorated into a pious kind of politics, with a good deal more of politics than piety.

All that the world needs in order that the unfertile wastes of heathenism may be transformed into a blooming garden of the Lord is God and missionaries. God is ready.

A great meeting was held at Calvary Baptist Church, this city, last Sunday night, to celebrate the fall of the canteen in the national army. Rev. J. P. Dunn, of Boston, of the National Temperance Society, in an address on the history of the congressional measure recently adopted, said:

Ten years ago the canteen was established in regiments or in posts for the sale of beer, tobacco and stationery. There were two classes of canteens in the late war. One was established by the vote of the officers. Soldiers were detailed as bartenders, and the young men going from our homes were made to act in this capacity, under fear of penalty for disobeying orders. Another class was that established by the brewers. There were fifty canteens in Camp Thomas, at Chickamauga. The average daily sales amounted to $100, and the Sabbath was the largest day for the sale of this stuff. All this was permitted by the government. These facts were laid before President McKinley, but nothing was done. The sale of liquor at Chickamauga was a violation of the state law. There were also canteens at Lakeland, Fla., and at Mobile. There was no redress.

Because nothing was done the society published two months ago what the canteens had done. Testimony was submitted, and the appeal was sent to Congress. A few days ago the liquor dealers were rejoicing over the rumor that the bill would probably not be reached by the recent Congress. They did not suppose that there were shrewd Christian legislators in that body, but there were. It was a fight between the temperance forces and the forces of whiskey and beer.

Congressman Johnson, of North Dakota, also spoke, declaring the passage of the bill a peaceful victory, that not a word was spoken in defenee of the canteen and that two secrets were back of its success: the work of women and the Christian majority in Congress. Celebrate the fall of the canteen. It will be a good way to preach temperance. S. T. Willis.

Cure or Endure

Suffer or fight, which do you prefer in the case of bodily pain?

You've got to do either, for pain is sure to come. It comes to all. It may be a cut, a burn, a sore, an inflammation, or it may be the warning or symptom of some organic disease; one way or the other you'll have your share of it before long.

Are you ready? Whoever wants to fight pain and conquer it should call at their druggists and lay in a supply of

A Good Complexion

Depends on Good Digestion.

This is almost an axiom, although usually we are apt to think that cosmetics, face powders, lotions, fancy soaps, etc., are the secret for securing a clear complexion.

But all these are simply superficial assistants. It is impossible to have a good complexion unless the digestive organs perform their work properly; unless the stomach by properly digesting the food taken into it furnishes an abundance of pure blood a good complexion is impossible.

This is the reason so many ladies are using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they promptly cure any stomach trouble, and they have found out that perfect digestion means a perfect complexion and one that does not require cosmetics and powders to enhance its beauty.

Many ladies diet themselves or deny themselves many articles of food solely in order to keep their complexions clear.

When Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are used no such dieting is necessary. Take these tablets and eat all the good, wholesome food you want and you need have no fear of indigestion nor the sallow, dull complexion which nine women out of ten have, solely because they are suffering from some form of indigestion.

Bear in mind that beauty proceeds from good health, good health results from perfect digestion and we have advanced the best argument to induce every man or woman to give this splendid remedy a trial.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found in drug stores and cost but 50 cents per package. They are prepared by the F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

If there is any derangement of the stomach or bowels they will remove it and the resultant effects are good digestion, good health and a clear, bright complexion. Ask your druggist for the tablets and a free book on stomach diseases.

Kansas Letter.

I held them a ten days' rally at Council Grove, and secured cash and pledges enough to pay all debts, $146 in 30 days and nearly enough pledges secured to employ a pastor for half time. There were three additions; one confession.

Bro. C. E. Pomeroy has resigned at Marion; this is his third year there. He is an earnest and faithful minister of the Word, and we hate to lose him from this county.

I am informed that Bro. Scrivenor is to close his work at Newton soon. This is also his third year there.

Bro. J. W. Ball takes the work at Fredric and Marquette. He is in a meeting at the former place now.

Bro. Ammi Fike takes the work at Mound Ridge and Florence, and lives at the former place.

Bro. Lewis Goos, Vriden, Ill., is expected to locate in this part of Kansas, and we hope that he may. This is a good place, and he is a good man.

We closed our first year's work here last Lord's day, and these good people appreciate our efforts by pounding us. When they left, after a very enjoyable evening, our larder was well filled. May God bless these noble, consecrated Christian workers. I believe this church is now in an excellent way to prosper and accomplish great things. One confession there since last report.

We expect to hold our 4th Kansas distirict convention in Topeka, and will hold it in connection with the Kansas State Ministerial Association. We will hold one day longer for the district work. The institute will be held April 11-13. We will attend to the district church work on Friday the 14th. The C. W. B. M. will hold their session on Thursday. Let every church, Sunday-school, Y. P. S. C. E. and C. W. B. M. in the district be represented. Watch for program later.

Milwaukee Letter.

A PESSIMISTIC VIEW.

It is no longer necessary to cross the ocean to visit a foreign city. We have them now in the very heart of our continent. Milwaukee, Wisconsin, a city of nearly 300,000 people, is practically a foreign city. We can apply a part of Acts 5:27 to Milwaukee, for there are men here from about every nation under heaven; but we can't say "devout." The Germans and Polanders are in the lead. The American population is about 20 per cent. The Catholic and Lutheran Churches are the strongest.

Real, genuine, aggressive Protestantism, non est in the city. The moral and spiritual condition is not suggestive of the millennium. 1,800 saloons. Bawdy houses in abundance. Saturday and Sunday theatres and mask balls galore. I am told that at many of these mask balls the men and women alike get drunk and raise his Satanic Majesty generally.

Some of the swell of society, both of men and women, patronize the saloons, standing at the bar and drinking together. The city is largely dominated by foreigners and liquor men. Ten of the city council are saloonkeepers.

I saw a little squib in one of our daily papers recently stating that there is a movement on foot now to let the bars down (!) at the next annual Carnival so the people can have a good time. The thing that puzzles me is to know how they can be let down any lower than they are.

There was an election held here this week to choose an Assembly man to fill the place of the one who died in Madison recently. There were but two candidates. One was a drunkard, and the other was a manufacturer of that article; that is, he was a saloonkeeper. The saloonkeeper was elected, and the drunkard, as must be inevitably and ultimately his fate, was turned down.

Our church is not doing much here. A work of this kind shows what is in people. It demonstates whether they have been converted to Christ and the truth or not. They have been served by some of the best preachers among us, and it can be truthfully said that "the little brown church around the corner" has in its membership some of the salt of the earth. But a great many Disciples come to Milwaukee and retain their connection with their home church, from one hundred to five hundred miles away. Once in a while I am told by them that their ministers at home recommend them to do this. Some hold their membership in their trunks where they deposited their letters when they received them from the home church. Others seek out the most popular churches, and are never known as Disciples till some of our members are told by their Baptist or Congregational friends that on the previous Sunday they received one, two or three Disciples into their church.

Some bring their letters and deposit them with the church; but whenever the minister or the church do not as "we did back home," or as "I think we ought to do," they sit down, and the devil's work goes on, and the gambler and the bawd, and the saloon seeketh out the young. And Jesus is stabbed in the house of his friends—"crucified afresh and put to open shame."

One is made to realize here, as in much of our work "down East," our loss from the want of country and village churches. The city population is being constantly increased by an influx from the country and villages around. To us in Wisconsin this means almost nothing. I am told that we have but about 1,000 members in the whole state. Thousands of people who come into Milwaukee from other parts of the state never heard of us. By some we are looked upon as one of the religious freaks to be found in large cities. I have found people who thought we were Christian Scientists, or some kind of healers, but little better than political ward heelers. Others thought we were a branch of the Catholic Church and desired to know wherein we differed from the mother church. But this week I met a lady (of fair intelligence) who thought we must be a new movement just started in the last five or six years, as she had never heard of us till she came to Milwaukee.

If any think that the Home Missionary Society, C. W. B. M., and Church Extension Society have finished their work and ought to disband, send them to Wisconsin for awhile. My next will be an optimistic view.

Discontent.

Occasionaly the wail of woe is heard in our ranks. The cry, as a general thing, comes from preachers hardly out of the gosling state, who have never borne a burden nor led a folorn hope in religious warefare. The burden of distress is that we have nothing from a religious standpoint that is at all desirable, and the rest of the religious world have—the earth—schools, brains, in fact everything supposed necessary for spiritual joy and pride. There is no recognition of the fact that the religious world has regarded us with contempt and fought us bitterly during whatever of growth and success has come to us as a people; that our leaders have stood clothed in the armor of God, and from a religious and intellectual point of view, held their ground and vanquished the host opposed to them. Yet these persons who have come to us, it sometimes appears, without any well-defined conception, of what we are, as a people or movement begin to instruct us in all matters partaining to sectarianism, forgetting that we owe our progress to a large extent to the fact that we left Egypt a number of years ago. The sigh for the fleshpots of the country of bondage. The remedy for this class of wailers would be to let them ride the circuit for five or six years until their brains get settled, so they can tell precisely what they want. We have nothing in the line of religious literature, papers or quarterlies that agrees with their intellectual stomachs. Our next state meeting should suggest that our editors send out a box of liver pills with each issue of the paper, at least something to drive from them that tired feeling that strikes them when they see one of own publications. How are they to be satisfied if the great and good among us are totally unfit to compare with men of other religious bodies? As preachers are so plentiful and churches so few, why not, when a young brother "waxes fat and kicks," let him go to those with whom he is in perfect sympathy and find rest to his soul. Now I am filled with regret because some of our gifted youth were not old enough to raise the fathers of the Reformation right. It cannot be helped now. So I must grin and bear it. In my recollection, those who left the old homestead because awful defects have found stamping-ground elsewhere, but they found peace and obseurity, for which they longed. The prodigal boy found out home was, after all, a very good place and the bill of fare better than husks in a far country. May the discontented genius realize that "godliness with contentment is great gain, having the promise of the life that now is, as well as that which is to come."

W. T. HENSON.

[Those for whom the foregoing admonition is intended are probably not a numerous tribe, and the ground of their error is doubtless clearly stated at the beginning of the article, to wit, the lack of age, wisdom and experience, as the figure used implies. Many of these will, of course, learn better as they grow older and wiser; the rest will soon die off or out. In the meantime the reputation of our fathers nor the cause they defended is likely to suffer by the expression of such immature opinions.—EDITOR.]

Fatal Mistakes. There are many practitioners in the medical profession who do not hesitate in administering on almost any occasion, morphine, cocoaine and other narcotics. They fail to consider that in quieting the pain by such methods, they are fostering a greater evil. Patients cannot be too careful in what they take, and if they find out that they are on the road to acquiring a dangerous habit by the use of such drugs they should at once stop it. As an illustration of the above, we cite the case of Mrs. Rudy, 525 4th Street, Fargo, N. Dak. Mrs. Rudy writes to Dr. Peter Fahrney, of Chicago, Ill., as follows: "I cannot thank you sufficiently for your medicines, especially your Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer, which we have used for over two years in our family. I had been sick for 10 years, and sought all the doctors in this neighborhood, and even in Minneapolis, without receiving any benefit. I was practically given up by all of them. The only thing they gave me, which eased my misery was morphine. I knew myself that I ought not to take that drug. I began thinking about Dr. Peter's Blood Vitallzer of which I had heard so much, and decided to try it. I used two bottles, but still I was uncertain as to whether it was helping me or not, but I continued the use of it, and now I am able to do all of my own work, including washing, etc. We are six in the family, so I have plenty to do. I am now entirely well."

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is a purely botanical remedy, absolutely free from all dangerous narcotic substances. It is not a drug store medicine, but is sold to the people direct, or through local agents, by the proprietor, Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 South Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The Hiram Jubilee Endowment Movement.

ENDOWMENT BY THE PEOPLE — WHAT ARE THE PROSPECTS FOR SUCCESS?

Many times this question is asked of me. I answer that we have the utmost confidence in a large measure of success for this endowment movement. There are many favorable indications. The interest is widening and deepening, as is shown by the letters we are continually receiving. Names are being sent to us from the Far East as well as from the Far West. They come also from the South as well as from the North. Not only do we get names, but oftentimes most encouraging words are written. We have had one and occasionally two young men in the field, delivering lectures and calling attention to the movement. They have been uniformly well received, and have gathered many names. We expect to add two others in the near future. Of course it will be impossible for us to visit all the churches of the Disciples, but this will not be necessary, inasmuch as a great many churches will take this matter up at their own instance. Endowment by the people seems to have struck a popular chord.

THE VARIOUS LINES OF WORK THAT WILL BE CARRIED OUT.

1. We mention the popular movement that has already been described in our papers. We expect to get tens of thousands of persons who will give in sums ranging from $1 to $1,000 each.

2. It is our purpose to establish a Great Hiram Jubilee Day. One which we hope will be generally observed throughout the United States by the churches of our brotherhood. We believe a great popular movement should have a day of this kind set apart for popular observance. Surely, any institution of the great Disciple brotherhood may well receive such favor. Our colleges have honored the great cause of Christian education, and given splendid returns for every dollar received from our great brotherhood. Three thousand churches ought to observe this day. We want to establish a day that will in no way conflict with the interests of other institutions or with our general missionary enterprises, but when the day is appointed we hope the preachers throughout the United States will give to this movement every encouragement in their power.

3. We hope to enlist a class of persons who can give in the larger sums ranging from one thousand to ten thousand dollars each, and we think that a number of such persons can be found.

4. We hope to reach at least fifty of our strongest churches, who will give from two hundred and fifty to one thousand dollars each, either as an immediate donation or on the installment plan. To be more specific, we want to reach ten churches that will give $1,000 each, twenty churches that will give $500 each and twenty others that will give $250 each. This will make $25,000. There are surely that many churches that will make a special effort in this emergency. If any churches wish to pay their subscription on the installment plan, on two or three or five years' time, it will meet the requirements of the case.

5. A movement is being inaugurated among the alumni and old students of the college for the endowment of one or more special chairs. This movement is placed in the hands of one of the alumni of the college, who will make the work a specialty and secure the largest possible results.

6. Last of all, we expect to make the commencement week in 1900 the greatest week the institution has ever seen. We are planning for four special days: an Undergraduate Day, an Alumni Day, a Graduate and Old Students' Day and a Pioneer and Eclectic Institute Day. It will be remembered that Hiram College began as an academy under the title of Eclectic Institute. Seventeen years of its history were made under that name. We hope to bring thousands of people to the old historic hills during commencement week. Each day spoken of is in the hands of a special committee who will take special steps to make it as attractive as possible. In general, I will say that we hope to make this commencement week more of an occasion of rejoicing than for money-getting, and we hope to be able to celebrate, with thanksgiving, the establishment of the institution on a solid financial basis.

7. Will the friends of education everywhere keep this great Hiram Movement in their eye, and lend it support in every possible way? In the meantime join the great popular movement and send your name to E. V. Zollars, Hiram, O., agreeing to pay $1 or more. One name now is worth two names a year from now.

Texas Letter.

It has been a little more than a third of a century since the war between the North and the South closed. "Fire-eaters" on both sides have done all in their power to keep the sores of that awful struggle open and bleeding, and they have succeeded all too well. But this work now seems to be over, and the reign of peace and good will grows stronger and sweeter each day. Two recent incidents show this. Not long since a delegation of Texans went to Kokomo, Ind., to return the battleflag of the fifty-seventh Indiana volunteers, which that regiment lost during the war. Now a similar delegation from Indiana is to come to Texas to return the captured battleflag of Terry's Texas Rangers, which was lost in a battle near Coosaville, Ala., during the same struggle. This flag was captured by the seventeenth regiment of Indiana mounted infantry volunteers. In the light of history like this is it not about time that churches divided on old-time war issues should bury their differences and become one again?

R. F. Carter remains at Orange indefinitely. This is good. Prolong the pastorate and generally the work is made strong. Their new house, when completed—the best in town—is soon to be finished.

J. B. Haston is pushing the work in that most important field, Galveston. We must have a strong church in this the great seaport of the South.

J. M. Campbell and wife, of Van Alstyne, have suffered a great loss of late. Their house, almost paid for, was burned, with all their clothing, furniture, books, etc. Only a light insurance. Tenderest sympathy.

J. A. Clark, Thorp Spring, the aged father of Addison and Randolph Clark, is very sick. All that love and skill can do is being done for him, but it is feared in vain. He has passed far beyond the allotted time of man, and none will be surprised if he is taken from us. The family has the sympathy of all.

J. B. Sweeney begins his pastorate at Gainesville with a great meeting. Already there have been about one hundred additions, and the whole town is aroused, which insures many more. Sweeney is one of our all-round men, succeeding equally well as teacher, pastor and evangelist.

W. K. Homan, editor of the Courier, has again been in his glory. He is the recognized leader of the Prohibition hosts of the state, and is never happier than when leading them to battle. His last battle was at Palestine, where he displayed his usual shrewdness and heroism, but the odds were so heavily against him that victory for the present was impossible. He says it will come later—that this struggle will prove the foundation for it. Our Palestine pastor, R. R. Hamlin, stood by him during the fight.

"The Great Revival and the Little Tent Meeting, or Christian Experience of To-day," is Vol. I, number 1, of Christian Tract Series of the Oracle Pub. Co., 358 Dearborn St., Chicago, and it is a good beginning of a most important work. We have too few tracts, and what we have cost too much, and often are too stiff in style. But this one has neither of these faults. The style is easy and racy, abounding with clear reasoning and sprightly dialogue; and the monthly series is only 50 cents a year. The Courier of this city has inaugurated a similar enterprise.

Samuel Colcord, of New York City, delivered his lecture in reply to Ingersoll in this city recently. Any community afflicted by Ingersollism would do well to have Mr. Colcord visit it. His manner is pleasant, his methods are fair, his spirit is sweet and his argument is unanswerable.

What Ought Our Papers to Publish?

In the Christian Standard of March 4 there appeared an article on the above subject, written by Bro. H. W. B. Myrick. As to what he says about that address on "Infant Baptism," I do not care to speak. In my ministry I oppose sectarianism, because I regard it as a source of much evil. And as a basis of union we baptize men and women on confession of their faith in Christ, give them the Bible and permit them to read and think for themselves. We know no Jew, no Greek, no bond, no free, no male, no female, no clergy, no laity; but regard all men as equal. And I regard as out of harmony with this plea such expressions as these by Bro. Myrick: "We are a separate people, distinct and distinguished from other bodies of religionists. Our teaching, our exposition of the gospel of Christ, is radically different, often diametrically opposed to the teaching of our religious neighbors. Our papers ought to publish articles written by brethren, setting forth and defending our teaching and practice. Our papers should be conducted in the interest of our people. We have no time to flirt with amiable ministers of the denominations, giving our papers to the dissemination of their fancies or compromises." When I turn to the life and works of Campbell, Scott and other early preachers of the Reformation, I do not find such a marked difference between their sermons and those of other religious teachers as to warrant us in calling it a new exposition of the gospel. The thirteen points of agreement as stated by Isaac Errett, in his tract on "Our Position," include all the facts of the gospel. Political matters and questions of church polity have divided the Christian world and not the essential elements of the gospel. The greatest barrier to Christian union is and always has been the desire of one man to force his opinions and his conceptions of the Christian life upon others. Man loves to speak with authority, and with kingly power compel his fellowmen to accept his opinions. We often see this spirit manifested in the elders of a congregation or in preachers when in convention assembled. But Christ's way is to "let each man be fully assured in his own mind." How long will it be until the church is made free from bishops and elders, and will acknowledge Christ as its only head and look to him as Prophet, Priest and King. The Truth has never suffered nearly so much in the hands of the common people as from bishops and elders. Martin Luther saw this, and undertook to restore the Bible to the people. But not until Alexander Campbell did we have a free and unbiased study of religious differences in oral and written debate. Truth has never suffered from thus allowing the people to view it alongside of falsehood. Indeed, this is God's way of dealing with man. In the Bible he shows us good and evil, heaven and hell, and asks us to choose whom we will serve. Let our religious papers be a means of showing the world both sides, truth and error. Sectarian papers do not publish articles written by men belonging to another sect. The other day I was denied the privilege of preaching in a Methodist church house. Shall we follow their example, and begin to salute our brethren only, or shall we invite the Gentiles into our synagogues and endeavor by love and sound doctrine to win them to Christ. Our desire is not to be a separate and distinct body of people, but that we may break down denominational walls, and have but "one Lord, one faith and one baptism." We are not the only Christians, but Christians only.

Ready to Help.

TO THE CHURCHES AND PREACHERS OF SOUTHERN ILLINOIS: I am now on the field, and holding a few days' meeting at this place. We are ready to hold a meeting or help you hold one, also ready to help you to secure work, and help the churches to secure good preachers. Write me at Mt. Vernon, also be ready to contribute to state work when I come. Brethren, let us put forth an earnest effort and come to the front this year.

Fraternally, A. C. EATON,
Asst. Evangelist, S. I. C. C.

Another Change.

For several years it has been felt that the state work was hampered by the need of permanent headquarters. So much of the work of the secretary pertains to the immense correspondence, and this has grown to such proportions that it practically demands all his time. So long ago as the Independence convention, that body voted that the state board take steps at once for the establishment of office headquarters in Kansas City.

Still, on the score of economy your board hesitated, but now they feel that it will be the wisest economy to obey the expressed wishes of the convention and have taken steps to open the office at 1123 Oak Street, Kansas City. An office girl will be employed, who will be on duty all the time, and to all our friends the latch string will be hanging on the outside. Come and visit the office while in the city. Come and supply yourself with literature about state missions. Come, and we can tell you more than we can write of the needs of the field.

Now is the time to push state mission matters. Only a little while and the Home Mission board will be calling for your attention. We need your assistance now. More money is needed to pay the men already in the field, and more men are needed for the harvest that is wasting. Brethren, we crave your help; give it now, not grudgingly, but as becometh the chilrden of God.

Remember, after March 27, 1123 Oak Street, Kansas City till then, 4144 Westminster Place, St. Louis, Mo. Yours in His name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

The following card was sent to us with request that it be published "just as I have written it."—EDITOR.

I am contemplating a Western tour through Illinois, Missouri and Arkansas, as "general evangelist," and desire making this announcement through the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and thus give all needy churches or communities, an opportunity of securing my services for a meeting, money or no money; relying on the voluntary contributions be it much or little, trusting in the Lord for results. I can afford to do this, and want to do all in my power for the salvation of souls and the upbuilding of the Church of Christ. Address me at Frankfort, Ind., and let your wants and needs be known as soon as possible. HENRY CLAY CANTER.

Quick Action Needed.

Now that the March offering is out of the way we must call attention to the needs of the state work. Our men in the field are needing their money. It needs to be emphasized that these men are poor in everything except faith in God and heroic, faithful service. We must have some funds at once in order that these men who need their money may be paid.

This must be raised at once in order not to interfere with the collections for general Home Missions. Appeals of the most urgent character are constantly coming in for help from new fields and your board cannot enter them on account of the empty treasury. What is the need of the Missouri brotherhood? Do you believe that this work which has done so much to help bring the development to our cause in this state, of which we are all so proud, ought to be supported? Brother minister, what do you say? Upon you more than any one else depends this matter. I venture that the congregations are very few in the whole state who would not help if the pastor presented State Missions in an urgent way. Can I help you in bringing the matter before your congregation? If I can, send for me and I will do it. But anyway, quick, decisive action is imperative. Who will answer first?

Yours in His name,
T. A. ABBOTT, Cor. Sec.

Illinois News.

We have recently enjoyed a few days' visit from our esteemed friend and colaborer, R. E. Dunlap, of Seattle, Wash. The church greatly appreciated the addresses given last Lord's day by him upon the history of the missionary work in the great Northwest. Grand opportunities are presenting themselves to us, but we have not the men nor the means to enter and take these fields for Christ and the church.

We have had the fellowship for some time in our work here of Eld. T. J. Underwood, of Dawson, Ill. He has been sick for the past six weeks, but is now convalescing and we hope ere long to see him in his accustomed place in the house of God. Oh, that God would raise unto us many more such men of heroic faith and good works!

The health of Eld. Thos. E. Bondurant has been very precarious at times during the past winter and we have greatly missed his genial face in our services. Recently two united with the church from our Sunday-school. Our superintendent, Miss Lucy Thornton, who was married Dec. 28, 1898 to Mr. Geo. R. Trenchard, a worthy young man living near DeLand, is still as earnest and zealous in the work as ever and seeks to inspire the same faithfulness in all departments of the school. It is said we have a model school. It is well classified and is doing efficient work for the Master.

We now have an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. of over 20 members. May God bless these noble women who labor with me in the gospel. We hope this influence will extend until the whole church shall be leavened thereby.

Many people burn the candle of life at both ends. Some men who never go into vicious dissipation use up their energies just as much by overwork or late hours; and nearly all women are compelled by circumstances to use up their vital powers beyond all reason: It may be in housework; or social demands; or the bearing and rearing of children; At any rate the candle of life is too rapidly consumed.

Some people need to have their natural vigor constantly reinforced in the same proportion that it is used up. They need the fortifying help of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is a powerful alterative and invigorant of the digestive functions and liver; it cleanses the blood, and makes fresh blood and healthy flesh. Nervous, debilitated women should take it in conjunction with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription which is specially designed for female weakness and nervous troubles.

Mrs. Sallie Kauffman, of Virgil City, Cedar Co., Mo., writes: "I had suffered from displacement of internal organs and female weakness for one year. Had a bearing down sensation and very disagreeable feeling after my second child was born; I could be on my feet only a few minutes until he was six weeks old, then I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Favorite Prescription.' I took seven bottles in all. After taking the first bottle I felt much better. I think I am entirely cured of all my troubles. I can do all my work and am on my feet all day. I am in much better health now than I have been in four years; am fleshy and gaining strength very fast."

By writing to Dr. Pierce who is chief consulting physician of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y., careful professional advice will be obtained free of cost and specially adapted to the individual case. Dr. Pierce's great 1000-page Medical Adviser will be sent free for 21 cents; the cost of postage.

To the Iowa Preachers.

We have taken our March offering, and let us stir ourselves in behalf of the I. C. C.

Take an offering as soon as possible and avoid confliction with the May collection.

We have 430 churches in Iowa and only 177 of them contributed to the I. C. C. We have 345 preachers in Iowa and only 171 of them secured an offering for this work, while 302 sent a contribution to the F. C. M. S. These same preachers and churches sent $6,589.42 to the F. C. M. S. and only $1,295.24 to the I. C. C. in 1898.

We haven't enough churches and preachers in Iowa who remember the F. C. M. S., but we must have more who will help the I. C. C.

A number of promising fields are begging us for help, but our treasury is empty.

Do not be satisfied with just paying your apportionment; double it if possible. I earnestly pray that this burden may rest on the heart of every preacher and every Disciple in Iowa. Will you not gladden our hearts by sending a liberal contribution from every congregation? B. S. DENNY, Cor. Sec.

Free to Everybody.

Dr. J. M. Willis, a specialist of Crawfordsville, Indiana, will send free by mail to all who send him their address, a package of Pansy Compound, which is a two weeks' treatment with printed instructions, and is a positive cure for constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous or sick headache, la grippe and blood poison.

The New Church Home at Barry.

The new house of worship dedicated at Barry, Ill., March 5th, of which the above is a good picture, cost $8,471. The lot cost, in addition to the house, $1,050. The house was dedicated by F. M. Rains, of Cincinnati, assisted by N. E. Cory, the pastor. The sum of $4,000 was raised at the dedication and all indebtedness fully provided for. Bro. Cory has been with this church eighteen months and has been active in pushing forward the work of the church and its new house. This congregation was organized in 1843. The house out of which the church has just moved was built in 1848. The new house presents a very attractive appearance, but it is the interior of the church that is especially pleasing and attractive.

N. E. CORY.

Everything in it harmonizes, and the general effect is all that could be desired. It is divided into four rooms—two large and two small rooms—all being separated by sliding wooden partitions. The main auditorium is 44 feet square with the pulpit platform in the southeast corner. The other large room is 24 by 46 feet, and will be used by the Sunday-school and as a lecture room. These two rooms can be made as one by raising the sliding partitions; and in this way a congregation of nearly 600 persons can be seated, as the main auditorium has seats for 340 persons and the lecture and Sunday-school room 225, and more can be seated without overcrowding their capacity. Besides the two large rooms there are two small rooms just behind the pulpit platform. The furniture and finish of the rooms are all of oak. The light is supplied by a Eureka acetelyne gas machine and the heat by one of Schill's new hot-air furnaces. All the rooms are carpeted The dedication was both joyful and impressive. The present pastor, whose likeness appears in this paper, has been with the church at Barry since Nov. 1, 1897.

Illinois Notes.

Our evangelist, M. L. Anthony, Elkhart, closed a meeting at Newton with 30 additions. He will hold you a good meeting if you write him.

J T. Alsup, 4th district evangelist, closed at Delavan with nine baptisms and five added otherwise. The church was reorganized, money raised to pay for preaching half time and T. T. Holton employed.

Our meeting at Indianola was stormed out, but a mission of 23 people was organized. Byron Piatt, Sidell, will preach there twice a month and a meeting will be conducted in the fall. H. A. Easton, Danville, sang for us, and too much praise cannot be given him as a leader of song. Courteous, manly and of a good spirit, he is a power in many ways to a revival.

Churches in need of regular preaching will do well to write me, as I have some good men on my list. Churches in need of young men full of promise but just beginning, and willing to work on very easy terms, will please write me. Men who propose to "enter the ministry" provided a good place and strong salary are provided need not write at all.

Most districts have programs well on the way, and it is hoped that every preacher will attend his district convention and bring a delegation. Why should every other interest be blessed with good conventions and the greatest cause on earth receive indifference? Brethren, push your district conventions.

THE NEW CHURCH AT BARRY, ILL.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

Ocean Wave, Ralls County, is one of the schools that never permits home troubles nor hard times to interfere with their giving to our work, so that Brother Bragg Glascock has remitted the larger part of the school apportionment for this year, and the other will follow. R. D. Chinn preaches for them again.

The demand for the Home Department cards has been large, especially the calls from other states, and we have been supplying them as if they were in Missouri, and will continue doing so with pleasure. But Missourians are not going into it as they should, though all joining send good reports as to results, and we want 5,000 in our Missouri Home Department before the June convention.

With our steadfast friend, W. S. St. Clair, I had a series of appointments in the county of Boone, but the descending rains were so persistent, then the freeze was so severe, that only one meeting was had, and not many of the Olivet brethren could come. Those who did come were prompt to respond to our call for help, as all of Bro. St. Clair's churches are. In his home time was happily spent discussing matters pertaining to the kingdom of God, and the host sent me away cheerful by his promise to see to the offering, if I did not get to see the people. For such as he and his, bless the Lord.

At Armstrong we met the blizzard of the season, which with the roads cut off the attendance so that the brethren did not take their foreign offering, so few being present. The school is under two denominations, with Brother J. A. McKee, a most devoted Christian man, at the head; and his heart's prayer and desire for the children is their salvation, and with such I love to work. In the drills the children did fine, while the other schools gave hearty co-operation, so that the visit was delightfully enjoyed. Brother McKee arranged to follow up the drills, hoping for even better results in the Lord's service, and under such a man I am sure it will be so, while Brother Evans, superintendent of the Baptist, as well as Brother McKee, was very prompt in helping support our institute. This was Brother W. M. Featherston's last day, closing his five years' work, and the church almost unanimously opposed his having to give them up, but the work goes into the hands of G. A. Hoffmann, whom the retiring preacher very heartily and properly commended for his work's sake. At the Munday Hotel we found such friends as only consider it a pleasure to entertain the preacher, thanks to Brother and Sister Munday and the girls and to other kind friends in the name of Christ.

H. S. Saxby and the Kearney brethren send word that their apportionments will be met during the year, as they have been in the past, and as this year was. Not content with this, H. S. says that it will be seen to at his other preaching point also, for which I thank him in the Master's name.

We are now striking the hard places in our work: Brother Gaylor going to Carter, Brother Wood on his way to Oregon, and Brother Giddens will soon be in Taney; and it will be all that we can do to keep them in such territory by very, very promptly remitting their salaries, which we must do while they will necessarily meet many most discouraging circumstances and obstacles. But trusting in God, they have entered to conquer; and we will hear good from them at the convention, in fact before the convention, and more of it in detail at Plattsburg.

In our last quarter's cards you will see that we have so far organized four new congregations, eighteen new Bible-schools; raised the money for eight new houses, and had 175 additions to the church, with nearly 900 to the schools, so that you may rejoice with us in so good a work for Christ, asking your help promptly.

An Unfavorable Day.

In many parts of the country the first Sunday in March was not favorable for taking the offering for Foreign Missions. A blizzard is reported in the Northwest. In some of the Central States there was either snow or rain. The roads were all but impassable in the country districts. As a matter of course the audiences were reduced one-half or three-fourths.

The preparations were never before so thorough. The offering was never before so well advertised. In no previous year was the outlook so bright and so full of promise. The inclement day defeated all plans and disappointed all hopes.

As the Foreign Society has only one day for its offering, this is a most serious matter. The obligations are greater than ever before. They are not affected by sunshine or storm. New work has been projected; new fields are to be entered. The Society has formed these plans, expecting a marked increase in the offerings. These plans cannot be carried out unless the society receives considerably more money this year than it did last. We ask, therefore, and urge that in every church where the full apportionment was not reached that a second attempt be made. Let every member have a chance to give as the Lord has prospered him. Let no one be deprived of the privilege and the blessing of giving to carry the gospel to those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death.

Strategic Importance of America in the World's Civilization and Evangelization.

Men come and go, but institutions which incarnate great moral forces are enduring. The founders of such institutions die and their unfinished work is handed to their successors, but their labors, their purposes, and their hopes are consecrated by the forming years, and will live and control the thought and inspire the activity of those whom our God shall call to enter in their labors.

In the fifty years' history of the American Christian Missionary Society we have much upon which to congratulate the brotherhood: the great names of our people cluster around that history; the 2,185 churches she has organized, the 87,000 souls brought into Christ by her missionaries, the fact that about her have been men pure of heart and of noble services, the fact that her corresponding secretaries have all been men whose lives have been above reproach and who have served faithfully—all these are matters of congratulation to the churches as we come to the jubilee offering of the society.

But we cannot spend the time in congratulations; our responsibilities are so heavy that we have but a word on that side of the matter, and then we must apply our minds and our hearts to the problems and duties that lie before us in Home Missions. We believe that if the long procession of the fathers could speak to us from their abode in the better land they would rebuke all fulsome eulogy of their lives and work, but would speak to us to inspire us to larger services and longer harvests than were permitted to them.

Our home field is so vast that it is difficult to compare it in imagination, but in area and in capacity to support population the United States excells all Europe. Europe has culminated in power; America has just come into the morning of her day of influence. It would take the imagination of an archangel to tell what America is to do in the civilization and evangelization of the world in the next five hundred years.

All history shows that the religion of Christ is the only effective agency for removing moral malaria from the atmosphere of human society. The motive of patriotism, the motive of national destiny, the throb of love for the land that bore us, urges to give new power to the American Christian Missionary Society to preach the gospel of the New Testament in North America.

This is the subject that should be uppermost in the minds of our brethren for the next few weeks. BENJ. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

March Offering Improving.

The record for the first sixteen days of March is most encouraging. While there has been a small loss in the number of contributing churches, owing to the severe storms in almost every part of the country, there has been an encouraging gain in the receipts:

Decatur, March 18.—S. M. Martin's meeting at the Tabernacle Church continues with unabated interest. Bro. Martin is a preacher of wonderful power and his large audiences compose some of the best people of the city. A great many are in attendance from the other churches. There have been 40 or 50 additions since the meeting began. The lecture last Sunday afternoon was said to be the best ever delivered to women in Decatur. It was grand from start to finish. The Harrison meeting, in full blast at the First M. E. Church, don't interfere with the Tabernacle meeting in the least. The people will go to hear the old gospel preached. There is one thing our evangelist should do, and that is to urge all of the new converts to take the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST or one of our good church papers, then there would be very few that would go back into the world, if they would read our church papers.—J. P. RICHARDSON.

La Grippe Cured

This modern malady has become dreaded not more for its direct fatality than for the weakness of body and mind it leaves behind it. Prolonged debility, permanent prostration, melancholy and suicide follow La Grippe. For this disease there is no remedy superior to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

"The best remedy for la grippe that I know of is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."
REV. JOHN K. CHASE,
South Hampton, N. H.

"My wife and five children were taken down with la grippe, while the disease was so widely prevalent. I dosed them with Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and before using quite two bottles my family was restored to health. I know of several obstinate cases of the same complaint which were also cured by this remedy." J. PARMINTER, Shall I Ever be Satisfied?

BY W. T. MOORE.

I shall be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness.—Ps. 17:15.

Satisfied? Why, yes. What bright and glorious ending
Of life's sad struggle and of death's dark hour!
At last the light and shadows both are blending
In one great picture of transforming power.

Satisfied? No tongue can tell the wonderous story
Of that sweet fellowship we shall have with him,
When we have reached the land of bliss and glory,
The land where eyes shall nevermore be dim.

Satisfied? The precious promise now is ringing
In my listening ears, and telling of the days to come,
When all our sad notes shall be changed to singing
The joy-songs of our bright and heavenly home.

I shall be satisfied in that glorious morning
When walking in his likeness I'll see his lovely face,
When his righteousness shall be my bright adorning,
And my salvation is secured through his wondrous grace.

Temperance.

In considering this subject, it may be well to study briefly what we understand to be included in the term. It is a question which modern thinkers concede to be the greatest living issue of the day. Nor is it a question of modern times only. For history tells us that 2,000 years before Christ, overindulgence in strong drink was punishable by death in some parts of China.

The dictionary says temperance is habitual moderation. In other words, to use in moderation those things which we find to use. The things we find to use naturally divide themselves into two classes: First, things which are useful and necessary; second, those that are not only not necessary, but injurious. The same principle cannot hold good in both of these cases. The word temperence cannot mean the same when applied to those things essential to our health and happiness, such as healthful and nutritious food, as when applied to those things which are destructive to our health and well-being, such as stupifying drugs or strong drink. The distinction between the useful and necessary, and the hurtful and injurious, is distinctly drawn in the Word of God, which is the only safe and reliable guide to our conduct.

We read in Proverbs 25:16: "Hast thou found honey? Eat so much as is sufficient for thee, lest thou be filled therewith and vomit it." And in verse 17: "Withdraw thy foot from thy neighbor's house lest he be wearied of thee and so hate thee."

Wise old Solomon understood, even so long ago, that though honey in moderation is both good and healthful, too much of it is very bad; and that to visit thy neighbors in moderation is a pleasure and a rest to one's soul. If carried to excess it will most likely lead to trouble. Many other Scripture passages might be quoted, all bearing the same injunction; be moderate and prudent in the use of things useful and necessary.

In Thessalonians 5:22 Paul answers our second class of things when he says: "Abstain from all appearance of evil." Here we are commanded not only to abstain from evil, but from everything that looks like evil. Why? Lest our brothers, seeing, us should fall through what appears to him to be evil in us.

Saloons, warm and inviting, brilliant with light and music, are planted on nearly every other street corner. From them come forth men who have left there both their manhood and money, thus robbing their families of the guiding hand and personal influence which, as heads of families, it is their duty to give, in purity and cleanliness as well as money support. And more sorrowful still, women are sometimes seen emerging from wine rooms, which often form an adjunct to the gilded palace that fronts the street—women who have been honored, because God chose one woman to be the mother of his Son. Do you realize that here in our own beautiful city there are more than 1,800 licensed saloons? If each one's receipts average $20 a day, and this is most likely put too low, it would foot up to $13,140,000 a year. If this amount should be spent in improving and beautifying the city, caring for the afflicted and preaching the gospel, in one year we should be ready for the second coming the Lord! I feel humiliated every time I think of our government granting men license to manufacture and sell intoxicating liquors. I would suggest that if they be allowed to sell or give away their stock, that for this privilege they shall support every drunkard while he lives and bury him when he dies. Support and educate every drunkard's family; defend every criminal whose crime is committed through liquor; pay the support of all such criminals and their families, and, in short, instead of paying the state for the privilege of making criminals, pay the state's expenses for the criminals they have made.

Who can measure the poverty, the degradation and shame caused by this awful traffic? The heartaches of mothers, wives, sons and daughters, who sit in agony over ruined homes, seeing precious souls drifting farther and farther from God as the days go by, well knowing that their future is death—for no drunkard can enter heaven. Yet the drunkard is the product of certain conditions, behind which is something or somebody responsible for them. Are you helping to form and support these conditions? Am I? Do I, if a Christian voter, cast my vote as I would if the Nazerene stood by my side? Do I, if a father set my children an example worthy for them to follw—forgetting that if I say to my son, "Never smoke, my boy; 'tis an expensive and unhealthy habid," then light my pipe or cigar? I had better kept silent.

An Appropriate Text.

A little girl who lives uptown went to church last Sunday. She is a bright little maiden and, considering her tender age, only six, she is decidedly intelligent. Her mother has been suffering from the grip and didn't accompany her, and as her father was away from home she went alone.

Whether it was the loneliness of the big pew or whether the church was poorly heated, mamma wasn't quite sure, but, anyway, the little maid came home and declared she was very chilly.

"My toes got so cold while I was sitting there, mamma," she declared. "And so did my fingers and my nose. I don't believe there was hardly a speck of fire in the furnace."

"That was too bad," said mamma, "did the other people seem to suffer, too?"

"Oh, yes they did," cried the little maid. "They just shivered!"

Then mamma thought she would divert the little maid's attention.

"What was the text, dear?" she asked; "can you remember it?"

"I should think I could," was the quick answer; "I can 'member every word of it."

"Well, what was it?"

"The little maid put her head on one side, and, screwing up her face, shrilly intoned:

"'Many are cold, but few are frozen!'"

And mamma had to admit that it seemed remarkably appropriate.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Commended to God.

BY J. F. WILLIAMS.

"Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."—Jesus.

"Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit"—
In the Morning of life when I know not the way;
When the bud is unfolding, the light softly breaking,
And my footsteps are nearing the throng of the day.

"Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit"—
In the Meridian of life when the day's toil is on;
In the midst of perplexities that come full unbidden,
Undream'd and unthought of in days that are gone.

"Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit"—
At the Sunset of life, when the story is told;
When the earth and its cares are grown dim to my vision,
And my spirit would rest in the heavenly fold.

A Glimpse of Home Life.

When you ring the bell at the Home you can hear the noise of children's voices inside and you may wonder if no one has heard you ring, or why should they keep you waiting so long? You ring again, and perhaps you will see two or three inquisitive little faces peep through the curtains, but still no one offers to let you in.

But you must be patient, for Clara, our little doorkeeper, works in the dining room and has to take time to slip on her clean apron before she greets you. It would do you good to know Clara and her little sister, Bertie, for they are two of the sweetest, most refined little girls you ever saw. Bertie is nine years old. Fair as a lily, with such beautiful golden hair. Clara is a little mother to her, although she is only eleven. They are so devoted to each other and so gentle and kind to every one. We feel that they would be such a blessing in some one's home, and yet we cannot bear the thought of separating them. We would be so glad to find homes for them in the same locality, at least. Visitors almost always say, "Why, they all seem so happy and bright." You must remember that they are children, and it is just as natural for children to be happy, when they are kindly treated, as it is for the rose to unfold in the sunshine and shed its sweet perfume on the air.

Some of these little hearts have been burdened with care and sorrow, but that natural love for home and parents, brothers and sisters, is there, no matter how poor and mean the surroundings may have been.

To see the little girl of four years sitting rocking the baby of two years, singing and trying to look happy for the baby's sake, when her own little heart is bursting with the longing for papa. Or the boy of nine crying over the baby, Willie, who is deaf, and saying so pitifully, "Willie is crying for mamma." But it does not take long to win their love and confidence, and then it is quite a different picture. More joyful but just as sweet to see the boy of nine with a happy smile on his face as he says, "Why, Willie clings to Madie just like he does to mamma, and I can't hardly get away from papa Williamson."

Regular habits, wholesome food, Christian teaching and example, with loving hearts to govern, are the principles of our Home and whatever success may come is for the glory of Christ.

There are discouraging moments, of course, for there must be so many rules in so large a house, with so many in family, and no matter how small the disobedience may seem, if it is a disobedience at all, it must receive a just punishment. I can never hope for perfect obedience from every member, but I do hope by continued earnestness, patience and loving correction to implant the principles that will make some of God's noblest men and women.

Riding the Singletree.

BY R. J. TYDINGS.

I have heard teamsters call a certain habit of horses "riding the singletree." This is a pulling back, balking and shirking their duty of helping to pull the load. Oftentimes when at this bad habit their hindlegs come in contact with the singletree. Thus not only is the horse not pulling his part of the load, but he is adding to the already double load imposed on his faithful mate who is doing his part the best he can. This is about the worst habit to which a horse can be addicted, without it is real viciousness, such as kicking, biting and the like. An animal acting in this way must be summarily dealt with, somehow, to make him quit it, or be taken out of the team; and if he is not broken of the habit you will readily perceive that he is in decided disrepute with all who may have anything to do with him.

I have seen young people in the strength and vigor of their young lives fritter away their time, and on any and all occasions, refuse to help some patient and hardworking mother or father pull along the cares and duties of the home life. Doing nothing to help carry along their part of the load of every-day duties, they appropriate to themselves, as a matter of course, all the pleasures and recreations that happen to fall in the way of the family. "It's all right," they say; "the old folks do not care, they're old anyway and wouldn't partake of such things, or go to this place or that if I were to ask them," etc. Here is a plain case of riding the singletree. Such young people ought to be dealt with in some way as to effect the same result desired in the horse. Don't you think so?

A patient, industrious and long-suffering wife toils over the sewing machine and, perchance, the wash tub and ironing board, to supply herself, several small children and a drunken and therefore worthless husband, and grows weaker day by day in her great struggle to pull a double load.

Here's riding the singletree again in its worst form, and such a case calls for immediate action from some power to remove this life-destroying incumbrance from the team if he cannot be made to put his shoulder to the collar and thus pull his part of the load. Don't you think so?

Again, a church has a hard-working and conscientious pastor who is doing the best he can to pull along the church in its work of saving souls and carrying aloft the standard of Christian living, but quite a large contigent of his congregation pull back, fault-find, criticize, want to have their way or nothing, while a few stand by the pastor and try as best they can to aid and uphold him in his work. Don't you see the resemblance of this fault-finding element to the horse referred to? Here's work for some reformatory power again, either to lash up this refractory part of the membership so that it will pull its part of the load or—or something else—but what? "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

At the Bank of England.

The Bank of England has a list of twenty questions which are presented for answer to every man, young or old, who applies for a situation in the bank. The first one is, "How do you spend your Sundays?" If he is not able to answer truthfully that he attends church regularly, no other question is asked. Those who go to the house of God regularly to worship, have impressed upon them truths and influences which are the grertest in their power to fit men to resist temptation. Character is what is to be depended on in responsible positions. Character is what counts, and there are no influences for its upbuilding and its safeguarding like those to be met of the house of God.—Herald and Presbyter.

Said one little chick, with a funny little squirm,
"I wish I could find a nice fat worm."
Said another little chick, with a queer little shrug,
"I wish I could find a nice fat bug."

Less Noise an' Mo' Light.

Some years ago Bourke Cockran and Charles O'Ferrall, both celebrated Democratic campaign spellbinders, made speeches at the same meeting. O'Ferrall followed Cockran, and took advantage of the fact to pay back old scores. The incident is recalled by Alfred Henry Lewis, in his new paper the Verdict. O'Ferrall spoke as follows,

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: As I sat listening to the gentleman, and reflected on the riot of words without purpose or aim, or any fleeting, passing glimmer of good sense he was unloading on this house, I began to feel like the old darky who was plodding and splashing homeward through a midnight thunderstorm. The winds were blowing and the rain was sheeting down. Every other moment a flash of lightning slashed the heavens briefly like a knife of fire. Then followed the thunders, rolling crash on crash, as if the very roots of the hills were being torn from their home in the ages. The lightning would last but a second, and then leave the poor old darky in blacker night than ever. But the thunders were incessant; their rollings were without end. At last the old darky became frlghtened, and, following a thunderous peal of unusual horror, he plumped down on his knees in the mud and began to pray. 'Oh! Lawd,' he cried, 'far be it from one so humble as I to tell Thee Thy business. But if it's all the same to Thee an' doan't pester Thee or change too much Thy infinite plans, couldn't this storm be managed so as to give us a little less noise an' a leetle mo' light? Amen!"—The New Voice.

Education.

BY PROF. W. W. DAVIS.

"Education!" exclaimed Dr. Samuel Hanson Cox, an eminent Presbyterian minister of the last generation, "education! What an idea! Generalized, it covers all time, affects all eternity!" Education! It is the transforming influence of the world. It is the difference between the United States and Mexico, between England and Turkey. It is the basis of our Christian culture. It takes the Indian of the plains and puts him into the shop of the mechanic. It takes the negro from the cabin and makes him the owner of a plantation. It carries the Bible to the cannibal and makes him a child of the kingdom.

Education works wonders. It spans the continent with bands of steel; it drives floating palaces across the sea; it circles the earth with the message of the lightning; it analyzes the sunbeam; it weighs the stars; it reads the testimony of the rocks; it throws bridges across the yawning chasm; it brings to light the buried cities of the past; it lifts the cathedral spire to the dome of heaven.

Education grasps the pen and gives us the poem, the essay, the novel, the drama, the oration, the historic record—Longfellow and Lamb, Dickens and Sheridan, Webster and Macaulay.

Education siezes the pencil, and the world stands in admiration before the Last Supper and the Sistine Madonna, Da Vinci and Raphael.

Education takes the chisel, and from the marble block appears the glorious Jupiter of Phidias and the majestic Moses of Michael Angelo.

Education lifts the lyre, and heavenly harmony fills the soul in the Messiah of Handel, in the sonata of Beethoven.

Education of the hand and heart, of the mind and soul! Unceasing, endless, infinite, eternal! No subject too profound for its grasp, no thought too exalted for its touch.

Moses and St. Paul, Plato and Demosthenes, Luther and St. Augustine, Newton and Shakespeare, Gœthe and Mendelssohn, Edwards and Emerson.

Could I in stature reach the pole,
Or grasp creation in my span,
I'd still be measured by my soul;
The mind's the stature of the man.

When You Study, Study.

Lord Macaulay, the celebrated writer, was a great student, and when he studied, he studied. He used to get up at 5 o'clock and study till 9 or 10. He got so he could read Latin or Greek right off-hand the same as you can this. He had the power of putting his whole mind on his book.

Many people put part of their mind on their work and the rest on something else. But all this is wrong. Play when you play, and when you study, study.

In study, all the faculties are needed—reason, to judge what you read; memory, to recollect it; and so with all the rest. Macaulay became one of the most distinguished writers of his time, and it was mainly by dint of this early habit of his, putting his entire mind at the disposal of the work before him.

All cannot study alike, but we can all be deeply in earnest in whatever it is that we do, and only downright earnestness will cause us to succeed in life.—Catholic News.

Length of the Foot.

A London anatomist is authority for the statement that the ideal foot should be the length of the ulna, a bone in the forearm, which extends from the protuberance in the outer portion of the wrist to the elbow. Of course the ulna is longer in tall people, and to be graceful the foot should be also.

Many people may be surprised that the foot should be as long as the forearm, and might be inclined to dispute the fact unless proved by demonstration. But so it is in the perfectly formed woman.—Sunny South.

God never asked an impossible thing of his children. Off with it, that ugliness of disposition, that miserliness, that pride, that abominable spite. Off with your rags, every one of you, and then, the robes of Christ's righteousness, white like the sun!

HOW STONE IN THE BLADDER

Was Removed Without a Surgical Operation.

This Case Was One of so Much Interest Because of its Severity That it Was Known for Miles Around.

Below Will be Found an Interesting History of the Case, Written by Mr. Bailey Himself.

A sense of profound gratitude and joy prompts me to write this letter. I had suffered for ten years with kidney and bladder trouble. Last August I was taken with terrible pain in my kidneys which extended to the bladder. The urine that I passed, after standing awhile, became thick and ropy, or muddy; left quantities of sediment in vessel, and gave me great agony to void it. Upon advice of my physician I finally consented to go to the Hospital at Raleigh. When I got there the chief surgeon examined me, and said it would be necessary to remove the stone from the bladder by a surgical operation. This he admitted was dangerous, owing to my age and feeble condition. I decided if I must die I would go home and die with my family. After I returned from the Hospital in a despondent and almost hopeless state of mind, I took your certificate and pamphlet, sent with the sample bottle of Swamp-Root, and went to a kind and wise friend and we read the circulars, and discussed my symptoms and the chances of my recovery, should I submit to an operation. We decided to try your medicine, and if no relief after a thorough trial to risk the knife. After taking the sample bottle I bought six large bottles of your Swamp-Root and used it according to directions. And about Feb. 6th, to my great delight, the stone seemed to crumble; I began to pass small particles of gravel stone, and on that night I passed the one enclosed, about the size of a large pea. I continued to pass these particles and to improve until to-day, under God's providence through your Swamp-Root treatment, my life has been spared. Had I chosen the knife treatment I fear I would have been in my grave, or at the best, lingering in the Hospital. I regard your Swamp-Root as the most wonderful medicine for bladder and kidney troubles in the universe, and wish I could tell all who suffer as I did, the relief and happiness it has brought me. I expect to continue its use occasionally to keep my kidneys and bladder all right, and shall tell all I see in the condition I was, how easy they can find relief by using Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. What I have written can be substantiated by prominent people of this place. I will answer letters of inquiry if stamps are enclosed for reply.

JAS. R. BAILEY.
Feb. 8th, 1899. AUBURN, N. C.

Swamp-Root brings sunshine and gladness in every home it enters. It is the new discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the great kidney and bladder specialist. It is not recommended for everything, but if you have kidney and bladder trouble it will be found just the medicine you need.

A BLESSING TO ALL HUMANITY

Remarkable Invention of an Ohioan. Those Who Have Used It Declare It To Be The Greatest "Invention of The Age."

An inventive genius of Cincinnati, Ohio, has patented and placed on the market a Bath Cabinet that is of great interest to the public, not only the sick and debilitated, but also those enjoying health.

It is a sealed compartment, in which one comfortably rests on a chair, and with only the head outside, may have all the invigorating, cleansing

CABINET OPEN—Step in or out

FOLDED

and purifying effects of the most luxurious Turkish bath, hot vapor or medicated vapor baths at home for three cents each, with no possibility of taking cold, or in any way weakening the system.

A well-known physician of Topeka, Kansas, E. L. Eaton, M. D., gave up his practice to sell these Bath Cabinets, feeling that they were all his patients needed to get well and keep well, as they cured the most obstinate diseases often when his medicine failed, and we understand he has already sold over 600. Another physician of Chicago, Dr. John C. Wright, followed Dr. Eaton's example, moved West, and devotes his entire time to selling these Cabinets. Many others are doing likewise.

Hundreds of remarkable letters have been written the inventors from those who have used the Cabinets, two of which referring to

RHEUMATISM AND LA GRIPPE

Will be interesting to those who suffer from these dread maladies. G. M. Lafferty, Covington, Ky., writes: "Was compelled to quit business a year ago, being prostrated by rheumatism when your Cabinet came. Two weeks' use of it entirely cured me, and have never had a pain since. My doctor was much astonished and will recommend them." Mrs. S. S. Noteman, Hood River, Ore., writes that her neighbor used the Bath Cabinet for a severe case of la grippe and cured herself entirely in two days. Another neighbor cured eczema of many years' standing, and her little girl of measels. A. B. Strickland, Bloomington, Idaho, writes that the Bath Cabinet did him more good in one week than two years' doctoring, and entirely cured him of catarrh, gravel, kidney trouble and dropsy, with which he had been long afflicted. Hundreds of others write praising this Cabinet, and there seems to be no doubt but that the long-sought-for means of curing rheumatism, la grippe, Bright's disease and all kidney and urinary affections has been found. The

WELL-KNOWN CHRISTIAN MINISTER

Of Una, S. C., Rev. R. E. Peale, highly recommends this Cabinet, as also does Mrs. Kendricks, Princ. of Vassar College; Congressman John J. Lentz, John T. Brown, editor of the Christian Guide, many lawyers, physicians, ministers and hundreds of other influential people.

REDUCES OBESITY

It is important to know that the inventor guarantees that obesity will be reduced 5 lbs. per week if these hot vapor baths are taken regularly. Scientific reasons are brought out in a very instructive little book issued by the makers. To

CURE BLOOD AND SKIN DISEASES

The Cabinet is unquestionably the best thing in the world. If people, instead of filling their system with more poison by taking drugs and nostrums, would get into a Vapor Bath Cabinet and sweat out these poisons and assist Nature to act, they would have a skin as clear and smooth as the most fastidious could desire.

THE GREAT FEATURE

Of this Bath Cabinet is that it gives a Hot Vapor Bath that opens the millions of pores all over the body, stimulating the sweat glands and forcing out by nature's method all the impure salts, acids and effete matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys and the lungs and cause disease, debility and sluggishness. A Hot Vapor Bath instills new life from the very beginning, and makes you feel 10 years younger. With the bath, if desired, is a

HEAD AND COMPLEXION STEAMER

In which the face and head are given the same vapor treatment as the body. This produces the most wonderful results, removes pimples, blackheads, skin eruptions and

CURES CATARRH AND ASTHMA

L. B. Westbrook, Newton, Ia., writes: "For 45 years I have had catarrh and asthma to such an extent that it had eaten out the partition between my nostrils. Drugs and doctors did me no good. The first vapor bath I took helped me and two weeks' use cured me entirely, and I have never had a twinge since."

WHATEVER WILL HASTEN PERSPIRATION,

Every one knows, is beneficial. Turkish baths, massage, hot drinks, stimulants, hot foot baths are all known to be beneficial, but the best of these methods become crude and insignificant when compared to the convenient and marvelous curative power of the Cabinet Bath referred to above. The Cabinet is known as the

QUAKER FOLDING THERMAL

Vapor Bath Cabinet was patented May 18, 1897, and is made only in Cincinnati, O. This Cabinet, we find, is durably made of best materials. It is entered and vacated by a door at the side. The Cabinet is air-tight, made of the best hygienic water-proof cloth, rubber-lined, and a folding steel-plated frame supports it from top to bottom. The makers furnish a good alcohol stove with each Cabinet; also valuable receipts and formulas for medicated baths and ailments, as well as plain directions.

Another excellent feature is that it folds into so small a space that it may be carried when traveling—weighs but five pounds.

People don't need bath-rooms, as this Cabinet may be used in any room. Thus bath-tubs have been discarded since the invention of this Cabinet, as it gives a far better bath for all cleansing purposes than soap and water. For the sick-room its advantages are at once apparent. The Cabinet is amply large enough for any person. There have been

SO-CALLED CABINETS

On the market, but they were unsatisfactory, for they had no door, no supporting frame, but were simply a cheap affair to pull on or off over the head like a skirt or barrel, subjecting the body to sudden and dangerous changes of temperature, or made with a bulky wooden frame, which the heat and steam within the cabinet warped, cracked and caused to fall apart and soon become worthless.

The Quaker Cabinet made by the Cincinnati firm is the only practical article of its kind, and will last for years. It seems to satisfy and delight every user, and the

MAKERS GUARANTEE RESULTS

They assert positively, and their statements are backed by a vast amount of testimony from persons of influence, that their Cabinet will cure nervous troubles and debility, clear the skin, purify the blood, cure rheumatism. (They offer $50 reward for a case that cannot be relieved.) Cures women's troubles, la grippe, sleeplessness, obesity, neuralgia, headaches, gout, sciatica, piles, dropsy, blood and skin disease, liver and kidney troubles. It will

CURE A HARD COLD

With one bath, and break up all symptoms of la grippe, fevers, pneumonia, bronchitis, asthma, and is really a household necessity. It is the most known, and all those enjoying health should use it at least once or twice a week, but its great value lies in its marvelous power to draw out of the system the impurities that cause disease, and for this reason is really a godsend to all humanity.

HOW TO GET ONE

All our readers who want to enjoy perfect health, prevent disease, or are afflicted, should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low, space prevents a detailed description, but it will bear out the most exacting demand for durability and curative properties. Write to the World Manufacturing Co., 488 World Building, Cincinnati, O., and ask them to send you their pamphlets and circulars describing this invention. The regular price of this Cabinet is $5. Head Steaming Attachment, if desired, $1 extra, and it is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much real genuine health, vigor and strength.

Write to-day for full information, or better still, order a Cabinet. You won't be deceived or disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and will refund your money if not just as represented. They are reliable and responsible. Capital, $100,000.00, and fill all orders promptly upon receipt of remittance.

Don't fail to send for booklet, as it will prove very interesting reading.

This Cabinet is a wonderful seller for agents, and the firm offers special inducements to good agents, both men and women—upon request.

Greatest Railroad Center in the World.

Chicago is the greatest railroad centre in the world. With twenty-eight terminal trunk lines, the number of through express and mail trains arriving and departing daily is 284; accommodation and suburban passenger trains, 694; merchandise freight trains, 288; grain, stock and lumber trains, 100, making a total of 1,366 regular trains of all classes in and out of Chicago daily by way of all lines.

One hundred and fifty thousand suburbanites are brought in every morning over the steam roads, and one of these lines,—the Illinois Central,—transports 15,000,000 passengers every year over its admirably conducted system. The total tonnage of dead freight carried East in 1898 aggregated 6,000,000 tons.

From the West the big trunk lines brought in nearly 270,000,000 bushels of grain, over 4,000,000 barrels of flour, 205,000,000 pounds of cut meats, 60,000,000 pounds of lard, and 9,000,000 live hogs. The in and out freight amounts now to 950,000 cars annually. From figures furnished by the respective Boards of Trade it has been demonstrated that Chicago handles yearly fifty-three per cent. as much wheat and corn as that received and distributed by New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Omaha, St. Paul, Denver and New Orleans combined.—The Saturday Evening Post.

The Southern Soldier.

In the Blue Ridge Mountains, where there had been some calvary fighting, we were marching along one day on our way to Virginia. As we came along I heard a voice to the side of the road plaintively pleading:

"Oh, mister, please don't take my boots."

I looked up and saw a badly wounded Yankee cavalryman lying on the ground, with a Confederate soldier sitting beside him.

"I have given you my word that I wouldn't take them," replied the Reb, "and I won't; but as you are going to die and don't need them, and I am barefooted and can't walk over these rocks without them, I think you might give them to me."

"Mister, please don't," pleaded the Yankee.

"Well, I won't," promised the Confederate, "but I will sit right here patiently until you die, and then—the boots are mine!"—Sunny South.

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

Children's Pets.

Here you are, most of you, with a dog or cat or other live creature. I hope they will not get to fighting before this meeting is over. Grady Maxfield, do tell me about this shepherd, with his long, brown, shaggy hair; he seems to have met with some accident. "His name is Bruno. I think I have the smartest dog of any one. He enjoys going for the cows; he bites their heels every step. Last summer he jumped in front of a mower, and three of his feet were cut almost off. We thought he would die, but now he can go on three legs. I am going to have my picture taken with him, and I will send you one." I shall be very glad to get it. No member has ever sent me a picture, yet all have seen mine (or what purported to be mine)! I see Helen Ross has an English pug. Have you had him long? "Ever since my twin sister and I were two he has been our constant companion. Lots of times people ask us if we put his tail on curl papers the night before. He was seven years old Valentine's day. When we have candy or cake we have to hide or he will beg it all away! If people lay their hands on us, even in fun, he will spring upon them." Here are two dogs: one black and white, the other black and brown. They belong to Cecil and Mildred Hughes. What are their names? "Heck and Rover; and we have great times with them. Heck sits up, when asked to do so, and shakes hands." Fay Funkhouser has a shepherd with her; it is her uncle Jim's, and lives in the country. What is his name, and how does he put in his time out on the farm, where there are no street-corners to loaf upon? "His name is Charlie, and he knows when it is time to go for the cows. When my brother (J. B.) and I go out there, he plays with us; we throw sticks, and he gets them and brings them back to us."

Look out! here is something dangerous. Anna Loons, what makes it look so curious? "It is a fit-cat! One time when I was at grandma's it took a fit, and it ran everywhere, and under the sofa, too! And my grandma shook her skirts around and said, 'Put it out! put it out!'" I should think so! Ella Evans, your cat seems more respectable. It's not a cat yet, either, but a black kitten with soft hair and a long tail. "When it comes into the house, my little brother gets it and puts clothes on it, and has it for a baby, and it never scratches him." That kitten has a noble disposition. If I were a cat, and somebody were to try to put clothes on me and have me for their baby, I shudder to think what the consequences might be! Charlie Mountain, your cat is grown. Is he a useful animal? "I have a cat whose name is Jerry; when he eats he eats in a hurry. But this is not all: he sleeps in the barn, and catches rats that might do us much harm." Poetry, upon my word! Minnie Snyder, what of this white and brown Dash of yours? Can he inspire you with rhyme? "We roll the hoop and have a big race, then play hide and seek from place to place. When the ground is covered over with snow, and I take my sled and a-coasting go, he's determined to keep right by my side, and I really think he would like a ride. Away I fly with shout and laughter, and Dash, like Jill, comes tumbling after. Alas! too soon I reach the goal, and stand there shuddering in the cold. Dash sees my trouble—with a spring jumps over the sled, takes hold of the string, trots up the steep hill like a spirited 'hoss,' while I walk behind and act as boss. He's an awful big coward (how I hate to tell!), but the sight of a strange dog does make him yell." Edna Fulghum, I see your dog is a brown lady with a black nose. Her name? "Fannie; she sleeps down in the cellar. She never will go down there unless some one holds a light, so she can see." To be sure! Now, men-dogs are not afraid of the dark.

What's this? Hold your cats! Pigeons! How many, Robert T. Davis? "My brother and I have nineteen, and two eggs. There are two young ones. They are great pets." Florence Seavitt, this cat has a very wicked eye, I think. My! tell me his history, for his very whiskers speak of a tragedy. "The name of this yellow cat is Tom. He has the catarrh, I guess. Last spring we had a jack-rabbit. One night my sister and I slept upstairs, and in the morning when it was just a little dark yet, he (I mean the rabbit) jumped upon our bed and began licking my face and woke me up. We had him about a month, but he got out doors, and old cat Tom killed him." Children, cannot you see that scene in the early dawn, poor jack-rabbit licking his mistress' face with loving tongue, and old cat Tom, no doubt, sitting on the fence even then, meditating the downfall of the new favorite! But Mabel Gunther, where is your pet? "Once our neighbors gave me a canary for taking care of it; I called it Dicky. Sometimes when I went to feed him, he would flap his wings and bite my fingers. At first I was scared, but at last I knew he was playing, just pretending he was mad. When I let him out of the cage, he would perch on the window and sing. As all birds do, he grew old and did not sing much the last year and a half. I had him six years, and one morning he was found dead, and of course I miss him." Don't I hear clucking, Myrtle Blanchard? Are these your chickens? "Last summer a lady gave me a hen and ten little chickens. After they were weaned, we set her in the granery; and when the the chickens hatched papa went to get them, and he found that the hen and four chickens had got on the other side of a board two feet high. We couldn't think how she got them over the boards. May be some of the children can explain. Now one of the first little chickens wants to sit, and when I get enough eggs I will have some more little chickens." Children, do you think the mother flew over the board with each chick in her bill? Or perhaps they climbed upon her back, and she humped up her back real sudden and tossed them over. But this is too big a mystery for me; call in a detective! Here is a black dog with a white breast. Ulie Stewart, surely such an intelligent animal is not doomed to pass through the world unnamed? "His name is Nero, and he helps me get in my wood. One day he was given a bone in the house. He did not want to put it on the floor, so he slipped into the kitchen, got a frying pan, put the bone in it and began chewing. Once when my sister scolded him for bothering, he ran to the woodpile and brought a stick, as if that would make matters right." Florence Smith, who are these two? "This very smart dog is Major McKinley; he was raised in St. Louis in a cellar. Major can jump a six-foot gate without touching it. Sometimes he steals meat from our neighbors, and hides it until hard times. My other dog is William Jennings Bryan. He is not as smart as Major, but he will drive the cows up in the evening."

Agnes Matteson, you have neither dog nor cat. Were you always so unfortunate? "When I was four we moved to California, and my little dog, Duke, kept under our seat. One night a passenger went by, and Duke up and bit him! This the gentleman did not like, so Mr. Duke had to be put in the baggage car. After we reached our destination, my father and mother went on to San Francisco. My brother shut up Duke so he couldn't follow, but he wailed so we soon let him out. When they got to San Francisco, whom should they see but Mr. Duke on the platform! This is how Duke got to see the Pacific Ocean. When we moved back to Omaha we left him with some kind friends, but I can still remember how he cried when we went away." Poor Mr. Duke! Who will say that dogs have not their sorrows; and sheep as well? Hear Vetura Collings: "I had a pet lamb; I raised her on a bottle; her name was Nannie. We taught her to run the chickens; she would never run me. She ate off the rose bushes so bad I had to sell her." Have you a dog, Frank Reid? "No; but every morning as I go to school I stop at a neighbor's to warm, where they have a little dog named Hobson. One day he got hold of my teacher's overshoe and gnawed it. I think him a bad little dog." I wonder if this dog was named Hobson because he was averse to kissing? But does this nautical-looking curly dog belong to you, Julia Cox? "It is my couisin's, and its name is Dewey. Dewey will open doors and hunt for things to eat. If a cat is in the room, he will growl at the cat and the cat will growl at him. They are afraid of each other."

I must save the other pets till two weeks, but I will see that they are fed and watered. The very best thing about these letters, children, is that they are written just as you would talk, and not as if you were writing in your Sunday clothes and afraid of mussing them. Honor List: Delta Rosencrans, Grace E. Taylor, Ulie H. Stewart, Grace Stewart, Maude E. Kilmer, Jas. D. Morgan, Hazel Gilmore, Myrtle Soward, Lola Gilmore, Nina Martin, Vetura B. Collings, Cecil Hughes, Emily Riley, Eva Clore, Madge F. Daily, Madge Masters. Next week, continued story; two weeks, pets, new names, letters, Honor List. THE LORD OF LIFE AND DEATH.*

Not long after the discourse of Jesus in which he spoke of himself as the light of the world, which we recently studied, he departed from Galilee, which had been so largely the scene of his ministry, as we are informed in the Synoptic Gospels, and crossed the Jordan into the district of Perea, where much of the remaining time was spent up to the moment of his final entry into Jerusalem. This period of ministry in Perea, the record of which is preserved only by Luke (9:51; 18:14), seems to have been interrupted by two hasty visits to Jerusalem and its vicinity; the first at the feast of dedication during the winter (Luke 10:38-42; John 9:1;10:42), the second in response to the message from Mary and Martha telling him of the serious illness of Lazarus, their brother. In the village of Bethany, about two miles over the hill east from Jerusalem, was the home of Lazarus and these two sisters. This home seems to have been regarded by Jesus as open to him in a special sense, the beginning of which relation with its inmates may be found in the visit to Bethany, recorded in Luke 10:36-42. The two sisters were strikingly different. Martha, probably the older, was a typical housekeeper, industrious and anxious for the welfare of her guests, and scarcely able at times to understand the indifference of her more quiet and reflective sister Mary when the duties of hospitality imposed unusual tasks on the household. Of Lazarus we have almost no description, but the fact that Jesus found welcome and love in the little home in Bethany speaks volumes for the character of its inmates as well as for the really human and sympathetic character of our Lord who delighted in the association of such choice friends.

While Jesus was teaching in the district beyond the Jordan, avoiding the vicinity of the capital in order not to complicate too rapidly his relations with the authorities, he received word from the sisters that their brother was dangerously ill. He communicated the intelligence to the disciples with the remark that this sickness was for the glory of God, and the certification of his own ministry. He did not mean that Lazarus would not die, or that the disease from which he was suffering would be interfered with, but that the whole episode would furnish occasion for the strengthening of their faith. After a delay of two days he notified the disciples of his determination to go into Judea. They were surprised and alarmed, knowing the danger to which he was exposed from Jewish hatred, and when he alluded to Lazarus' death, they understood that he meant that the sick man had at last fallen into slumber which they insisted would be good for him, and make it unnecessary for Jesus to expose his life by undertaking the journey. But when he finally told them that his friend was dead and that it was his purpose to go, the loyalty and courage of Thomas rose equal to the occasion and he urged the rest, if it was the will of the Master, to go and die with him. These loyal and fearless utterances of this disciple, so often called the doubter, ought to be weighed in estimating his character.

When Jesus arrived with his disciples in the vicinity of Bethany he found that his friend had already been buried four days. There could be, therefore, no question that hope was extinguished so far as human means could avail. The usual scenes of mourning and the attempts at consolation were taking place. These were well calculated to arouse the deep indignation of a soul as sensitive as Jesus. Perhaps no event offers greater opportunity for misapplied zeal and clumsy condolence than a death in a fsmily. If one is often shocked in modern days by the ostentatious shows of sorrow on the part of those to whom the death of a distant relative or acquaintance is scarcely more significant than an opportunity for the display of false sorrow, the practice of antiquity was far worse. It was the custom of the neighbors to pry into the inmost recesses of the family sorrow by an uninterrupted attempt at consolation, allowing no moment of seclusion for the wretched victims of this imposition. To add to the horror of the occasion hired mourners, whose business it was to increase the noise and confusion by mournful songs and shrieks of woe, plied their vocation in the house of death according to the law of custom, which is more difficult to break than statutes. Against all this barbarism a nature so sensitive as that of Jesus would revolt, and it is not strange that his indignation struggled with his sorrow and pity as he came upon the scene of the bereavement at Bethany.

In accordance with the Jewish custom the body of Lazarus had been deposited in the family sepulchre on the day he died. To this spot, some distance from the house, the sisters came frequently to mourn, followed, of course, by the industrious friends who felt it their duty to keep them constant company. When Martha learned of Jesus' arrival she went out to meet him, exclaiming that if he had been with them Lazarus would not have died. But she had no thought that the vast disaster could now be remedied, and even when Jesus assured her that he was the resurrection and the life she assented to his words without seeming to understand their significance. Feeling, however, that her sister should know of his coming, she went and called her, and when Mary came she fell at his feet with the heart-broken cry with which Martha had met him. The sight of her grief, the knowledge that it was only one example of that universal human anguish through which all the children of men must pass, and the contact of that respectably mournful group of curious and prying Jews who stood near under the pretense of friendship, filled the heart of Jesus with profound sorrow and indignation. But his love was greater than his anger, and when, in response to his question where his friend was buried they pointed the way and started for the tomb, Jesus' feelings of love, sympathy and sorrow overcame him and he wept. The volume contained in this shortest verse of Scripture is one that every troubled, suffering child of man may read with inexpressible emotion. Jesus accepted for the moment the situation of one who mourned over his lost friend. No one thought of the coming resurrection; even those who knew that he had raised the dead before, could not think that one so long buried could be brought to life. Martha and the rest supposed he wished to look again upon the face of his friend, and she sought to dissuade him. But Jesus knew his purpose and after a moment of prayer he spoke in a voice heard across the stretches of death, "Lazarus, come forth!" No voice like that had ever spoken; no power could resist its omnipotence. The dead came forth, bound with the customary cerements, which Jesus commanded them to remove. The marvel spread on wings of wind. Many who had wondered why Jesus did not save his friend from death as he had healed the blind man now bowed in silent faith. Those, however, who had already refused to believe in him and had sought his destruction deemed the miracle only a new indication of a power that menaced the Pharisees and must be crushed. No miracle can persuade a man against his will. He would not believe though one should rise from the the dead.

No word has come across the years telling of the mystery of those four days of death. The world has never learned the secret of the grave, and we may well be thankful that this is so, for it is not with the grave that human life has to do. It is rather with the expansion of the soul into new joys and opportunities after that narrow portal has been passed that the Christian concerns himself. But, meantime, the resurrection is a fact of the life of the Christian here and now. Dying to sin and to self, he rises with Christ to seek the things which are above, and the miracle of that life which he lives by faith in the Son of God is more wonderful by far than the return of Lazarus from beyond the gate of death twenty centuries ago.

TOPIC FOR APRIL 2.

THE BIRTHDAY OF HOPE.

(1 Peter 1:1-9.)

Peter is called the apostle of hope and his letter the epistle of hope. Was it not this ardent, eager quality which made him the leader of the rest?

Hope inspires activity. No one can work in despair. Hope is the life-buoy. One can keep his head above water for a time, perhaps, without it, but ultimately must cease swimming. Hope is wine to the heart, a steady stimulant to action.

Hope is one of the three things that abide. It springs eternal in the human breast? Yes, it stands with faith and love, unchangeable, the three greatest things in the world.

It is hope, more than any other principle, which is the spring of activity. In the well-known picture of these three that is seen in almost every household, Faith looks calmly, quietly up toward heaven with folded hands. Love leans trusting and quiescent upon Faith's breast; but Hope looks straight out before her and starts foward into immediate action.

"All hope abandon ye who enter here!" is the legend written over many a hell, and perhaps no deeper punishment of hell than this of hopelessness could be devised. It is more than a cancer; it is a void, an emptiness. No outlook, nothing but darkness, to sit and nurse one's head upon one's knees!

We are all forward-looking creatures, especially, perhaps, the young. The old look back a great deal for their best days; yet, all in all, for the most part, we turn our eyes to the future. Anticipation, how it gilds the east of expectation! Hope leading us on to the ends of to-morrow's rainbows! Sanguine expectation making all enterprises possible! If it were not for this youthful, overhopeful quality, where were all our great undertakings, surmounting insurmountable barriers?

One of John Smith's Sermons.

The Christian-Evangelist of Jan. 26 had from me, what the editor was kind enough to to call "An Interesting Letter," in which I said: "I would give a good round sum for even one of John Smith's sermons. Has even one of all he preached been preserved?" In the Christian-Evangelist of March 2nd Bro. Aaron Prince Aten answers my inquiry by saying that Bro. Smith preached a sermon at the state meeting at Chillicothe, Mo., in 1867, and that by request of the convention, he and Bro. Jas. A. Berry and W. C. Rogers took down the sermon as it was being delivered. Bro. Aten says: "After he closed we conferred together and compared notes. . . . The result was a complete transcript of one of the greatest sermons to which I have ever listened."

It was published in the Christian Pioneer, then published in Chillicothe, by Bro. D. T. Wright, probably in the September or October number, of the year 1867.

Now then, I will consider it a great favor to hear from any one who has a copy of the Christian Pioneer containing that sermon; or from any one who can tell me who has the old files of the Christian Pioneer.

Jesus and Other Teachers.

For the reason that there are so many religions in the world it is natural that Jesus should be brought into comparison with other teachers, and that men should seek to understand the reasons for his unique influence and for that supremacy which is being more fully recognized each decade. In studying the sayings of Jesus it will be seen that others had taught many things similar to those which he uttered. He repeated many truths spoken by the prophets of the Old Testament, and parallels to some of his sayings can be found in utterances of Hillel, Gamaliel and other Jewish teachers who lived before his day. Similar resemblances have also been discovered between his sayings and those of such religious teachers as other nations have produced. Confucius, the Chinese sage, whose maxims constitute the moral law of that people, gave expression to many beautiful and elevating sentiments. Prince Siddartha, the Buddha of India, sitting under the bow tree brooded over the distresses of mankind and devoted himself to a life of humility and philanthropy, seeking to benefit men by his teaching and to bring to them the blessing of a common sympathy and service. Zoroaster, the Persian philosopher and moralist, instituted the religion called after his name and still held by the Parsees in the south of India. His thought was elevated, and traces of his system have been suggested as constituent elements of the Judaism which prevailed in the days of Christ. Mohammed, the founder of the religion of Islam, which is the belief of a great number of the earth's inhabitants to-day, lived some five hundred years after our Lord, but having seen only the poorest and least worthy representatives of Christianity and Judaism he dreamed of a religion that should supplant both and lift Arabia out of the degradation of polytheism into the light of monotheism, and placing himself at the head of the list of prophets, among whom he reckoned Abraham, Moses and Jesus, he formulated the watchword of his followers, "God is one God and Mohammed is his prophet," and went forth to convert the world by force, if need be, to the new faith.

There was a time, not so long ago, when these various teachers were regarded as fanatics and impostors who had deluded vast multitudes with pernicious teaching and had sought only their own selfish aggrandizement. It was believed by Christian apologists that the only way to prove the supremacy of Christianity was to emphasize the degraded character of the faiths it has passed or supplanted in its progress. But a truer and larger knowledge of these religions shows them to have been the result of earnest and honest endeavor on the part of their founders and others who contributed to their spread, to find the truth and to uplift the races to which they were given. They were not false, but partial religions, and the willing acceptance of this fact is a sure step to the appreciation of the true grandeur of our holy faith as superior to them all, and our Master as beyond all comparison with these teachers who followed him afar whatever the age in which they lived. Those were religions for a single nation; his was a gospel for the world. Those were faiths largely stationary and unprogressive; his is a message that continually urges to new achievements and fresh attainment. His supremacy lies not so much in the new truth he uttered concerning the duties of man toward his fellowmen, for all morality is essentially the same in character. The power of his message lay in the unfolding of of the character of God, himself being the expression of God in terms of human life. He was thus the example of all he taught. He did not hold up an ideal impossible of realization, but first of all made it a living reality in himself and urged all men to a similar attainment. He saw the absolute truth as no teacher had ever seen, and when he spoke of God, of man, of himself, of righteousness, of sin, of immortality, men's hearts were thrilled, for they felt that he spoke the utter truth. But greatest of all, he gave men "power to become the sons of God." All he exhorted them to be he is ready to aid them in becoming, and thus he stands forever the embodiment of the divine message in its fullness—the Son of God, the Savior of the world.

The Sunday Newspaper.

The Chicago Record prints to-day, from its staff correspondent, the following "special cable" message: "London, March 16, '99.—The announcement that the Daily Telegraph will issue a Sunday edition has already called forth strong remonstrances in various quarters and from the religious press especially. A British weekly paper of widespread influence says to-day: 'We never heard two opinions as to the effect of Sunday newspapers in America. It has been altogether bad and undoubtedly greatly hindered the progress of Christianity in that country.'"

It is well known the Chicago Record is one of the very few great dailies of America that does not issue a Sunday edition; which fact undoubtedly goes a good way in accounting for its immense and increasing circulation.

BAUGHMAN.

Eliza Baughman, a pioneer and faithful soldier of the cross, departed this life Feb. 23, 1899, at the ripe old age of 86 years, six months and 24 days. Her father and mother first met at the famous Cane Ridge meeting. In 1841 she moved to Cuba, and in 1845 was married to Henry Baughman, whom she has survived by 25 years. She was a live member of the C. W. B. M. For 62 years she has worked in the Christian armor. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." She leaves an only daughter, Mrs. C. C. Riley, like herself loyal to the Master. Surely her works do follow her even in this life. WM. DRUMMET.

Cuba, Ill.

BROWN.

Winfield Ayres Brown was born Sept. 2, 1864, at the old homestead where he died March 7, 1899, at the age of 34 years, six months and five days. He graduated from the Oskaloosa College in 1890. He was chosen immediately to the principalship in the schools in Pomeroy, Washington. After one year's work there he entered the law department of the Iowa State University. Two years' work here and his health failed him, and in April, 1894, he submitted to a surgical operation, which was unsuccessful and left him a hopeless invalid. He united with the Church of Christ when he was 14 years old, and was a hopeful, courageous Christian man. Before his death he chose the following couplet to be inscribed upon his gravestone:

"He gave me life and it was beautiful;
He gives me death and I can trust him."

Ethel Brown Garrett, now a missionary in far-off China, is a sister. His funeral service was conducted by the writer; also Bro. Moore's funeral occurring at the same hour and at the same place. B. W. PETTIT.

DELAPORTE.

August Thomas DeLaporte was born at Caen, France, Sept. 4, 1821, and died at the home of his son, Leon, in Hannibal, Mo., March 5, 1899. He came to America, landing at New Orleans in 1848. He came to Hannibal in 1855. In 1857 he and his wife became members of the Christian Church in this city. Mrs. DeLaporte passed to her reward in 1889. Bao. DeLaporte was an earnest follower of Christ and loved to attend the services at the church. He was a citizen of such integrity that he will be seriously missed. Four sons and one daughter survive him. They were all at the funeral, which was largely attended. LEVI MARSHALL.

JONES.

Anna Shepherd Jones was born in Lafayette Co., Mo., Aug. 12, 1872, and united with the church at the age of 13. She was married to J. H. Jones, pastor of the church at Garden City, Mo., Oct. 19, 1892. She died March 8, 1899. Sister Jones was a model preacher's wife. She was a woman of earnest piety and Christian culture and literally followed her Lord in going about doing good. She leaves a husband and two daughters to mourn her departure. Funeral, March 10th. Interment at Hume, Mo. A large number of relatives and friends witnessed the obsequies.

S. MAGEE.

Nevada, Mo., March 11, 1899.

MATHES.

Willard A. Mathes was born in Pike County, Ill., and died in Hannibal, Mo., March 1st, 1899, aged 26 years. He resided in Hannibal only a year, having come from Quincy, Ill., but in that brief time by his strict attention to business and the expression of a high Christian character, he had here many warm friends who will sadly miss him. He had struggled with ill-heath for several years and was hopeful through it all. He was a faithful Christian and rejoiced in his Savior. His devoted mother and uncles were at his side when he departed. Services were conducted by the writer in Hannibal and the remains were taken next day to Illinois and placed in the village cemetery.

LEVI MARSHALL.

MOORE.

Albert Russell Moore, was born in Fayette county, Mo., Feb. 24, 1872, and died March 6, 1899, aged 27 years and 12 days. He united with the United Brethren Church, Nassau, Ia., in 1886. After coming to Indianapolis he united with the Church of Christ in 1888 under the pastorate of Elder Ames. Thus another one has fallen from the ranks of young manhood. He leaves a father, mother and brother to mourn his death. May the Lord bless his dear old parents. B. W. PITTIT.

OLIPHANT.

Andrew S. Oliphant was born in Union, Ind., July 29, 1848, and died in Columbus, Kas., March 9, 1899, aged 50 years, 7 months and 10 days. He was married to Miss Lizzie Mullikin in Bloomington, Ind., in 1872. Ten children resulted from this marriage, seven of whom are living to mourn the loss of a father. In 1882 Mr. and Mrs. Oliphant came to Columbus, Kas., the second time after marriage, and have made this their home since. He was a quiet, inoffensive man, a peaceable citizen, a kind husband father. May God comfort and console the widow and children in their bereavement. O. H. DERRY.

SETTLE.

SMITH.

Sister Flora Smith was born in Granville county, N. C., Nov. 8, 1857, obeyed the gospel August, 1874. She was married to Bro. M. A. Smith Jan. 16, 1879, and for 20 years they fought the battles of life together, but on the 3rd of March, 1899, death came into the home of this happy family and claimed a loving wife and mother for its own. The writer offered a few thoughts at the funeral from Rev. 20:11 to 21:14. Oh, how pleasant it is when we have to give up our friends, or we ourselves are nearing the crossing, to be permitted to look with an eye of faith into the home of the soul, where there is no more sorrow or tears. Publishers' Notes.

The manuscript for another new book is now in our hands and work has begun on the type-setting. The readers of Prof. H. W. Everest's popular works will be delighted to know that he has just written another book. He calls this late production "The Science and Pedagogy of Ethics." All those who have read "The Divine Demonstration," a former production by Prof. Everest, know full well the high literary culture of this teacher and author. The work will be complete in one volume and will treat the subject under three heads, Theoretical Ethics, Practical Ethics and Pedagogical Ethics. It will be a book full of information for the student, teacher and preacher, and of much interest to the general reader.

"After Pentecost, What?" by James M. Campbell, is growing in favor with those who desire to know more concerning the Holy Spirit. The work covers 297 pages, and is a lucid discussion of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit in its relation to modern Christological thought. Have you a clear idea concerning the Holy Spirit? A close study of this book will give you the proper conception of the New Testament teachings on this subject. A difficult subject to many is here made plain. As a literary production this book ranks high. The author presents his subject in a captivating style. Let the Spirit move you to secure this work on the Holy Spirit. The price is $1.00, postpaid.

Early in the coming month of April we expect to publish another new book entitled, "Men of Yesterday." The author is well known to the reading public by his former production, "Life of Alexander Campbell." "Men of Yesterday," by T. W. Grafton, is a series of biographical sketches of some of the prominent men among the Disciples of Christ. The author selected from the large number of representative men of the past the following names: Walter Scott, Barton W. Stone, John Smith, Isaac Errett, Barton W. Johnson and Otis A. Burgess. "Men of Yesterday" will contain interesting reading to the present generation concerning the trials and achievements of these great men of the past.

This book is now in type, and there only remains the press work and binding to be done before it will be ready for delivery. It will contain 281 pages, handsome cloth binding, and the price will be $1.00, postpaid.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The government printing office has just issued a bulky volume, entitled "The Report of the Major-General Commanding the Army." This is the most comprehensive report of the military operations of the past year that has yet been published. It contains the reports of all general and regimental officers who were in command in Cuba, Porto Rico or the Philippines during the war. Among the topics which receive treatment in the report is the work of the commissary department. It is a surprising fact, in view of Gen. Miles' charges, that, although the use of canned roast beef as a ration is frequently mentioned, it is not seriously criticised except by one officer. Lieut.-Col. Garlington, inspector general, comments adversely upon several features of the equipment, and among them the canned roast beef. It will be remembered that Lieut.-Col. Garlington has been engaged lately in collecting evidence in support of Gen. Miles' charges. There is no hint anywhere in the report that chemicals were used in preparing the meat, although it was the business of the inspectors-general to mention the fact if they noticed it. Whatever may be said in general about the use of this ration, apparently the chemical theory was an afterthought which was suggested when complaints began to come in. The investigation commission is proceeding upon its tedious course, and it is the ardent hope of all good citizens that a decision will soon be reached so that the wearisome controversy can be buried along with the noxious beef.

Theoretically, all the territory of the Philippines, except Manila and vicinity, is a Spanish possession until the ratifications of the peace treaty have been exchanged. Claims for damage to foreign property growing out of the insurrection must, therefore, be presented to the Spanish Government, if to any one. It would not be good form for the United States to embarrass Spain, with whom we are now practically at peace, by raising a disturbance for which Spain would be theoretically responsible. Perhaps these technical considerations have not been altogether without weight in restraining Gen. Otis from beginning his general aggressive campaign against the Filipinos. Of considerably more importance, probably, is the fact that reinforcements are on the way, and the beginning of the general campaign may well be postponed until their arrival. The campaign to the east of Manila last week was but a foretaste of what will happen on a large scale when the general aggressive movement begins. Admiral Dewey expresses himself as very hopeful about the situation. He says: "I believe that the Tagolos insurrection is already breaking up. General Wheaton's column could take Malolos, the insurgent capital, by a good dash. The main part of the insurrection lies between Manila and Malolos. There is practically no opposition to the United States authority in the southern islands. The natives there hate the Tagolos, and are really anxious to welcome us."

The Cuban Assembly, by its ill-timed efforts to assert its supreme authority, is in danger of consigning itself to an oblivion even more dense than that which has hitherto enshrouded it. Having impeached and degraded Gen. Gomez, through whom the United States authorities had arranged to distribute the $3,000,000 bounty to the Cuban army, it has simply forfeited every claim which it had to even an informal and friendly recognition. Gen. Maso, formerly President of the so-called Cuban Republic, has been chosen by the Assembly as commander-in-chief, vice Gomez. Prabably Maso is in sympathy with the Assembly in its demand for more than three million, since that was the issue on which he was chosen to succeed Gomez. It is not possible, therefore, to distribute the money through Maso, because he would be afraid to receive it and because it would involve the recognition of the authority of the Assembly. It is not possible to distribute it through Gomez, as matters stand now, because he is not actually in command and because the muster rolls are in the hands of the Assembly. The army is evidently in favor of taking the three million. Six of the Cuban generals, after consultation with their subordinates, have agreed to accept the money for the soldiers and undertake the reorganization of the Cuban army under American control. This is of course an act of direct insubordination to the Assembly. The truth is the Assembly cuts very little figure in Cuba. So far as the United States is concerned, it does not exist.

John Sherman, ex-Secretary of State, was reported dead, but is alive. Mr. Sherman was a passenger on the steamship "Paris" (late United States cruiser "Yale"), which is cruisng among the West Indies with a pleasure party visiting the scenes of the late war. He became dangerously ill and, as the only means of getting him back home, a goverement vessel which was not far away was dispatched to take him off the Paris. An inaccurate observation, leading to the belief that the flag of the Paris was at half-mast, was the only ground for the rumor that Mr. Sherman was dead. Later reports indicate that he is doing well and that there is every probability of his recovery from this attack, although his advanced age and the generally precarious condition of his health forbid the belief that he will completely regain his strength. Mr. Sherman and Mr. Kipling may congratulate each other upon the enjoyment of the somewhat rare privilege of reading their own obituaries. In the case of Mr. Kipling the enterprising dailies went only so far as to estimate his life work and say what a pity it was that he should not live to fulfill the promise of his youth. But Mr. Sherman may have whatever satisfaction is to be derived from reading the account of his death and the final summary of his career.

The British House of Commons has voted an appropriation amounting to $10,000,000 for the establishment of a national telephone service in connection with the post office department. The telegraph is already owned by the government and operated as a part of the postal service, and the general logic of the situation, as well as the force of particular events, favors extending the arrangement to the telephone. The English telegraph service is excellent and cheap. The telephone service, as now conducted by a single company which has a monopoly, is earning immense dividends and giving the public the poorest possible accommodations. A number of years ago, when the telephone was first being introduced and when the telegraph had just passed into the hands of the government, a decision of the court declared that all methods of transmitting messages by electricity were included in the government monopoly. Not being prepared to operate the telephone business under the postal department, franchises were granted to several companies which ultimately united in one. It is acknowledged all the time that the telephone service belongs to the post office, the government sublets it to the National Telephone Co. The franchise expires in 1911 and the government is preparing to take the business entirely into its own hands at that time. When this is done the company will be relieved of its twenty per cent. dividends, the public will be relieved of the objectionable features of the service and the government will be relieved of its fear that the development of the telephone system will interfere with the profits of its own telegraph.

The Chinese immigration question will come to the front again when the ratifications of the peace treaty are exchanged and the treaty becomes a law of the land. Until that time Porto Rico and the Philippines are foreign territory, and the Chinese are excluded as a matter of course. But when these islands become United States territory there will be ground for claiming the right of immigration. As far as Porto Rico is concerned the problem will not be serious, for there are but few Chinese there, but there are more than 200,000 of them in the Philippines. Congress has taken no action to prevent a Chinese invasion from this source, and their exclusion will depend upon the interpretation of the relation of the Philippines to the United States. If the interpretation is that the islands are subject to the sovereignty of the United States, but are not a part of the United States, then the prohibition of Chinese immigration from the Philippines will not be contrary to the treaty which was made during the Cleveland administration. This seems to us the reasonable view of the situation, and the one which will probably be taken. In regard to Chinese immigration from Hawaii, the case is slightly different, for the Newlands annexation resolution contains a clause providing for the exclusion of the Chinese in Hawaii from the United States. There is still room for a question as to whether this provision is consistent with the clause of the treaty which gives to the Chinese in the United States all rights given to citizens of the most favored nations, except the right of naturalization. This would include, of course, the right to migrate from one part of the United States to another. But so far the Chinese have been excluded under the Newlands resolution, and no test case has been brought before the courts.

The International Disarmament Conference is to meet at The Hague, Holland, on May 18. Great Britain will have among her representatives Sir Julian Pauncefort and the British Minister at The Hague. Following the example of Great Britain and most of the other nations which are to participate in the conference, the President will appoint as our representatives the American Minister to the Netherlands, Mr. Newel, and one or two of our other diplomatic representatives in Europe, probably Ambassadors White and Tower. The expectation has been expressed that the immediate result of the conference will not be any instantaneous decrease of navies and standing armies, but will be the adoption of a plan for a general court of arbitration by which most if not all of the disputes between nations can be settled without recourse to war. Something of this sort must necessarily precedes any considerable reduction of military and naval forces.

Trusts and combinations of capital for the restraint of trade cannot be controlled by the Federal authorities unless they affect interstate congress. This is a decision stated by Attorney-General Griggs in a recent letter replying to a question as to what the national government intended to do about the trusts. The decision is not a new one, but it corrects the current mistaken belief that the Sherman anti trust law gave the jurisdiction over the entire matter into the hands of the Federal courts without regard to the interstate question. As the matter now stands, it is clearly understood that any action for the restriction of trusts must come from the action of state courts and legislatures.

Reports from Manila indicate that an active campaign against the insurgent forces under Aguinaldo was inaugurated last Saturday. The advance began early on Saturday and was pressed forward vigorously on Sunday and Monday with hard fighting and stubborn resistence, but resulted in the dislodgement of the insurgents from every position, in some of which they had strongly intrenched themselves. A number of towns were taken, some of which were fired by the insurgents before retreating. The insurgents at this writing are reported in a disorganized state and fleeing towards Malolos. MacArthur's brigade is north of Polo, which was capturud in the Sunday's battle, and the reports add that within forty-eight hours MacArthur and Wheaton will be fighting before Malolos. Aguinaldo has issued a proclamation from Malolos threatening to punish with death all who refuse to fight. One officer and twenty-five enlisted men were reported killed in Sunday's battles and 140 wounded. The insurgent losses are reported to be very heavy. The insurgents taken prisoners begged for bread, saying they had been on short rations. There are still some insurgents south of Manila and some bushwhacking, but the heavy fighting is on the north, about Caloocan, Malabon and Polo. There was no disturbance at Manila during the fighting. Aguinaldo's hopes of an uprising in Manila and his promises of success to his followers were all in vain and indications at this writing are that he is at his extremity and must soon give up the battle.

The latest word from General Otis before going to press is that MacArthur's command is at Bulacan, six miles from Malolos and that he will soon attack the insurgent capitol. MacArthur's division has led the advance since Saturday, having been in almost constant engagement with the insurgents for three days, and as a result of his gallantry and judicious management of this campaign the War Department has determined to promote him to the rank of brigadier-general in the regular service. General Lawton remains in command of the district south of Manila. Other divisions are north of Manila and moving toward Malolos where what is hoped to be the final battle will occur and end this unpleasant affair in the Philippine Islands. The general estimate of casualties to our troops during the last three days' battles are 300, one-third of whom are reported killed, but more definite reports will come later.

One of the sad results of the fighting near Manila last Sunday was the killing of Colonel Egbert, of the Twenty-second Infantry. He was shot in the abdomen and lived but a short time. Col. Egbert was a native of Pennsylvania and was appointed from that state to be First Lieutenant in the 12th Infantry, Sept 23, 1861 and served with that regiment throughout the Civil War. His military service covers a period of almost 40 years. He was wounded at the battle of San Juan Hill and it was for his distinguished conduct in the engagement at San Juan Hill that he was made a Brigadier General of Volunteers, which office he held until Dec. 1, 1898, when, in the reduction of the volunteer army, he was honorably discharged from his volunteer rank. He was re-enlisted in the regular army as Colonel of the Twenty-second Infantry and sailed from New York with his regiment on Feb. 1, arriving at Manila March 4 in time to participate in the recent operations which General Otis has been conducting. Colonel Egbert was universally respected, both in the army and out of it, and his loss will be felt keenly, not only by his own men, but by the service generally, and especially by the Twelfth Infantry, with which he was identified so long. Col. Egbert was well known in Washington, having married in that city. His wife joined him on his way to Manila and is believed to be there now.

THE RISEN LIFE.

Christ's resurrection may be regarded as a fact and a force in human life. As a fact no event of history is attested by higher proof. Perhaps the crowning evidence of Christ's resurrection is the church, whose origin dates back to within fifty days of his crucifixion, and which was founded by men who knew him best and who were witnesses of his resurrection from the dead. That church has had a continuous existence in the world from that time to the present, and is a far more potent factor in the life of mankind to-day than in any previous age of the world. Jesus Christ himself is steadily rising to the zenith of his influence, and is to-day by far the most majestic figure in the world's history. If effects must be assigned to adequate causes, then the resurrection of Christ is an assured fact, and his claim to be the Son of God is forever established.

Assuming this to be true, what are some of the legitimate results on human life and conduct? It is the practical phase of this question that should most concern us now. Infidelity has utterly failed in every effort to overthrow the foundations of our faith, but has the average Christian life been such as Christ has the right to expect, in view of the fact that he has, by his incarnation, life, teaching, death and resurrection, "brought life and immortality to light?" Is there not a yawning hiatus or chasm between our logic and our lives? If we believe in the resurrection of Christ, then we ought to live the risen life. "If ye, then, be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." If we have, indeed, been touched by the divine life which is in Christ, and have become partakers of it, let us manifest it in our conduct and character.

Think of it! If Christ be risen from the dead, as we most assuredly believe, and as must be true or all history is an enigma, then we have not proof simply, but demonstration of the reality and glory of the spiritual world and of the future life. This life we now live in the flesh is only a prelude to and a preparatory discipline for an unending life of bliss and of progress. The existence of the spirit in this earthly body is only a transitory phase of its history. It is to live on forever, when this body of clay shall have dissolved, and will clothe itself or be clothed with an immortal body, suited to its new conditions and enlarged activities. These celestial bodies will be free from the limitations that attach to these bodies terrestrial. They will be like the glorified body of Jesus Christ. For we shall see him as he is and be like him. It is God's predestined purpose, so Paul tells us, that those who believe on Christ shall be conformed to his image. Splendid destiny! Inspiring outlook!

What a magnificent career opens up before the believing soul, in the white light that shines from the empty sepulcher at Jerusalem! Not mere everlasting existence, but glorious progress in knowledge, in moral achievement, in the capacity to appreciate and enjoy the wonderful things of God and in likeness to Him who is our soul's delight. We have had only a taste of life here. We shall have it there in all its divine richness and fullness—a "river of life." Here we see things dimly, partially; "we know in part and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." The toys of this present life—its riches, its palaces, its offices, its honors, its pleasures—will give place to royal gifts, to eternal realities and glories. Here we rejoice if we may but catch a glimpse of the divine glory, in the supreme moments of our life; there we shall behold Him with open vision, and shall dwell in the sunshine of his presence forever.

To realize, in some good degree, the glorious prospect opened to us by Christ's resurrection is to live under "the power of the world to come." It is to "know Christ and the power of his resurrection." It is, indeed, to live a risen life. For no man into whose soul these great realities have come by faith can ever live the same old life of bondage to sin and to material things. He has risen with Christ to a nobler, truer view of the meaning of life. He has been freed from an undue attachment to the things of the world, and henceforth seeks those things which are above. He will look upon all material blessings as means, not as ends, and will use them to glorify God and help his fellowmen. He weighs all values in the divine balances, and uses his time, talents and means accordingly. He sows here in view of the harvest that shall be at the end of the world.

The risen life is marked by supreme devotion to the kingdom of God; by the spirit of helpfulness toward all our fellowmen, especially to those who most need our help; by brotherly love; by charity toward all men; by a conscientious use of wealth, time and talents; by the love of truth, and the willingness to suffer, if need be, that it may have free course; by the joyful anticipation of future blessedness; by a keen appreciation of all the pure and beautiful things in this, God's world; by placing emphasis on the spirit of worship rather than on its forms, and upon the inner life rather than upon outward ceremonies; by the peace which cometh from childlike trust, and by the faith which rises above all obstacles.

Such are some of the characteristics of the risen life. Happy will we be, if the recurrence of this Easter time shall serve to remind us of the reality and supreme value of spiritual things, and lead us to a life in better correspondence with our faith.

A RED LETTER YEAR.

There are red letter years as well as days. This year of our Lord, A. D. 1899, should be such a year in the history of the American Christian Missionary Society, which celebrates its semi-centennial in October next. It is the Jubilee Year of this foster mother of all our missionary organizations. This completion of a half-century of honorable service and of memorable history deserves and should receive some notable recognition. It would indicate a sad lack of appreciation if we allowed the year to pass without some action that would mark it as a memorable year in our history.

In what way can we best show our gratitude to God for His blessing upon the society during the half century of its existence, and our appreciation of the service which the society has rendered to our cause and to the work of missions? This, we take it, is the only question that any loyal-hearted member among us can ask in relation to this Jubilee Year. This question is worthy of our thoughtful and prayerful consideration. We have already decided to celebrate the year, and some features of that celebration, especially as regards the National Convention, have been agreed upon. It remains, however, for the local churches and individual members to determine what shall be the real character of this jubilee celebration.

First of all, and more important than all, there should be a new and fresh consecration to God of our hearts, our talents, our means, our time and our energies in the work of advancing the kingdom of God. We have abundant reason to say to God, "Thou hast blessed our feeble efforts in co-operative mission work during the past half century, so graciously and so abundantly, that we feel ashamed that we have done so little. We, therefore, encouraged by the tokens of Thy approval, do pledge ourselves to live more truly, to pray more unceasingly, to work more diligently and to give our money and time more unstintedly that this great country and people may be brought under the divine leadership of Jesus Christ." To the extent that we may share this feeling and give it adequate expression in our deeds and lives will the celebration of this Jubilee Year meet with the divine approval and call down upon our efforts the larger blessing of God. Unless we come to feel that what we have done for the evangelization of this country, during the past half century, is a very imperfect expression of our appreciation of the truth He has committed to us, and of His blessing upon our work, we are not likely to rise to the demands of the new opportunities and responsibilities of the present and the future.

Next to consecration is organization in the accomplishment of any great achievement. If it is really in our hearts to make some fitting and worthy offering this Jubilee Year for the work of missions in our own land, we must plan for it, and all our forces must be mobilized and organized for effective work. As the annual offering for Home Missions is set for the first Lord's day in May, the time is short for the necessary preparation. Some means should be devised—and we know the Acting Board is working at this problem—of enlisting a large number of noncontributing churches. This is a most opportune time for laggard churches to join the holy crusade with their brethren to take this country for Jesus Christ. Much may be expected from wisely directed efforts in this direction. But more, perhaps, in the direction of doubling our annual offering so as to make it a fit jubilee offering, may be expected from an organized effort to reach each individual member in the churches already contributing, and by securing specially liberal donations from individual members because of the jubilee occasion. All this should be intelligently planned for. Every preacher or church leader should now become a general, planning, organizing and leading on his forces.

There should, of course, be a great Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati next October. This is being planned for, but its success will depend upon the work that is done between now and the assembling of that convention. The churches and individuals that have made no sacrifice in order to mark this Jubilee Year as a red letter year in our history, will hardly feel that they have any part or lot in this matter. They will lack that enthusiasm which helps wonderfully to make a great convention. If our secretaries are unable to report something like the sum we are seeking to raise, and it is seen that the churches and members have not been lifted up to any lofty heights of self-denial, but are moving along on the same old plane, no amount of religious oratory or jubilee music will inspire any great enthusiasm. It requires deeds more than words to make this a year memorable in our annals.

Hour of Prayer.

THE SPIRIT OF MISSIONS.

(Uniform Midweek Prayer meeting Topic, April 5th.)

(Acts 4:13-20; Rom. 1:13-16.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The spirit of missions is the spirit of heroism and gratitade to God, manifested in service to othres.

This meeting is the monthly concert of paryer for missions. The Scriptures seclected indicate what is the true spirit of missions. When Peter and John were charged "not to speak at all, nor teach, in the name of Jesus," their reply was, "whether it be right in the sight of God to harken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye: for we cannot but speak the things which we saw and heard" (vs. 18-20). Notice the force of the supreme imperative urging these men to preach the gospel in the face of imminent peril: "We cannot but speak the things which we saw and heard." In other words, we must be loyal to the light we have received. We must discharge the obligation that rests upon us because of the great facts we have witnessed and the great truths we have received. The danger of being false to their consciences and hence to their God was infinitely greater than any danger which men could inflict upon them. This is the secret of missionary heroism, of all true and loyal service.

Have we been especially favored of God? Have we experienced the power of Christ's redeeming love? Have we come into possession of knowledge concerning Christ and the secret of true life which a large part of our fellowmen have not received? If so, these facts create the same obligation on our part to communicate this knowledge to others. Nor should the fear of persecution and the sacrifice of worldly ambitions and sensual pleasures deter us from engaging in this service.

This truth is especially emphasized in the second quotation cited above. Paul was a man exceptionally endowed of God, not only with natural ability, but with treasures of spiritual knowledge, having himself experienced the marvelous power of the gospel of Christ to revolutionize a human life and turn all its purposes and energies in new directions. He felt the sense of infinite obligation resting upon him to share this experience with others. "I am debtor," he exclaims, "both to Greeks and barbarians, both to the wise and to the foolish. So as much as in me is"—that is the true measure of responsibility—"I am ready to preach the gospel to you also that are in Rome" (Rom. 1:14, 15). Here was the true altruistic spirit. He was debtor because he had received from God through Christ. This implies that the reception of divine favor of any kind imposes the obligation to share it with others. If this principle were universally recognized, what a revolution it would work in human society! The strong would share strength with the weak; the rich their abundance with the poor; the educated their knowledge with the ignorant; the redeemed of the Lord their salvation with the lost, and so the whole world would be lifted up to a higher level.

What is the measure of our obligation in the work of missions? Our ability, whether of means or of moral and intellectual resources. If freely we have received, freely must we give. And the thing that we are to seek to give to the world is that which alone can save it: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek" (v. 16). Having recognized in the gospel this power of God to lift us out of our low life of sin into the new life of holiness, our highest aim, our strongest impulse, or deepest sense of obligation should be to communicate it to others. This is the spirit of missions.

PRAYER.

We thank Thee, O Father, that Thou didst so love the world as to give Thine only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him might not perish, but have everlasting life. May the sense of gratitude to Thee for this unspeakable gift lead us to continual sacrifices in order that others may share in the blessings which have gladdened our lives. Forgive, we pray Thee, the indifference which the church has manifested in the great work of missions and grant us a revival of that spirit of missions which animated the apostles and first Christians; and may the whole earth soon be filled with the knowledge of salvation, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

All the increased light of the present age of the world on the great religious and moral problems of the day only exalt the inapproachable grandeur of the character of Christ and the glory of his religion. More truly than of old can we now say, "To whom can we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."

Editor's Easy Chair.

Thank God for sunshine, flooding the valleys, glorifying the distant hilltops and bringing warmth and good cheer to all living things! For clear, blue skies that bend above the earth, melting away into the infinite azure and suggesting the eternal. For hills and dales and mountains and deep winding valleys. For trees with stately trunks that lift their branches high in the air, for rugged rocks, for cool, gushing springs, for clear, sparkling rills that laugh along their way as they ripple over the smooth stones. For the tender, young spring flowers that peep out among the dry leaves in response to the warm breath from the Southland. Yes, in spite of a recent criticism of an Eastern preacher, we can still sing of our country and its natural beauty,

> "I love thy rocks and rills,
> Thy woods and templed hills,
> My heart with rapture thrills,
> Like that above."

It is a shallow sort of criticism that sees nothing but materialism in love of "rocks and rills and woods and templed hills." They are but visible expressions of an invisible Power, that not only "makes for righteousness," but for beauty, for grace and loveliness. Whose hand reared these hills, scooped out these hollows, established these springs and caused the tender flowers and grass to spring from the bosom of the earth? Are not all these things intended for man's use, and designed to minister to his higher nature as well as to his lower? There is, of course, a class of people who see nothing in these works of God but their material uses. They belong to that class of persons of whom the poet sings:

> "A primrose growing on the brim
> A yellow primrose was to him,
> And nothing more."

But there are others who recognize that man does not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

There are three methods by which visitors at these Springs may visit places of interest in the neighborhood—by hack, carriage or tallyho, on horseback or on foot. The first is best suited to old people and invalids, the second is most popular and the third has its advantages to those who love the pedestrian art. It permits one to pursue certain paths where even a safe-footed pony would hardly venture. But this sort of exercise produces weariness of the flesh, even with the aid of a staff, and after one has tried it a few times he feels inclined to resort to horseback or carriage. We have found the blending of these three modes of locomotion to be the most satisfactory. But, as for us, we are partial to the horse and we are glad he is coming into fashion again. He may be a "vain thing for safety" in time of war when the trust is in him rather than in the God of battles, but he is a very reliable beast to carry one over these mountain roads, and we never feel more at home than when astride of one, if he be a noble specimen of the genus equus, and well gaited.

On a little jaunt over one of these mountains to-day, afoot, we noticed that nature was making her preparation for Easter.

own under the leaves we found the white otlets of several early flowers, getting ady for their advent in a few days, with beauty of apparel and a delicacy of agrance unequaled by Solomon in all his lory. All through the autumn and winter ey have been dormant and buried out of ght, but the warm kiss of these early ring days is waking them into life and eauty again. Is this not nature's proph-cy of the resurrection? Paul reinforced is argument for the resurrection by eferring to the familiar phenomena of egetable life. "That which thou thyself west is not quickened except it die: and at which thou sowest, thou sowest not e body that shall be, but a bare grain, it ay chance of wheat, or of some other kind; ut God giveth it a body even as it pleased im and to each seed a body of its own." odily dissolution which men call death is o argument against the life hereafter, as s shown by the life processes of nature, r even the grain you sow is not quicken-d into a larger and more glorious life xcept it die. And as to the body, God ill attend to that. Just as he gives to ach seed when it springs into new life a ody of its own, so he will give to man a ody suited to the new conditions of the fe hereafter. The God of nature is the od of grace and revelation. If He thus ares for the flowers and for all forms of egetable life, will He not much more rovide a body for you, O ye of little faith?

Current Religious Thought

A recent number of the Observer, this ity, contains the following strong vindica-ion of the rights of the people against rusts which are forming with such rapid-ty in our land:

Every morning it is announced that some ew trust has been organized with an enor-ous capital. Stock is watered and distrib-ted to legislators who agree to keep still hile the corporations rob the helpless people. here are now about two hundred trusts in the nited States which control all the necessities f life. The hard earnings of the people are axed to fatten the purses of millionaires who lready have more than they can use. It is stimated that a thousand millions of dollars ent last year into the pockets of the members f unlawful trusts. It costs every man, woman nd child in America at least ten dollars each o support the trusts of the country. While uch gigantic wrongs are practiced on the eople the politicians elected to make laws ave simply acquiesced in the iniquity. No onder many of the best and most thoughtful en in the country are getting alarmed. Our stitutions are undergong a strain that is esting them to their foundations. The right o live is a sacred right, and the time is com-ng when men will rebel against legalized rime. Red-handed anarchy may set the orch to the piles of riches which have been eaped up by unjust means. The insatiable reed of the rich is cultivating a spirit of atred in the hearts of the unfortunate, and hat hatred cannot be restrained always. In-ustice is always resented by a brave people. he poor of this country do not ask for equal-ty; they simply ask for justice. The honest ard-working people of the United States will ot long endure the burdens now laid upon hem by unlawful combinations. They will ot continue to pay tribute to trusts for their aily bread.

Here is Dr. H. A. Stinson's opinion of f the Catholic Church and its future as xpressed in an article in the Independent, few weeks ago:

I have long believed that it is the purpose f God in his own time to revive and renew ae great historic churches, however corrupt r dead they may now be. They are churches of Jesus Christ; they bear his name; they have each filled a large place in the unfolding of his kingdom; despite many accretions of false doctrine and corrupt practice they all hold firmly the great essential truths, and in this respect are quite as near to us as we Protestant Christians are to one another; and strenuous and just as has been the contest we have often been compelled to wage with them, and eager as has been the propoganda we have sought and in some directions are even now seeking to carry on against them, I do not believe that God is going to suffer their candle to be put out, or ever to make them over as Protestants.

James S. Stevens, professor of Physics in the University of Maine, doubts some of the positions of psychical scientists. Here is a paragraph on the subject from an article in a recent number of the Independent:

I know it may savor somewhat of the question asked by the Pharisees concerning the teachings of Christ, nevertheless I am going to ask: "Have any of the physical scientists believed these teachings?" I admit at the outset a strong pfejudice, but I am bound to state that investigations along this line may be conducted more satisfactorily by those who are in the habit of making quantitative measurements than by those whose department is speculative science. After the test has been made and the existence or nonexistence of the phenomena in question has been settled, then the physiologist is pre-eminently the man of authority in developing a satisfactory theory of their operation. And unless I am very much mistaken the great majority of physicists, astronomers and chemists would disavow a belief in these supra-natural phenomena, if indeed they did not affirm their disbelief in them. For example, I am permitted to quote from two letters—one from a man who has received greater recognition abroad than any other American physical scientist, and the other from a younger man who is without doubt one of the leading exponents of modern mathematical physics in this country. The former says in substance that such phenomena as telepathy, mental control of matter and the like are unverified; the latter that the general position taken by physicists is that there is yet not sufficient evidence to justify them in the belief in such phenomena as telepathy or the direct control of matter by the mind. And while there are a few exceptions, these opinions are representative.

The Literary Digest for March 25th quotes at length from the Church Economist, severely criticising ministers et al., who receive letters of inquiry with stamp enclosed, but make no reply. The ratio of return letters are first stated, then the Church Economist's advice in the matter as follows:

"The proportion of answers varies, of course, but the approximate returns are pretty well known. For every 100 letters sent out, supposing the inquiry to be a simple one, from 30 to 50 will come back if the letters are addressed to Methodists, 15 to 40 if addressed to Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists, Disciples of Christ, or Lutherans, and from none to 10 or 12 if to Episcopalians or Roman Catholics. Now suppose I send out 10,000 letters—this is a big country and one cannot do small things and succeed among 75,000,000 people. In one lot this fall we sent out 1,600,000 letters.

"Let us say in a 10,000 lot I enclose a two-cent stamp in each. There is $200. The receipt of 4,000 replies, even to a simple inquiry, where no money was asked and nothing inconsistent demanded, would astonish me. I would call it a high-water mark. There is $80 accounted for. What becomes of the other $120? Or if I had been compelled to and had addressed Episcopalians, what becomes of the other $175? Incidentally Methodists may here see why they receive more inquiries than do ministers of other churches. Incidentally, too, you may ask why this difference? I can not answer. I only know it to be universally true. I never heard of a man in an occupation similar to mine who did not find it so. And I may add that, contrary to the general opinion, ministers located in large cities answer quite as generally as those located in small towns. Ministers in the South are usually obliging, if there is any difference in parts of the country.

"We know to a limited extent what becomes of stamps sent out by us and that never come back to us. We have a way of 'keying' them, and while we cannot trace very many, we can trace some, and they are enough to show us that our stamps do not reach the waste-paper basket and are not burned up.

"Speaking for our house alone our postage bill, during a season of three to four months, incurred for circulars which call for a reply, may reach $10,000. At the most favorable consideration we lose $6,000 of it. We are a reputable business house. Our inquiry was, we believe, a proper one. We trust ministers with $6,000 of our money—and lose it! That is the fact which we see.

"What ought ministers to do? I have no right to say what ministers ought to do. But I know what they might do, and by the doing of it they would change the opinion held concerning them by a large nnmber of people. Within the last year or two a number of houses in all of the cities in the East are paying an additional $1 per 1,000 to copyists for writing the name of the person to whom the stamped return envelope is sent in the upper lefthand corner of the enclosed envelope in question. This involves expense other than for the address, since additional time and care are required to get the right envelope into the proper enclosure. This envelope could and in my view should be dropped into the mail, not used for other purposes. If the recipient of inquiries does not find his name on such envelope, or such postal card, he would help the minsiterial reputation if he wrote the same upon it, and, sealed or not, dropped it into the mail. Barring the inevitable losses in the mails, wrong addresses, etc., all of my money would then be accounted for. The receipt of the empty envelope would tell me that the minister did not care to reply. I would know that it was essential to try another man in the same town.

"I freely grant the right of ministers to throw away the rubbish which I know they receive by the ton in the aggregate. But I question any one's right to appropriate property to his own use, even if it is only a two-cent stamp. I furnish an easy way for him not to do so, and yet tell me, at no trouble to himself, that he can not comply with my request."

William D. Chisholm, in an article in the New York Observer, on "The Meaning of Easter," presents the idea of the spiritual necessity of the resurrection of the dead thus:

To call death rest strikes us as a mere comforting figure of speech. Rest implies existence—only with suspended mental cognizance and bodily relaxation. How can that be rest which knows no waking? There can be no waking unless it be a spiritual as well as a corporeal reanimation in the world beyond the grave. The resurrection thus opens the gates of life and lifts those who partake in it beyond the poor honor of being links in an infinite chain. The resurrection is a spiritual fact first and foremost, and it can only be made plain to a true spiritual comprehension. Saint Paul, the most acute of logicians, pointed out its difficulties to the natural and carnal mind. The utmost reaches of mere philanthropy or altruism, the keenest moral sense, the inspirations of a life of rectitude and usefulness, would not roll the rock away from the gates of death.

None of these could project that splendid vision of the parted tomb in the reddening dawn—nor could they open to the imagination of any a similar vision, as the reward of life's toils and hopes. The resurrection has its analogy in nature, it is true, and especially in the springtime, in whose course this feast of universal meaning always comes throughout most of the civilized and Christian world, save in lands far beneath the southern tropic. But the natural analogy is a mere adjunct to the spiritual revelation. The resurrection means what it does, not merely or first of all because the world needed the hope of immortality, but because in the counsels of Heaven the hope of immortality was thus decreed. Like everything else in true theology, it is a specific fact, with a specific bearing upon the Christian life in this world, and not merely the carrying out among the Caucasian races of to-day of similar hopes that may have animated Plato or Aristotle or Confucius or Buddha.

This is the true meaning of Easter. The analogy is poetic, is beautiful, is linked with all that is dearest in bud and bloom, and dying storms and unlocked fountains. But the analogy is secondary, the spiritual fact is primary in importance. "I am the resurrection and the life," were the words of Christ. An Easter of storm and snow would still bear out the splendor of the analogy. For it is death that we escape, as well as life and youth that we gain. It is the rainbow of promise foreshadowsd in faithful Noah — the olive branch of promise wreathed around the cross and blooming in Arimathea over the empty tomb.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

SECOND DECADE.

OUR FIRST FOREIGN MISSIONARY.

B. B. TYLER.

After the selection of the people and the field, with whom and in which to begin work, there was no difficulty in securing the services of a man eminently qualified by nature, education and grace to work among the Jews in Jerusalem. This man was James Turner Barclay. Dr. Barclay was born in Hanover County, Va., May 22, 1807. He was of Scotch-Irish descent on his father's and English on his mother's side. His father was Robert Barclay. Miss Sarah Coleman Turner became the wife of Mr. Robert Barclay, Jan. 1, 1800. The father of our Dr. J. T. Barclay died when the future missionary, preacher and author was but a small boy. The lad received no special religious training, although his mother was a Baptist and an excellent woman. In the course of time the widow of Robert Barclay became the wife of Captain Harris, a wealthy tobacco planter of Albemarle County, Va. Captain Harris was very kind to Mrs. Barclay's sons—Thomas and James. He caused them to be educated in the University of Virginia. Thomas studied law and James, after graduating from the University of Virginian, graduated in medicine from the University of Pennsylvania. He was, however, never deeply interested in his profession. He was by nature religious. He appears to have been a born missionary. His passsion was to be good and to do good.

When James T. Barclay was twenty-three years old he married Miss Julia Ann Sowers. She was at the time of her marriage less than seventeen years old. Her father was an elder in the Presbyterian Church and a gentleman of property. Miss Sowers' education and social manners were those of a high-bred Virginia lady. She was a fit companion of the noble man whose wife she became.

At the time of their marriage neither Dr. Barclay nor his wife were professed Christians, but by and by they confessed Christ and united with the Presbyterian Church in Charlottesville, Va.

Mrs. Barclay was a missionary enthusiast. When she was yet a young woman she sent her jewels, among which were her diamond engagement ring, her set of pearls, a set of cut coral and a handsome diamond pin to Dr. Converse, of Richond, Va., to be sold for the benefit of the missionary cause, while they were members of the Presbyterian Church. Dr. and Mrs. Barclay offered themselves to the Presbyterian Mission Board to serve as missionaries in China. Thomas Barclay a short time before this was drowned in the James River while bathing. James was, therefore, the only son of his mother. Against his departure to a Foreign Mission field she, therefore, protested with great earnestness. Her tears and entreaties prevailed; James decided, at least for the present, to remain at home.

Dr. Barclay after this heard R. L. Coleman, a prominent preacher in those days among the Disciples in Virginia, preach the "ancient gospel," as it was called. Under the preaching of Mr. Coleman he became convinced that infant baptism had no foundation in the New Testement, and that the baptism of believers was required by the teaching of Jesus and his apostles. He also learned that baptism—Christian baptism—is the immersion in water of a penitent believer in the name of the Lord Jesus, and into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. He and his wife were, therefore, baptized in the James River and identified themselves with the Disciples of Christ.

This was an occasion of great grief to their parents. His mother said that though she had lost two husbands and a son, the fact that James had become a "Campbellite" was the occasion of the greatest grief she had ever experienced!

In the selection of Dr. James T. Barclay to go as a missionary to Jerusalem there was the choice and devotion to a most holy service of the best of the flock.

His paternal pedigree ran back to Robert Barclay, the Quaker, of the seventeenth century, known as the author of the "Apology" or defense of the persecuted Friends. His grandfather was a personal friend of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson. When the former was President and the latter was Secretary of State, Mr. Barclay was appointed Consul-General to France. He was also sent to Morocco, and later was sent to Tangiers as Consul-General.

Dr. and Mrs. Barclay, six years after the death of Thomas Jefferson, purchased Monticello, where they resided three years.

Dr. Barclay was an enthusiast in science as well as in religion. He devoted much time to a study of chemistry and metallurgy with especial reference to the prevention of counterfeiting and loss by abrasion in handling of our hard money. The value of his services was recognized by those who were in a position to understand them. In 1857 he was appointed by the President of the United States in special charge of the Philadelphia mint. The results of his experiments were endorsed by Professors Rogers and Vatheck, eminent scientists of Philadelphia, who who were appointed by the President to co-operate with him. So far was the value of his work in this department recognized that a bill was introduced in Congress to pay him $100,000, but failed by one vote to pass—that of Senator Mason, of Virginia. It is said that this was on account of a grudge that Mr. Mason entertained against Dr. Barclay—a feeling which had its origin during their student days in the University of Virginia. But the failure to secure this snug sum of money was chiefly on account of the Doctor's enthusiasm for the Jerusalem mission. Had he remained at home and looked after the business, as a shrewd man of the world would have done, the bill doubtless would have passed both houses of Congress and received the signature of the President. He seems, however, to have been utterly indifferent, personally, to the value of money. Dr. Barclay w liberal almost to a fault. He gave hi self very literally with all that he posse ed to the work of the Master.

When he tendered his services to t American Christian Missionary Socie the offer included his family—Mrs. Barcl his sons, Robert Gutzlaff, aged eighte John Judson, aged sixteen and his daug ter Sarah, aged thirteen—who became t wife of the Hon. Augustus Johns United States Consul at the Island Cyprus. At the time of the organizati of the society he and his family beca life members by the payment of t stipulated fee. He also assisted by mon contributions to make others members the society. The abiding missionary i terest of Dr. and Mrs. Barclay is seen the names of their sons—Gutzlaff a Judson.

On the fifth day of October, 1848—mo than a year before the organization of t American Christian Missionary Society Dr. James T. Barclay addressed a letter the corresponding secretary of the Chri tian Bible Society, organized in 1845, Cincinnati, in which he said: "Should yo deliberations result in the establishment a Foreign Missionary Society or depa ment, or should it be deemed expedient engage seriously in the cause of Forei Missions, on any scriptural plan, which t good Lord grant." . . .

"In my estimation the time has co when we not only may, but should a must attempt immediately to dissemina the truth as it is in Jesus among t benighted pagans, both by colporte operations and regular Foreign Missio Would that I had the wealth of a Crœs to convocate to this all-important ente prise! But of silver and gold I have lit —very little—yet have I a heart to attem whatever such feeble instrumentality c be expected to accomplish, and should organize a missionary body, as I trust will, and some be found in our ranks wi ing to 'hazard their lives' for the purpo of declaring the name of the Lord Jes Christ to them that 'sit in the darkne and in the shadow of death,' cheerful will I say, 'Here am I; send me.'"

THE FUTURE LIFE DEMONSTRATED

A BELIEVER.

Of the three sources from which ev dences of a future life are drawn, that revelation is the most satisfactory. If t evidences of a future life drawn from t moral and physical universe were su ciently strong to establish such a faith men before the revelation of holy prophe and apostles was given, or to whom su a revelation was unknown, how much sure then, must be the basis of one's faith w to all past testimony can add that of the holy men of God.

We cannot now speak of all the ev dences of a future life to be found in t Holy Bible, but only of that one which the mind of the greatest of the apostl superseded all others, and that was and the resurrection of Jesus Christ from t ad. This is the climax of all testimony on this point, for if Christ be not risen, en there is no resurrection and the dead ave perished.

The only other attempt to assure the quiring mind upon this point is that ade by what is commonly called Spiritual m, or more properly, modern Spiritism. But, however worthy their attempts in is direction, it cannot be said that they ave furnished any absolute or direct testiony upon this subject. All the phemena peculiar to this school of thought an be explained upon other theories than iat of communications and visitations om the spirit-land. The resurrection of esus Christ from the dead, therefore, reains the chief testimony upon this subct.

Of the more than five hundred witnesses ho are mentioned in the New Testament s having seen Jesus after his resurrection om the dead, three of these at least bear irect testimony to us on that subject. Vhat the others saw is good testimony, ut it is more in the nature of hearsay vidence. But Paul and Peter and John ach tells us that he saw Jesus alive after is crucifixion.

In order to appreciate the strength of ese three witnesses let us take that of aul in 1 Cor. 15:8: "Last of all he was en of me." In this statement there is ut one person between us and Christ, aul. This man tells us that he saw the ord alive after his crucifixion. The only uestion is as to the authenticity of this pistle. If this can be fully established, en all the intervening centuries are reoved and we stand in the presence of ne who saw the Lord alive after his pason.

Now it may happen that some of the ooks were not written by the persons hose names they wear, but if the testiony of scholars may be admitted, there is ot the shadow of doubt about the authenicity of the two Corinthian letters. They ere absolutely written by the apostle aul. The unity of scholarly criticism is ot more concurrent upon the authenticity f any other book of the Bible, neither of ny other historic document. Here, then, s a written statement from an eyeitness fully competent to testify on the act in question, and his testimony has reained unshaken to this day.

Now of this grade of testimony we have appily two others, John and Peter, each f whom with the same positiveness delare that they saw him alive after his rucifixion. "That which we have seen nd heard declare we unto you," says John 1 John 1:3). Peter's language differs, ut the fact assertsd is the same: "Begotn us again unto a live hope by the resurection of Jesus Christ from the dead." Vhat these men say that they saw is trongly corroborated by the history of heir sermons and their ministry in the cts, by Luke.

Our faith in the existence of a future fe, then, does not rest upon spirit visitaons from the unseen world, neither upon ny message, oral, written or otherwise om the spirit-land, but upon the more ositive testimony of the return of Jesus hrist from the land beyond the river of eath.

THE WOMEN OF CALVARY.

T. H. BLENUS.

"And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, who also bewailed and lamented him." In the midst of that sanguinary and ferocious crowd that surrounded Christ on Calvary, one group is found which is "afflicted in all the afflictions of Jesus." It consists of some devoted women who, full of admiration for his excellencies and of gratitude for his benefits, many of which they had been the partakers and the witnesses, follow this innocent victim to the altar of sacrifice, and offer him all they have to offer, the tribute of loving hearts and tearful eyes. Matthew informs us that among them were Mary Magdalene, Mary, the mother of James and Joses; and the wife of Zebedee, to whom John and Mark gave the name Salome. These women at the cross give the most important lessons to all Christians, and especially to their own sex, of which we must ever hold them as at once the ornament and the model. They followed their Lord with faith, and love, and courage. The faith that Jesus was the Son of God induced these women to follow him from Galilee to Jerusalem, and eventually to trace his bloodstained footprints to Calvary. Their faith was of that permanent nature, incapable of being destroyed by the melancholy and terrible scenes passing before them, which shook the confidence of so many who once "trusted in Jesus, that it was he who would redeem Isreal." It was an enlightened faith founded, not on a blind prejudice or a chimerical hope, but on the solid rock of the instructions of the Savior, and an experience of his grace and power. Seated at the feet of Jesus, they had listened attentively to his doctrine, had seen its glory and excellence, and had felt its transforming influence. They beheld, it is true, Jesus betrayed, accused of blasphemy and sedition, condemned to the most infamous punishment, and led to the cross amidst the maledictions of priests, the scoffs of the great and the reproaches of the multitude. But all this did not shake their faith in and love for the Savior. Touched with the excellence of his divine teaching, that lively sensibility of heart and soul with which woman is endowed was purified, ennobled, augmented, and there was produced a complete and unalterable devotedness of affection. They had opened their hearts to to him, and with them all the resources which the state of humiliation that he condescended to assume rendered necessary. He was poor, and they supplied his wants; hungry, and they gave him to eat; thirsty, and they gave him drink; had not where to lay his head, and their homes were opened to him. They leave Galilee, their country, to "minister unto him," and having thus shown him during his life those attentions which active and warm sensibilities inspire, they come to his cross to show their sympathy and their grief. These true women displayed an exalted courage and a wonderful magnanimity. The men who had been the companions of the Savior's labors, the witnesses of his virtues and his miracles, and who, from the habitual and intimate communion in which they lived with him, ought to have acquired the most inviolable devotedness and the most heroic courage; yet, how far inferior do they now deport themselves in comparison to these devoted women. They are terrified, nonplussed, disconcerted; they fly, and abandon the Lord. One single one dares to follow him to the house of Caiaphas, but at a distance, and then only to deny him and blush to be called his disciple; and this is the one who had declared he would follow him to prison and to death. What Peter promised, these devoted women did. And yet, how many temptations and trials they had to overcome, because they were women. Besides the dangers that were common to all who showed themselves the disciples of Christ, great obstacles were before them through the weakness and timidity of their sex, and by the maxims and customs of the world. What apparent rashness it was to expose themselves to an unbridled soldiery and a bloodthirsty and furious mob. What seeming indecorum, to display before a whole nation their strong and affectionate attachment to a man condemned by the voice of the people, as well as by the sentence of the ruler, and who is now to terminate his life by a most infamous death. What fanaticism it seemed to divide the ignominy of the cross by the tears they were seen to shed. To ordinary souls, these would be specious reasonings, they would be delicate and strong temptations, but Mary and her companions were not ordinary souls. Animated by that faith which subdues the world, and by that love which casts out fear, they overcame all these obstacles and braved all the dangers. Their hearts had been too profoundly impressed by the sublime life and lessons of their Master to fear them that can only kill the body, but who cannot kill the soul, not to prefer the reproach of Christ before the blessings of earth; and these hearts which had been entirely devoted to their divine Lord during his life, resolved to display that devotion to him till his last sigh, and at the foot of the cross, and thus show themselves faithful even unto death. What a salutary emulation does the example of these holy women inspire in every human heart. Our Creator has endowed woman with greater warmth of feeling and sensibility of heart than man, qualities most wonderfully favorable to the reception and cultivation of religious impressions. It has been most truly said that "if Christianity were compelled to flee from the mansions of the great, the academies of philosophers, the halls of legislators or the throng of busy men, we should find her last and purest retreat with woman at the fireside; her last altar would be the female heart; her last audience would be children gathered around the knees of a mother her last sacrifice the secret prayer escaping in silence from her lips and heard, perhaps, only at the throne of God."

DOES GOD CAUSE DEATH?

GEO. T. SMITH.

"Man is immortal till his work is done; therefore Garfield will not die," enthusiastically declared one of our preachers in the summer of 1881. Did God take him from us? When a little child, an only child, dies, is it fair to say that God saw that he was idolized and took the child in order to draw the parents to him? That such result may follow is a legitimate prayer.

A young, zealous preacher held a meeting for two months. Up late at night, visiting all day, he felt worn out two weeks before he stopped. At a funeral, in the goodness of his heart, he wished all to hear, so he stood in the door, with a raw wind blowing, took brain fever and died. Did God in his inscruitable providence remove him? He lets John L. Sullivan, Corbett, Fitzsimmons, Ingersoll live.

It might be said that since God is the Creator and Ruler of the world, nothing can occur without his permission, therefore he does all. Be careful; you make him to be the author of sin. When a cyclone kills men, is the proper funeral resolution to be, "God has taken our brother?" What about the wicked man who was killed at the same time? Who took him?

The Wisdom of Solomon says (chap. 1, v. 13), "God made not death, neither hath he pleasure in the destruction of the living." But the Wisdom of Solomon is counted an apocryphal book by Protestants. The Roman Catholic can argue from that Scripture; we cannot. Yet it may be a true saying.

When the tower of Siloam fell and killed eighteen men, it was not a judgment for their sins. When Pilate killed some Galileans, they were not sinners above others who lived on. Do not these two classes include all causes of death? Nature's laws and violence. God did not kill Alexander Hamilton through the pistol of Aaron Burr.

By sin death came into the world (Rom. 5). By man came death (1 Cor. 15). Jesus came to destroy him who has the power of death, that is the devil (Heb. 2). The devil was a murderer from the beginning (Jno. 8:44).

The devil bent a woman over, made her so weak that she could not lift herself up for eighteen years (Luke 13). How did he afflict that woman? Not by putting his hand on her and bending her over, but by causing the race to sin, by introducing disease, pain and death among men.

The good man dies because he violates nature's laws, the sinner lives to a hearty age because he obeys the voice of God in nature. These laws usually do not cross. In one sense, in a very important sense, it is true that the devil digs every grave that billows the green earth. That word "usually" destroys the symmetry of the argument.

During the French Revolution atheists in the streets of Paris at noonday shook their fists at the blue vault above and challenged God to prove his existence by striking them dead. On the other hand saints, heroically staying by the yellow fever sufferers, have met an early death. Usually man receives according to his compliance with law in its different realms. But corporations have no immortality. For transgression they are punished in time, and on earth. That involves the innocent in the whirlpool of death. "Shall there be evil in a city and the Lord has not done it?" Yes, if it be moral evil. Punishment of a city for its sins is clearly meant.

In a parable Jesus tells of a selfish man to whom God said, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee." That looks decisive. Luke describes the impiety of Herod Agrippa, taking the glory due to God, and says that an angel smote him so he died. Josephus says his death followed the praises of his parasites, says it was in pain and after five days' sickness. His account would coincide with a death caused by trichina. That would be, then, some imperfectly cooked pork. Luke says he was eaten with worms. In the Hebrew phraseology any natural agent could be called an angel of God. But the evident lesson from the Acts is that it was a judgment sent upon him. Then God sends death. The only relief seems to be that of the Hegelian, who always rises to higher synthesis. He would tell us that all these cases where death comes are cases of the wicked, that death is the wages of sin, that God is a God of law and justice and kills no one. Sin alone slays men.

Since "he giveth his beloved sleep," and "precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints," pious souls will continue to see in the death of every good man the angels of God standing around ready to bear him away as they did Lazarus to the abodes of the blest.

THE PERSONAL CONCEPTION OF CHRISTIANITY.

GEO. PLATTENBURG.

A score of years ago Dr. Phillips Brooks, discussing "The Pulpit and Popular Scepticism," used these words: "If there has been one change which above all others has altered our modern Christianity from what the Christian religion was in apostolic times, I think beyond all doubt it must be this, the substitution of a belief in doctrine for loyalty to a person as the essence and the test of Christian life." As to the question of a revival, he says that it must needs be one that "makes Christianity strong against the enemies which beset her, and clear in the sight of the multitudes who are bewildered about her; it certainly must be the recoronation of her personal idea, the reassertion of the fact that Christ is Christianity, and not to hold that this or that concerning him is true." Long before Phillips Brooks became known, Alexander Campbell and other men of daring thought and heroic mold made the personal idea of Christianity the center of a restoration movement which has phenomenally grown into a mighty force among men. They turned from the modern church that "enthroned a creed," to the apostolic one that "enthroned a Person." For the sake of distinctness I look at the case from two points of view:

I. The personal idea as emphasized in the ministry of Christ.

Christ came to the "lost." This condition is variously described. In the life of the lost there is a deprivation, a lack of something; hence, the class is described, not as suffering only, but as intensely craving that which meets its recognized emptiness. Hunger, thirst and such words are used as convey the complex notion of pain and craving. Jesus, bleeding and torn by scourge and twisted thorn at the crown of his agony, with pale lips cried, "I thirst!" The Master puts in the mouth of the prodigal who, seeing the fullness of his father's house and his own lack, these words of pain and craving: "And I perish with hunger." This recognition of want is the first step towards that condition described as "hungering and thirsting after righteousness." Christ comes to this hungering race, not with some theory of goodness, but simply to gather men about his own person. Hear him: "I am the bread of life: he that cometh to ME shall never hunger; and he that believeth on ME shall never thirst" (Jno. 6:35). The singular intensity of this personal conception in the mind of Christ is expressed in these words: "So he that eateth ME, even he shall live by ME" (Jno. 6:37). Among the indestructible cravings of the human soul is the desire of continued being—eternal life. Hear him again: "He that believeth in ME, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in ME shall never die" (Jno. 11:25, 26).

These are very large claims, nor is it strange that his hearers wondered at these words of Joseph's son (Jno. 6:42). If Jesus was conscious of being no more than the natural son of Joseph, how is it conceivable that he could make such claims for himself? Was he self-deceived? Was he consciously practicing a deception upon others? Either affirmation would be at war with the transcedent purity and holiness of his life and character as depictured by the evangelists. Could he make these lying pretentions and at the same time be what even Strauss concedes, "The highest model of religion within the reach of our thought?"

II. The personal idea in the apostolic ministry.

The article of Dr. Brooks, to which reference has been already made, says: "It is the glory of the earliest church that it had for its people no demanded creed of abstract doctrine whatever. They had no creed but Christ. Christ was their creed." A few instances of apostolic preaching will suffice to show the leading assumption of this paper, and how unlike their preaching was too much modern discourse, so styled. This is a good place to say that the Disciples of Christ are to-day the only people who make it their distinctly avowed mission to proclaim the Person of Christ as the only authorized foundation of the church (1 Cor. 3:11) and the sole bond of union.

1. On Pentecost, the natal day of the Messianic reign, Peter proclaimed facts simply—how Jesus was crucified, how God raised him from the dead, how he ascended and was crowned both Lord and Christ.

2. Philip sent to the eunuch, found him reading in the prophecy of Isaiah, and he "opened his mouth and began at the same Scripture and preached unto him JESUS" (Acts 8:35).

3. Paul, immediately after his conversion, "preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God" (Acts 9:20). Again, at Thessalonica, Paul "reasoned with them out of the Scriptures, opening and alleging that Christ must needs have suffered and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is the Christ." He preached "whom" and not what. Then it was in whom do you believe; now it is what do you believe. Then it was belief in a Person; now it is the conception of a theory. This great man, in the fullness of his ministry to that Gentile Gomorrah, Corinth, "lulled by luxurious pleasur's languid strains" into abysms vile and reeking with the foul dregs of every land, wrote in no "Philonian allegories," nor in the enticing words of man's wisdom, but in impassioned simplcity, "Christ and him crucified."

4. John, looking back to the Master's own saying, exclaims: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God" (1 Jno. 5:1). I am here constrained to quote a sentence from Neander, in his introduction to this first epistle of John: "The central point of the conflict between truth and error was the PERSON OF CHRIST; and it became more and more evident that a full and complete conception of Christianity in its relation to faith and life must be based on a full conception of the Person of Christ himself." Every spiritual truth of the New Testament comes from this personal conception as from a center of radiation. From the city of Destruction to the illuminated summits of the Delectable Mountains, above the whole "race that is set before us," it is ever "looking unto Jesus." The way is oftimes "dark and thorny," and toiling on with unshod feet we are sustained by him "who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame." Gloomy mountains may rise before us with their ragged escarpments, but we struggle upward from ledge to ledge of flinty sharpness with bleeding fingers, and yet not despairing, for we know that beyond the crest lies Beulah, "the land of corn and wine" and—rest.

IS IT DEATH, OR A CHANGE?

MARGUERITE LEIGH BURR.

Since that sad day when just outside the garden of Eden the great tragedy of jealousy and hatred was enacted, and the cry that death was in the world rang out o'er the earth, man has stood appalled before the mystery of the life that now is, and that which is to come.

True it is that many who "walk by faith and not by sight," who honestly and truly feel that they can read their title clear to the inheritance of the saints, pause shudderingly before the dark curtain that divides the life that now is from the untried life of the soul.

"It is all unknown to me!" the human heart cries, shrinkingly, and so indeed was this life unknown to us when born into it. The life of the unborn child and the change that comes over its senses when ushered into this world are doubtless great, but no more wonderful than the change that comes to the soul in embryo in this life when ushered into the fuller, freer life prepared for the people of God.

The tiny babe has gradually and responsively to its parents' emotions taken on the characteristics of the parent, until when born into this strange new world, it rests naturally and peacefully in parental arms, while breath of violets and song of birds welcome it into a higher, larger life.

"I am come," said Jesus, that ye might have life and have it more abundantly." So, doubtless, shall they who are "begotten by the Word of truth," in that spiritual embryonic life where all growth is of character, and drawing all life from the Spirit of God, "grow up unto him in all things," "unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

"For as we have borne the image of the earthly, we must also bear the image of the heavenly." And having this life within us the change will be but a pleasant transition from the life that now is into the one for which all spiritual growth has been preparing us. And we, too, doubtless, like new-born babes, ushered into that glad, new world, will find our natural and blissful resting-place in the everlasting arms until our unaccustomed eyes grow accustomed to the grand, sweet light that comes from the throne of God; and, angel-guided, we come to understand the mysteries and opportunities of the richer, larger life of the soul.

"Forever with the Lord,
Amen, so let it be!"

De Lassus, Mo.

THE CURSED FIG TREE.

W. H. BAGBY.

And seeing a fig tree by the wayside he came to it, and found nothing thereon but leaves only; and he saith unto it, Let there be no fruit from thee henceforward forever.—Matt 21:19.

Jesus and his disciples had spent the night in Bethany, probably the guests of Lazarus and his sisters. Having risen early and taken their departure before the the first meal of the day, probably, they were returning to the great city. On the way the Master became hungry and seeing a fig tree standing alone by the wayside, approached it in the hope of finding some fruit thereon; but he was doomed to disappointment, for he found nothing but leaves only. Gazing upon the barren tree he said: "Let there be no fruit from thee henceforward forever!" then went on his way. The stirring scenes of the day drove the incident from the minds of the disciples. Their interest in it was reawakened the next morning when, as they were passing that way again, they observed with astonishment, that the tree had withered to its very roots. Then Jesus sought to impress upon their minds the important lesson, to receive which the incident was meant to prepare them. Not for their benefit alone did he speak, but for future generations as well. We can pause in our walk with the Master and learn the lessons taught by the withered leaves of the tree and the wonderful words of the Christ.

Standing there alone by the wayside, stripped of its foliage by the mocking winds, and withered to its very roots, it tells the sad story of the inevitable end of the unfruitful life. The curse pronounced upon the tree did not simply condemn it to perpetual unfruitfulness; it doomed it to death—eternal death. There are doubtless many to whose heart it would not strike terror to be destined to lead forever the lives they live in time—lives of empty show and shameless sham. How many there are in the church whose faith is only foliage, and whose love is but leaves. The faith that will not work and the love that will not give are but counterfeits of essential Christian graces. These are the crucibles in which we can test the genuineness of our professions. Does my faith allow me to live an idle, unfruitful life? Then it is not genuine, and it will count for naught in the day when the Master comes for fruit. Does my love allow the world's cry for sympathy and help to go unheeded? Then it is a counterfeit. Am I satisfied with a mere outward show of spiritual life? Then I am a barren tree and nigh unto cursing. Does my Christianity allow me to stand aloof from my brethren, alone and self-sufficient? Then there is something wrong with it, and I may well raise the question, If Christ should come to me for fruit, would he find aught but leaves? There is significance in the marginal reading: "And seeing a single [lone] fig tree by the wayside, he came to it and found nothing thereon but leaves only." Close inspection reveals the fact that the man who stands aloof from others has mistaken conceit for conscience, fancy for faith, petulance for piety, stubbornness for strength and ignorance for inspiration. Full-foliaged in these fancied fruits of the spirit, he glories in his shame till blighted by the curse that rests upon the unfruitful, always and everywhere.

The other lesson we get from the incident is that faith is the secret of power. To the disciples, astonished at the miracle, Jesus said: "Verily I say unto you, if you have faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do what is done to the fig tree, but even if ye shall say unto this mountain, be thou taken up and cast into the sea, it shall be done. And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." The lesson was a most impressive one. The withered tree stood before them full proof of the power of their leader's word over inanimate nature. It said to them: "Him with whom you have to do is infinite in power." Jesus said to them: "By faith you can possess yourselves of this same power." And this he said, not to magnify miracles, but to magnify faith. Take care of faith and the power will take care of itself. It is not of the victories that during the past year have crowned the arms of the American people we should feel proud, but of the valor, the intelligence and the virility that gave us the victories. The power to do is the thing to be sought. The disciples learned this. We do not find them laying stress upon the miracles. On the contrary, we hear Paul saying: "Whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. . . . Now abideth faith, hope and love." One who saw the withered fig tree said: "This is the victory that hath overcome the world, even our faith. And who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?"

Recent Faculty Elections in Eureka College.

At a meeting of the trustees of Eureka College, held on Monday, the 20 inst., Prof R. E. Hieronymus, so long the incumbent of the Chair of English Language and Literature, was re-elected to his old position, and it is fully expected that he will begin service in the college again next September. Prof. R. A. Gilchrest was at his own request transferred to the department of Philosophy, and Prof. B. J. Radford was elected Dean of the Bible department. Prof. Emerson W. Matthews, an alumnus of Butler College, who has been for several years engaged in advanced work in Leland-Stanford University and in the University of Chicago, and who is now finishing his advanced work in Harvard University, from which he will graduate in a few weeks, was elected to the Chair of Latin and Greek to succeed Prof. E. D. Schoonmaker, who will spend next year in advanced study in the University of Chicago. Prof. S. H. Goodnight, now studying abroad, will return to take up the work in Modern Languages next autumn. It will be seen from these announcements that the faculty of Eureka College is to be exceptionally strong in all of its departments next year. We are working diligently, not only to build up the finances of the institution, but—which is equally important—to develop to its highest possible strength the college itself.

J. H. HARDIN, Pres.

Eureka, Ill., March 24, 1899.

Our Budget.

—Christ is risen.

—The bars of the grave are broken.

—Life and immortality have come to light.

—The kingdoms of this world must now be brought to Christ.

—The mission of Home Missions must now be brought to the front.

—Let every Disciple of Christ lend all aid possible to the largest possible offering on the first Sunday in May.

—Preparation is the key of success for the Home Mission offering; do not depend upon "the-spur-of-the-moment" action.

—Read the literature on Home Missions in this paper and prepare for the best missionary offering in the history of your church.

—It will require all the reading, preaching, praying, talking, acting and enthusing possible to raise the May offering for Home Missions to a point worthy of our plea and of our people.

—The Board of Church Extension recently received $150, part of the net proceeds of sale of lots and foundation located near Garfield University, and belonging to our disbanded West Side Christian Church at Wichita, Kas. It was the desire of the last remaining members that this amount should go into our Church Extension Fund to do perpetual work. This is a wise decision. Though the West Side Church is no more, this $150 will go on building a church every five years and will in time redeem what would have been done had the West Side Church been in existence.

—D. D. McLean, of Bowling Green, Fla., expresses his great pleasure in the disposition of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to give both sides of great questions in the political and religious world. He says that he would not exchange the "Current Events" department for any strictly political paper known to him, for reliable information. Another party writes, "I think the first page worth the price of the paper."

—The University of Indianapolis hopes to maintain every spring and fall vesper services, at which all students are especially urged to be present, and to which the public is cordially invited. The services, conducted usually by the president of the University, will be largely musical, with short addresses of fifteen or twenty minutes by eminent men. For the present, until a University chapel is erected, the vespers will be held in the central churches; and this spring the speakers will, for the most part, be the pastors of these churches.

—Mattie Pounds, national superintendent, informs us that a large number of Intermediate or Junior Societies and mission boards throughout the states will make a self-denial offering on or near Easter. Sister Pounds is doing a grand work in educating children in the virtue of self-denial, as well as in missionary work.

—Recently a splendid entertainment was given by the scholars and teachers of the Tripp Avenue Christian Church, in Scranton, Pa., in honor of the formal opening of the new wing, which has been added to the auditorium for the use of its kindergarten and the Endeavor Society. The new room, which is 24x40 feet, is connected with the main edifice by a large arch behind the pulpit, the same being tastefully draped with olive-green tapestry. A fine baptistery has also been constructed.

—If $100,000 could be raised this year for Home Missions, and it can be, the impulse which it would give to our churches throughout the United States would be the strongest and the most perceptible forward movement since the organization of this society. New churches would spring up in new fields, weak churches would become strong, and the older and stronger ones would reap larger harvests and make larger offerings for missions. Every effort possible, therefore, should be put forth to raise the $100,000. If only one-half the calls upon our Home Board could be met the cause we plead would go forward with such leaps and bounds that all eyes would be astonished. Let us remember that it is the mission of the church to build missions, and this cannot be done without the means. And now that an opportunity for a general offering for Home Missions is at hand, let us make it one worthy of the cause we plead and of our ability as a great religious body in the world.

—Now that the springtime has come and house-cleaning is the order of the day, our editorial sanctum is undergoing the renovating and redressing process. For a week we have been at the mercy of the painter, the paperer and the janitor, whose chief delight seemed to be to break the monotony of our editorial duties for a while at least. But now that we are more cheerfully environed we will not complain of the past interruptions and hope to find our task easier and our heart lighter under the influence of our renovated and renewed rooms.

—While we are being criticised upon the one hand for publishing the article on "Barrier to Christian Union," by Rev. Jas. M. Campbell, we are vindicated for it on the other and that more abundantly. Whether such an article in our columns will do good or not depends upon the reader. There are some, it appears, who do not know how to read an article nor how to use it, but not all. One preacher says, "I am much interested in 'Barrier to Christian Union,' by Rev. J. M. Campbell, and have a friend who is a Congregationalist minister that I want to read it. Would you kindly mail him copies of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST containing the article." This is not the only request of this kind we have had and with which we have gladly complied. There is a request also that the article be put in tract accompanied with a brief and courteous rejoinder, for just this kind of work. If the demand was sufficient our publishers would take pleasure in tracting the article for missionary purposes.

—The convention of the West Tennessee churches will be held at Newbern, April 18-20. Great preparations have been made for a great spiritual feast. All interested in the cause of Christ in that part of Tennessee are urged to be present and to have their friends present. For further information address W. W. Phares, Newbern, Tenn.

—Owing to the protracted meeting at the Compton Ave. Christian Church, this city, their Easter offering for the Christian Orphans' Home is postponed to April 16th, at which time they are expecting to raise $100 for it. The churches of St. Louis always do well for the Home in all their offerings.

—The Yearbook for 1899 is the handsomest yet issued. The binding, paper and print all looks better. A full-page picture of the hall in which the Jubilee Convention is to be held appears on first opening of the book. The bulletins of the various missionary societies contain a vast amount of information with which the public is yet unfamiliar. The entire church could profit greatly by a perusal of these pages. The fly-leaf between each two pages of the preachers' list is a new and convenient feature. Changes can be noted on these blank pages, and thus aid in securing greater accuracy in the list from year to year. For a copy of this very valuable little book send to Benj. L. Smith, editor, Cincinnati, Ohio, or subscribe for the American Home Missionary.

—The receipts for the first 23 days of March amount to $25,323.50, or a gain of $3,845.14 over the corresponding 23 days of 1898. The gain in the offerings for the week ending March 23 were $2,285.24. Fewer churches have given to date than for the same period last year, but the amounts from contributing churches are larger.

—If only the preachers who have expressed willingness to Secretary Smith to take a offering in their churches, respectively, wer active in this work, our offering for Hom Missions would be far less than they hav been. It ought not to be regarded an hono for a preacher to be so minded. The fact tha he has a pulpit in the Christian ministry ough to be positive assurance of his fellowship i this work. If there is a preacher not so mind ed he is the man whose name ought to b published; not to his credit, but to his shame

—The Cuban Industrial Relief Fund, with general office at 75 Tribune Building, Nev York, has published for free distribution a book, paper cover, 64 pages, setting forth the distressing industrial condition of Cuba and calling upon the public for donations for the relief of the same. This fund has behind it the names of responsible men and the endorsement and co-operation of the government. For further information send to above address for the tract and other literature.

—The opening of the second decade of our history, which began last week, by B. B. Tyler, happily coincided with the opening of the campaign for our Home Missionary offering. Much of Dr. Tyler's paper this week is devoted to Dr. Barclay and much of what he says about Dr. Barclay is new—has never before been published. A similarly interesting feature will characterize Dr. Tyler's next paper concerning our first missionary to Jamaica. We are receiving marked evidences of the high appreciation of these historical papers, and the interest in them will increase unto their end.

—The rapid growth of trusts in the United States since the close of our war with Spain is marvelous and not without dangers of corresponding magnitude. The authorized capital of trusts organized since Jan. 1, 1899, is said to exceed a billion dollars, and at their present rate of growth it is estimated that they will have a total capital of more than six billion dollars by the close of the present year. There is a reported coal trust recently organized with a capital of eight hundred million dollars and talk of a copper trust being formed with a billion dollars capital. While there may be some things said in favor of such methods of business it must be admitted that they are attended with very grave and far-reaching dangers. Among these numerous trusts there will be found those that were formed for purely speculative purposeses, which means disaster to investors at no distant day. A financial business based upon fictitious values, as are many of these trusts, means ruin to somebody sooner or later. Another feature of trusts in general is the excess of authorized capital stock to that of actual cash invested. This means at least a tax on the consumer that is unjust. They are thus compelled to pay a profit of stock that represents "good will," water, wind or moonshine instead of actual cash. It is not an "honest-dollar" business. The excess of authorized stock over actual cash invested is said to be usually two, three and four dollars in stock to one dollar in cash, and in some instances from five to ten to one, or more. But still another danger, and that not among the least, is the influence of such aggrandisements of capital upon the legislation of our country. There is great danger of our government becoming a government of the trusts, by the trusts and for the trusts. Then again, if the formation of trusts are to continue it means the revolution of our entire industrial system. Wages as well as prices will be dictated by trusts, competition will be removed and the opportunities for men of small capital to go into business will be greatly curtailed if not wholly destroyed. At all events the growth of trusts is becoming a serious problem quite independent of political party doctrines and should have the serious consideration of every true American citizen.

—Those who have seen the Easter number of ır Young Folks, edited by W. W. Dowling d published by the Christian Publishing Co., ll agree with us that it is a credit to both the itor and the publisher. The cover design esents only the symbols and evidences of e, and is pleasingly appropriate alike to the ason and to the day it celebrates. The erature of this number beautifully em-asizes the resurrectoon of Christ and the fluence of this fact upon the world. The oung Folks stand at the head for wide-awake, -to-date literature for our young people and stly merits the popularity to which it has tained in our Endeavor Societies and Bible-hools.

—The prohibitionists and anti-saloon people Iowa are stirring themselves in the interest temperance, purity and better government. ee notice of a call for state meeting of the wa Anti-saloon League, at Des Moines, next eek, in this paper. They are coming to the scue none too soon for the interests of tem-erance against the saloon in that state. The hristian preachers of Iowa, as in other states, ill, of course, be found at the front in the rocession against the saloon.

—The Prohibition Union, of the Christian nen of St. Louis, have planned for a mass meet-ng at one of the churches of this city, for every ight this week, with strong speakers for each neeting. John G. Woolley will speak on Friday, April 7th, but the place has not yet een designated for his meeting. The cam-paign against the lawlessness of saloonkeep-rs and for better things for all mankind in the ity is thus opening out in earnest. It in-dicates "war to the hilt." It is a fight for urity and our homes as well as for the dignity f the law.

—The General Board of the United Society of Chirstian Endeavor is determined that no criti-cism shall be heard from any quarter of our rotherhood this year in our representation upon the program of the next national conven-tion at Detroit. We are informed that to date B. A. Abbott, of Baltimore; J. H. Banton, of New York City; H. O. Breeden, of Des Moines; A. McLean, of Cincinnati; Chas. B. Newnan, of Detroit, and J. H. O. Smith, of Chicago, have each accepted an invitation to a place on the program. In addition to this list every one of our trustees in the board will also appear on the program. This will certainly not only pre-vent criticism from any of our people or papers, but put the entire brotherhood under great ob-ligations to the leaders of the Endeavor move ment for such favorable recognition in Chris-tian fellowship and work. Let us not forget that this honor also carries with it great re-sponsibilities and pray that these men may use their opportunities to the best interests of Christ's kingdom on earth.

A MISSIONARY'S WIFE

Interesting Letter from India—A Long Summer Season.

The following letter is from the wife of an American Baptist missionary at Nowgong, Assam, India: "After living here for several years I found the climate was weakening me. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla every summer. This I found so beneficial that I now take one dose every morning for nine months in the year, that is, through the hot weather. My general health is excellent and my blood is in good condition. My weight does not vary more than one pound throughout the year. I find Hood's Sarsaparilla indispensable in the summer and recommend it for use in a debilitating climate." Mrs. P. H. Moore.

The above letter is similar to thousands received and constantly coming in.

—Bradley, South Dakota, wants a good Homeopathic physician—a Christian man. A good practice is certain. Correspondance should be addressed to P. S. Rhodes.

—The new church in East Columbus, Ohio, by the assistance of our Church Extension Board has purchased a lot and will proceed to build a house of worship. Bro. Freer, the pastor, is greatly pleased with the outlook and is a strong believer in the Church Extension work.

—Special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Our meetings are stirring this city; one hundred and seventy five already added. Scoville and Huston are grand evangelists.

J. E. LYNN, pastor.

Springfield, Ill.

—The few Disciples of Christ at Maywood, Neb., not being able to support a preacher, have also discontinued their Bible school and Endeavor Society. We regret to hear of such events and hope the opportunity for continuing these Christian activities may return. Cannot some preacher in reach of that field, or some traveling evangelist, or the Nebraska State Board help them to at least keep house for the Lord at that point. Write to Mrs. J. T. Twiss.

—And let me thank you for getting up this "Nine Decades of History." It is a much-needed, much-merrited work—merited by our heroes now resting from their labors, and the later toilers also. * * *

—The sum of $500,000 has just been raised in this city as an additional endowment for Washington University. This makes a total of $1,100,000 which has been raised for this University within the last few years. Of this amount $900,000 has been raised since Feb. 12th. A new site has been purchased and new builings will be erected as rapidly as possible. The site and buildings will cost $600,000. Among the recent liberal donors is Mr. Brookings, who has contributed $200,000; also Ex-Gov. D. R. Francis, Mr. Hitchcock and Mr. Samuel Cupples. Washington University was incorporated in 1853. The first chancellor was Dr. Hoyt, who was succeeded by Chancellor Chauvenet, the eminent mathematician. Then came Dr. Elliott, the Unitarian divine, and in 1891 Chancellor Winfield S. Chaplain. Washington University now includes the College and School of Engineering, Smith's Academy, Manual Training School, St. Louis Law School, St. Louis Medical College, Missouri Dental College, St. Louis Art Museum, Henry Shaw School of Botany and Mary Institute. The future usefulness of the University is to be greatly enlarged by the recent movement and enlarged endowment. The University will not be under the control of any distinct theological school, but is to be nonsectarian in its character. The men who are behind the present movement, it is intimated, are contemplating much larger things for the University than it has yet known.

—The return of balmy days, singing birds, croaking frogs, young grass, bursting buds and new flowers have an invigorating influence upon both the mind and body of the people just emerging from another winter and the machinery of the industrial world begins to move with accelerated speed. There is an impulse of new life in nature's resurrections imparted to man and to his industrial affairs at each returning spring not felt again in the journey of the year nor equaled from any other source. New hopes, new aspirations, new courage are more characteristic of men at this season of the year than any other. Whatever the hardships of the winter, the trials and failures of the past, men lay hold upon the opportunities which come with spring with new hopes and new energies, and it is well that it is so. It drives away the clouds of despair and lets in the sunshine of happier days. We trust, therefore, that the dawn of a happy, prosperous period for all is at hand.

PERSONAL MENTION.

W. W. Blaylock has located with the church at Larned, Kas., for full time.

Samuel Gregg, assisted by Prof. Sweetman, singer, is conducting a protracted meeting in the Christian Church at Sioux City, Iowa.

C. H. Hilton and wife, Olathe, Kan., were given a donation party recently by the members of that church. Mrs. Hilton's birthday was the occasion of the very enjoyable visit.

C. M. Hughes, singing evangelist, who for some time has been disabled from work on account of sickness, is now ready for work, and can be had for a meeting. Address him at Lexington, Ky.

F. G. Tyrrell, who has been at Cincinnati for some time, assisting A. M. Harvout in a protracted meeting, was in his own pulpit again on last Sunday and was greeted by large audiences.

W. W. Herold, for over 20 years an elder in the church at Sedalia, Mo., and a reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from its beginnihg, also some of its predecessors, has been unwell for a time and starts for Menard Wells, Tex., April 4. He speaks highly of Bro. Putman and also of the work at Sedalia.

J. G. M. Luttenberger and wife, of Dorchester, Ill., paid their respects to this office during a flying trip to this city last week. The roads in Illinois in many places at present are not most favorable to protracted meeting work, and yet not a few good meetings are reported from that state each week.

A. R. Moore, of Memphis, Tenn., is assisting his brother, S. B. Moore, in a protracted meeting at the Compton Heights Christian Church, this city, this week. He came last Saturday and is to remain over next Sunday. J. Q. McCanne, of the First Christian Church, is their chorus leader. They are having a good meeting and hopeful of large results.

G. Halleck Rowe has accepted a call to the church in Salem, Ill., and has just entered upon the work. While employed for the church he says that he will be allowed to do some evangelistic work. He speaks well of Bro. Black's, his predecessor's, work. Salem is the home of Charles E. Hull, State Senator, who with his wife are members of the Christian Church.

H. James Crockett, pastor of the Christian Church at Mankato, Minn., was recently tendered a novel reception. At the close of a prayer-meeting service at which almost the entire congregation was present, he was presented with a "beautiful golden oak office chair." He reports all departments of the work in the church at Mankato in a prosperous condition; 55 young men and women in his Bible class, mostly students and teachers. Outlook hopeful for the church.

Earle Wilfley, for three years pastor of the church at Wabash, Ind., has resigned that he may accept a call to the work of an evangelist in the City of Pittsburg, Pa. During Bro. Wilfley's pastorate at Wabash he has made a most favorable impression upon the people of that city and greatly endeared himself to his congregation. It is with great reluctance that they consent to his departure for another field, but the prospect of enlarged usefulness leads them to submit. He will enter upon his work in Pittsburg June 1. The already strong pulpit staff of Christian ministers in Pittsburg will receive another man of marked ability, thereby further strengthening its power for good.

W. H. Harris has been called to remain with the church at Grant City, Mo., for an indefinite period. He has been with the church two years already and the church has grown in all departments of its work under his ministry.

G. E. Ireland has closed his work at Princeton and removed to Wabash, Ind., where his family has already gone and where he expects to make his home. He will be glad to correspond with churches within reach of Wabash needing supply or part time preaching.

W. H. Kern, for a little more than five years the pastor of the Fourth Christian Church, of this city, closed his work there on last Sunday. He has accepted a call to the church at DuQuoin, Ill., and will enter upon the work there at once. His family, however, will not remove from St. Louis for some time yet.

Otha Wilkison, of McLoud, O. T., has accepted a call to succeed J. A. Tabor at Enid, Okla., and is already at work. Bro. Tabor resigned to enter the field as an evangelist and is now in a meeting at Geary, O. T. The church at Enid commends Bro. and Sister Tabor highly for their work there.

T. F. Weaver, of Texarkana, Tex., writes encouragingly of the work in his new field. Among the additions to the church there since he began two months ago was an Episcopal rector, George Kirkpatrick, of whom he speaks well as a man of ability and usefulness. He is now in Aakansas lecturing on "The Origin of Denominationalism."

Joseph I. Irwin, of Columbus, Ind., has given $25,000 for the Bible College of Butler University, provided that $75,000 more can be raised. That the $75,000 will be raised the trustees confidently affirm. President Jenkins is pleased with the turn of affairs in relation to Butler College, the Bible Chair and the University of Indianapolis.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY is commended by educators and philologists almost without exception. The definitions are clear and explicit, the different meanings are given in the order of their development, the pronunciation is indicated by the ordinary diacritical marks taught in the public schools. It is the safe guide of all who would speak and write the English language correctly.

On last Sunday Prof. W. E. Adams, Principal of the School of Oratory, Ft. Wayne, Ind., preached at the First Christian Church, this city, on last Sunday morning and at the Mt. Cabanne Christian Church on Sunday night. Prof. Adams is a graduate of Hiram College, a pleasant, attractive, interesting speaker and a good soloist and chorus leader. All who heard him were pleased with his visit. Dr. Dungan of the Mt. Cabanne Church preached at the First Church on last Sunday night, Bro. Fannon, the pastor, not having yet sufficiently recovered from his recent sickness to preach. He hopes, however, to be out soon, again.

Some persons say they are never influenced by an advertisement.

It is not expected that any one will buy Ivory Soap solely because it is suggested by an advertisement.

If you have never used Ivory Soap, you may be induced to ask some friend about it; should you find—as you probably will—that she is enthusiastic in its praise, then you may try it.

Millions of people use Ivory Soap; they use it because they like it. You too will like it. There is a difference in soaps.

English Topics.

THE ANGLO-SAXON DESTINY.

Who can read contemporary history and not preceive that a mysterious force is impelling this great Anglo-Saxon race ever on and on to some stupendous end which will shape the destinies of the whole world? During the last twenty years the British Empire has actually been enlarged by four million square miles! Think a moment what this means. History knows nothing like it. And let it be remembered that mere earth-hunger has not anything at all to do with this colossal development. And just as it seemed to most Englishmen time really to try in some way to stop making the empire bigger, and to concentrate the national purpose on seeking to make it better, then steps in America to undertake a magnificent imperial destiny, by annexing the splendid colonies which Spain had ruined. And the process thus continued by Britain, and now begun by America, is only just beginning. Providence is at the helm in directing these vast issues. The two nations which are at the head of Christendom, and have made the Bible the keystone of the arch of national triumph, are elected by that divine grace which gives prerogative and power to peoples, to command the earth. Whether they wish to do so or not, and whether the other nations like it or not, there will be no escape. America and Britain are to dictate terms to the rest of the world in the 20th century. But it will be at the cost of many a vast sacrifice. The Bear will lay his mighty paw on the two ends of Asia. One paw is already poised over Pekin and the other over Jerusalem. Mark this, that there will be no actual crisis of trouble with Russia till that wonderful Trans-Siberian railway is completed. Then will come the hour of difficulty. Meanwhile God is piling up a heavy bill which the wicked "Beast Powers," the great military despotisms, will have to pay. And the bill will be paid in blood. Sin in nations is punished in this world. Armenia cries unto God, and he hears. Apostate Christendom is one vast, shameful, spiritual sham. It is the Babylon on which the Beast is riding on to apocalyptic doom. Easter is again at hand, and once more the heathen mummeries of mock Christianity will be enacted in St. Isaac's Cathederal, at St. Petersburg; in Seville Cathederal, with the boys in white and blue silk dancing "before the Lord;" and in St. Peter's at Rome, with the vast crystal cross flaming in the glorious dome. A grand reformation will come; a new age will arrive; the end of this era is not far off; but every era ends with the crash of doom on the blasphemers who have mocked the truth and set up their citadels of pomp and pride in refuges of lies. Europe is one vast museum of these mockeries under the name of Christianity, and all Europe will ring with the signals of coming retribution.

THE MUTINY OF THE HIGH CHURCH.

England is seething with excitement which is not likely to subside, but will grow more and more intense. For this tremendous commotion is not political, or social, or civil, but religious. Every careful student of history is aware that there is something about the spiritual which "will not down," and which, therefore, differs altogether from the many secular agitations which follow each other in passing and soon forgotten gusts of national passion. The world makes light of spiritual truth, and yet the world in spite of its own pretended contempt for the spiritual is unconsciously and unintentionally stirred and fascinated by the great conflicts which concern the human conscience. This nation is throbbing with indignation at the doings of the arrogant Ritualists, under the bold lead of Lord Halifax. A few days ago over 1,000 High Church clergy and laity, all men, gathered at St. Paul's Cathederal at eight in the morning for early communion. The Bishop of Argyll and the Isles, a very pronounced Ritualist, assisted by eight clergy, communicated this throng. Then on the same morning this crowd, with many more, assembled at the great assembly hall in Cannon Street Hotel, to discuss a manifesto, which was quickly carried, and has been issued for the benefit of the country. It will be a historic document, for it actually defies the Queen, and Parliament, and the national ecclesiastical courts to interfere with the rules and practices in the Established Church, although that church only exists by the authority of Parliament, and is subject to the authority of the courts. All this is seen by most people to be heading direct for disestablishment. But the distracted Church of England is simply like a ship drifting before stormy winds and along uncertain and irresistable currents, without a pilot, or captain, or rudder, or compass. And, unfortunately, dissent is too much divided to be able to give any clear, united and certain sound to aid the masses of the people. What a glorious chance is at hand for work like that which our own simple Churches of Christ have been these past few years pioneering! The crisis is surely at hand in which we shall be recognized as having a function to fulfill which will be understood at last.

A WONDERFUL BOOK.

No book lately issued in England is more intensely interesting than one which lies at my elbow as I write. It is a large volume by a versatile clergyman, the Rev. Henry William Clarke, on the "City Churches," meaning the churches of London proper. This work is extraordinary, because it is a simple and lucid array of facts as they are in our mighty metropolis, our wonderful and beloved London. There are forty-seven of the fine old churches left in London. The vicars and rectors of most of these parish sanctuaries are very highly paid, and now have nearly nothing to do, as the congregations have gone to live away in the distant suburbs, and the greater part of the city is on Sundays and on every week evening a vast wilderness of closed warehouses, which teem with crowded activity all the day till Saturday afternoon. Now, these clergymen have accomplished the gradual conversion of many of the city churches into concert houses by their eagerness to attract congregations, especially in the week days. The organists urge on this work for the sake of advertising themselves on leaflets, posters and in newspapers, and as a means to get private pupils. Then professional paid singers are employed. The whole cheap concert business has thus taken the place of prayers and preaching and for the amusement of the city clerks when they are out for their midday luncheons. Where the concerts are held, congregations of 300 can be attracted; whereas, for prayers and preaching, except in cases of very popular and sensational preaching, not more than from two to twelve can be got to attend. The other great attractions in these London churches are in Lent and Advent, when the "monks," like Father Ignatius and Father Dolling are invited to occupy some of the city pulpits, who by their powerful preaching create much enthusiasm among the city men. But the most objectionable feature of these services is, that their collections are devoted to the support of their monastic establishments, and besides their garments remind the people of the monastic orders in pre-Reformation times.

A MOUNTEBANK MINISTER.

One of the most earnest but eccentric of living London clergymen is rector of one of these old city churches. The Rev. W. Carlile, who is the celebrated founder of the "Church Army," is rector of St. Mary-at-Hill, the church close to the Monument, and London Bridge and Billingsgate. This is a poor parish, in which many people still live in the courts and bystreets. He has made a new departure of the most revolutionary kind, and so draws throngs of people, more than a thousand every Sunday evening, as indeed so could any man who could descend to similar means, simply for the sake of coaxing in a great crowd. The preaching and praying are unworthy of the name, as Mr. Carlile's brother clergymen candidly declare, and as Mr. Clarke frankly says in this book on "City Churches." Inside the church early on Sunday evenings you will see a band of seven fiddlers, two trumpeters and a number of concertina women dressed in surplices and college caps, who play for the edification of those who are pouring into the edifice from all parts. During this time the clergyman and his curate are marching round the parish at the head of a brass band, which consists of about twenty-eight men dressed in surplices and college caps. This procession stops at every public house and the drinkers are invited to come to church. The church is always in darkness. Religious pieces are put on the screen by means of a lantern. This is done during the hour of service, which shows how truly comprehensive the Church of England must be. The people merely come to be entertained. Their unseemly behavior shows this as soon as any devotion begins. They do not want any preaching or praying, but only to see and hear what will divert them, and the people in the parish itself do not attend at all, in any number beyond about a dozen, the whole crowd coming by train or tram from distant suburbs. Thus are we beginning to be taken back to the rude days of the miracle plays in the Middle Ages. The subjects of these Sunday services are such as these: "The Maidstone Plague," "The Labor War," "Better in Gaol," "Tammanay's Lord Mayor." The rector a fortnight before this last Christmas announced that the next Sunday the usual doll service would be held, and held it was on the Sunday preceding Christmas. The church was a strange sight. The altar steps were covered with dolls and packages of sweets. The object was a purely excellent one. The dolls were distributed amongst the poorest of the thousands of poor little children in the East End slums.

A Good Complexion

Depends on Good Digestion.

This is almost an axiom, although usually we are apt to think that cosmetics, face powders, lotions, fancy soaps, etc., are the secret for securing a clear complexion.

But all these are simply superficial assistants. It is impossible to have a good complexion unless the digestive organs perform their work properly; unless the stomach by properly digesting the food taken into it furnishes an abundance of pure blood a good complexion is impossible.

This is the reason so many ladies are using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they promptly cure any stomach trouble, and they have found out that perfect digestion means a perfect complexion and one that does not require cosmetics and powders to enhance its beauty.

Many ladies diet themselves or deny themselves many articles of food solely in order to keep their complexions clear.

When Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are used no such dieting is necessary. Take these tablets and eat all the good, wholesome food you want and you need have no fear of indigestion nor the sallow, dull complexion which nine women out of ten have, solely because they are suffering from some form of indigestion.

Bear in mind that beauty proceeds from good health, good health results from perfect digestion and we have advanced the best argument to induce every man or woman to give this splendid remedy a trial.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found in drug stores and cost but 50 cents per package. They are prepared by the F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

If there is any derangement of the stomach or bowels they will remove it and the resultant effects are good digestion, good health and a clear, bright complexion. Ask your druggist for the tablets and a free book on stomach diseases.

New York Letter.

An interesting course of lectures are announced to be given at Union Theological Seminary in April by the Rev. Thomas C. Hall on "The Social Significance of the Religious Revival in England in the 18th and 19th Centuries." The lecturer is a son of the late illustrious Dr. John Hall, of New York. For many years he was pastor of a Presbyterian Church in Chicago, and recently was elected a professor in Union Seminary. His program is as follows: "Beginnings of Methodism," "The Methodist Movement," "England's Condition and the Evangelical Party," "Evangelical Party rnd Social Reform," "The Broad Church School and Liberalism," "The High Church Reaction." These are popular questions and are likely to create considerable interest.

The Disciples of Christ in the North Atlantic States, south of New England, are planning to hold a missionary conference May 9th, 10th and 11th, at the First Church, Philadelphia, to inaugurate such movements as will tend toward more rapid evangelism (in the broad sense) in this territory. A number of topics will be considered, such as: City Evangelization in the the East; The Open, or Institutional Church; Sunday-school Missions; A Ministerial Training School; General American Missions; Foreign Missions, etc. Our Eastern forces need co-operation and concentration. It is to be hoped that the beginning of such work is now in sight. Bro. J. S. Myers and the First Church have invited all who will come to be their guests The program of the conference will be published soon. Let all the preachers of these states plan to be present.

"Our Messenger," bulletin No. 3, by the Executive Committee of the New York Christian Missionary Society just issued, states that the next convention will be held at Tully, Sept. 19-22. Evangelist J. M. Morris has had 122 additions to the churches since August, 105 being by baptism. He is now in a meeting at Lansingburg with Bro. C. M. Kreidler. Bro. J. R. Tolar, Jr., has resigned from the 2nd Church, Rochester, and S. J. Corey, a student in the Rochester Seminary, has succeeded him. The two congregations of Elmira have separated, forming independent congregations. C. C. Crawford ministers to "The First Church" and a Bro. Morrison, of West Virginia, preaches at the "West Side Church." F. W. Norton resigned at Niagara Falls, but that church knows a good preacher, hence refused to let him go. N. Tonawanda Church has opened a mission Sunday-school which promises much success. The deficit in the state treasury is $770.00. The churches of the state should cancel it at once.

"Home Missions to the Front?" Yes, to the tune of a $100,000 offering before the Jubilee Convention in October. The American mission field is ready for the seed of a full, pure gospel. Let us plant Sunday-school missions all over the land, and sow the field deep with clean, strong, clear, Christian literature, setting forth the plain way of salvation. The planting must be done; but much of the field is white already with ripened harvests. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into his harvest. Yes, let us pray for this. In this request our Lord asks us to pray for a definite thing. Judea was never whiter with harvests awaiting Christian reapers than is our own beloved home field. How will our Lord send forth laborers into his harvest? By us? Yes, by his people alone. We have the pure gospel which the people will accept, we have the men who can preach it, we have the money to sustain them while they labor. Will we not give it? It's the Lord's money; we are his stewards. Oh, let us honor him with our substance. The missionary spirit is the solvent of all the problems confronting us in Christian work. alone will bring America to the feet of the Crucified. If we will win this land and people for Christ he will give us the whole world through American Christianity.

Florida Letter.

It is a very common thing to declare that "corporations have no souls." We have very lately here in Florida had ample evidence that if this is the rule there are striking exceptions. Mr. H. M. Flaglor, a gentleman worth many millions, and who is largely interested in some of the finest hostelries in the state, and a large owner in the Florida East Coast Nassau and Havana Railroad and Steamship Company, distributed, after the last frost, thousands of dollars to the fruit and truck gardeners to enable them at once to proceed to make other crops, as the cold had destroyed the one just ready to be marketed. We do not believe this timely act of Mr. Flaglor has a parallel in history; certainly not in the history of this country. In addition Mr. Flaglor has offered to provide the poorer settlers along his line, of more than three hundred miles of railway, with groceries and fertilizers and such other things as they may need till the next shipping time comes. This gentleman, with this magnificent public spirit, is proving himself a public benefactor, and certainly deserves the greatest credit. I think now, as I often have thought, the tendency to abuse the wealthy is too common. I am personally acquainted with a number of wealthy men and women who are the noblest of earth.

Mr. W. W. Howard, general manager of the Cuban Industrial Relief Fund, passed through Jacksonville yesterday on his way to New York and gave us a sad picture of the condition of affairs on the islands. Among other things he said that the condition of the widows and orphans of Cuba is heartrending. There are thousands upon thousands of these poor creatures scattered over the islands. They have neither homes to live in, food to eat nor clothes to cover them. One cannot think of their future without a shudder. Mr. Howard said he was especially concerned for the poor little orphan girls who roam the streets scantily clad, asking for a bit of food with which to keep their bodies and souls together. "What," he says, "will become of these girls?" We believe their future for good or evil lies with this country. Mr. Howard informs us that among the widows and orphans mentioned he saw as lately as last week individual cases of destitution and physical emaciation worse than anything that he saw in Armenia during his two years of relief work in Armenia. To have these wrecks of humanity live under and look up to the stars and stripes waving over the public buildings is enough to give one a queer sensation. Mr. Howard does not believe that a generous American public, if informed properly on this subject, would long suffer this condition of affairs to exist. As it now is, it is a reproach to this nation and a blot on civilization. The waving of "Old Glory" should mean something to the homeless, helpless orphans and destitute country people of Cuba. It was not the intention to include the care of widows and orphans in the work of the Cuban Industrial Relief Fund. But as it is not being attended to by others the Industrial Relief is making it a part of its work. As rapidly as possible homes are being found for these destitute ones, especially among the farmers and planters, who are being supplied with seeds, teams and agricultural implements. I am glad to know that our own brethren are becoming alive to the work of evangelizing Cuba and are planning to immediately establish mission centers in important cities and towns where for centuries the people have been under the heel of political despotism and a priestly hierarchy as foreign to the spirit of civilization and Christianity as hell is foreign to heaven—a condition where man was deprived of liberty, religious and civil; where dungeons were fetid with the stench of the dead, whose sole crime was a desire to exercise that freedom sanctioned by the Almighty. We have at our doors an open opportunity to sow the seeds of a pure gospel, the growth of which will shed a benign influence over a hitherto benighted people. We cannot occupy too soon. We must prepare ourselves by careful study to deal, not only with the mental and moral attributes of this people, but also with that powerful and deeply seated influence which long years of superstition has made on them.

"There have never been so many tourists in Florida before," was the answer given to the the writer yesterday by a railroad man, when asked concerning this season's travel. Although we have had some exceptionally cold days this winter for Florida, with two killing frosts, our reputation as a splendid health resort has not suffered, and thousands have hied themselves here to escape the extreme rigor of our sister Northern states.

A prominent United States official was introduced to us the other day and in the course of our conversation he remarked, "Wife and I are members of the Christian Church when we are at home." He spoke more wisely than he thought, and the statement accounts for the nonattendance at either Christian Church while here. But this is by no manner of means the rule with all our visitors. We frequently have half a dozen states represented at our services. We have a most excellent opportunity afforded of becoming acquainted with some of our best and most prominent brethren through this means. There is something in the tie that binds us to our brethren

The bud is more easily blighted than the full-blown rose. A young girl is more susceptible to weakness and disease that will wreck her in a womanly way than she is after she has attained to healthy womanhood. Thousands of women have their lives wrecked by troubles of this delicate description because of their own ignorance and the prudery of their mothers.

Whenever the wandering demon of ill-health finds a ship adrift upon the sea of ignorance, he steps on board, takes the helm, and steers straight for the maelstrom of death. The young woman who has not been taught the necessity of taking care of her health in a womanly way is a ship adrift upon the sea of ignorance. Diseases that will wreck her future happiness will soon assume command. Young women who suffer from weakness and disease peculiar to their sex live under a terrible nervous tension, and if they escape death are always threatened with insanity. The whole nervous system is affected by the constant drag and drain upon the delicate and feminine organs. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the one perfect and unfailing specific for every derangement and disorder of this description. It fits a woman for wifehood and motherhood It is the best of all known nerve tonics. It is the discovery of one of the most eminent and skillful specialists in disease of women.

"I was troubled three years with female weakness," writes Miss Ellen Otey, of Bedford City, Bedford Co., Va. "I had two physicians, but neither did me any good. I was troubled with pains in my left side all the time. When it was time for my monthly periods I thought I would die with pains in my back and stomach. I also had chills. I could not get up without fainting. Finally I took three bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and two of his 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I do not have any pains at all and am in better health now than I ever was in my life."

How to preserve health and beauty are told in Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser. It is free. For a paper-covered copy send 21 one-cent stamps, to cover mailing only; cloth binding, 31 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Iowa Letter.

For some weeks Iowa readers of one of our Des Moines dailies have been following a discussion between a Methodist pastor and a Catholic divine—Dr. Eaton and Father Nugent, both of this city. It closed in a dramatic way. Dr. Eaton offered Father Nugent $100 a line for Scripture proof warranting apostolic succession. Father Nugent responded by offering $1,000 a line for Scripture sustaining infant baptism. Interest in this discussion has deepened and widened so that an oral discussion has been arranged. It will take place in April, in the city of Des Moines.

Ex-Gov. Larrabee, of Iowa, is and has been an uncompromising enemy of the saloon. He is now chairman of the State Board of Control. This board has charge of all state institutions which receive aid from the State Treasury. Both the prisons and the colleges are under this board. The crowded condition of our two state prisons has raised the question of building a third. Mr. Larrabee takes the new prison as a text, and preaches a prohibition sermon. I condense it as given in the Des Moines Leader of March 10th. He takes his date for comparisons Dec. 31st, 1889, or Jan. 1st, 1890. He considers his facts under the heads, "Before" and "After." Because at that time began the present tide in favor of the liquor interests. Also, because prohibition had half a chance for four or five years, ending at that date. In the four years ending with this date the convict population decreased seventeen per cent. In the five years, beginning with this date, the increase was forty-six per cent. Both the decrease and the increase are steady from year to year without a break. It holds good whether you take the number of inmates at a given date in such year or the total months of imprisonment for such whole year. The increase from that date to the present is more than double—from 543 to 1140 inmates. He further says, "The insane asylums, the institutions for reformation of boys and girls, the statistics of police and district courts, poor farms—every institution that has occasion to study crime in its relations to the habits of the individual—all show like results." This increase began before the hard times. It continues after the hard times are gone. Therefore it is not due to hard times. It is due to the political machines and to voters.

W. F. Briney, of Valley Junction, Wisconsin, has issued a historical chart. I insert a few words concerning it because he is an Iowa man by birth, if I mistake not, and without doubt is a product of Iowa schools. His chart is for the vest pocket; is forty inches long, but neatly folded in morocco covers. It represents the prominent men and the chief events in proper chronological perspective. On one side is presented the centuries B. C. and on the other the A. D. centuries. It is entitled, "Sunday-school Teachers' Chronological Chart." One splendid feature is its wide margins upon which to enter the results of special readings in history.

Last Sunday the superintendent of the University Place Church received a written question from one of the classes, and called the writer to answer it. "Was the blindness of this man (John 9:2) caused by the Heavenly Father?" Perhaps my answer will be helpful to others. The language of Jesus does not say who caused this blindness. It only says that the two causes suggested are not correct. It implies a third cause, but does not name it. If it is God, the text does not say so. If it is Satan, it does not say so. It says something very practical: "I will cure him that the works of God should be made manifest in him." In like manner we should feed the hungry, visit the sick, relieve the famine-stricken and reform the drunkards, that the works of God should be made manifest.

The Jew and the Holy Land.

The late W. E. Gladstane said: "The Jewish nation is a strong evidence of the truth of the Bible." The writer, during a visit to Palestine, was impressed with the fact that God has kept these people in the world, yet as a race distinct and apart.

There are about 85,000 in Palestine, about one-half living in Jerusalem. They outnumber both Christians and Moslems, three to one.

Just as the Chinaman looks forward to a final residence in the flowery land, so the sons of Jacob look forward to a home in which he may spend the evening of life—a home near to the city of David.

The Jew is watched by the jealous eye of the Turkish official; notwithstanding, the people are returning and repeopling the land of their fathers.

One well informed by a long residence there writes: "Many of these more progressive ones look to the great republic across the Atlantic, and as soon as they have money enough to pay their passage, thither they go. I have met many of these, but among them have never known one who was leaving without the intention to return."

It is said that the Jews are purer, as a race, than any nation. There are reasons for this. The Jew reverences law, and the law takes cognizance of every detail in life. Through this has the Jew maintained his racial individuality. They cohere by the power of a common religion.

Many ask: "Will Palestine be repeopled by the Jews?" The signs of the times seem to point that way. The Jew has no country but that; he is not wanted elsewhere. Centuries have not united Jew and Gentile politically, geographically or socially.

Slowly, but surely, the Jewish tide flows in. Previous to 1890 "the increase was phenomenal." In both the old part and the new of Jerusalem the Jew is in the majority. In forty-five years there has been a "tenfold increase." "There are obstacles in the way which will not be removed to-day or to-morrow: that they can be removed is enough. There is coming a time when Israel shall no more be termed forsaken, nor his land any more termed desolate."

"He shall assemble the outcasts of Israel and gather together the despised of Judah" (Isa. 11:12). "For I will take you from among the heathen and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own country" (Ez. 36:26).

Missouri Christian Lectureship.

The meeting of the Lectureship at Huntsville this week was the first to be held under tha new arrangement of time. Heretofore t has met in July, and the heat has been almost intolerable, greatly decreasing the pleasure and profit of those who attend it, and doubtless making their entertainment at the hands of the local church much more of a burden. The change to March gave us delightful weather, while the shortening of the time by one full day relieved us from any fears of weariness. The attendance was larger than for the past two years, and there was but one voice as to the helpful and interesting character of the lectures and discussions. The church and citizens of Huntsville entertained the delegates in most hospitable fashion, while they shared most generously in the intellectual and spiritual feast which the Lectureship brought them. The church buiing was crowded to overflowing at every evening session, while the audiences were by no means small during the day. Bro. J. A. Grimes, the beloved pastor, had so completely planned all things for the occasion as to meet every want without the least noise or friction. Bro. Grimes, whose health has been breaking for some time, has been granted a vacation by his congregation, and will seek in rest to recuperate his strength for further service. In this effort he will have the prayers of his devoted church and his brethren throughout the state.

One serious disappointment awaited the Lectureship in the sickness of Prof. Herron in Chicago, which made it impossible for him to fill his engagement. This would have gone far to make the entire session a failure had not the other lecturers given us such splendid addresses. It has been many years since we have had anything superior to them, if they have ever been excelled. Those who were absent have lost a most delightful and inspiring experience. The minutes of the Lectureship, and of the Ministerial Association that succeeded it, will be published by the secretaries, so that I shall content myself with a few informal comments.

"Christ as Presented in Modern English Literature" was the title of the first lecture, delivered on Monday night, by Bro. Geo. H. Combs, of Kansas City. His treatment of this theme was vigorous, eloquent, learned and entertaining. His division of the theme is suggestive. He classified the lecture concerning Christ and his religion into that of silence, of revolt, of sadness, of pessimism, of faith. Under the first class he named, as typical writers, Burns, Scott and Kipling; under the second, Shelley and Byron; the third, Froude, Clough and Matthew Arnold; the fourth, Swinburne, Geo. Elliott and Carlyle; the last, Tennyson, Whittier, Lowell, Coleridge and Browning. The last class he declared to be the largest and most influential of all, and to embrace those writers whose work is putting the world forward toward its noblest life and achievements. It is impossible in any brief sketch to even suggest the eloquent rhetoric, subtle analysis, flashing wit and tender pathos that made this lecture so charming to all the hearers. Bro. J. P. Pinkerton, of Jefferson City, in an exceedingly well-written paper, reviewed this lecture to the entire satisfaction of all, and ably opened the eager and helpful discussion that followed.

Pro. A. M. Haggard, of Drake University, delivered the second lecture, his subject being, "Scientific Thought, and its Application to Some Modern Problems." He took the liberty, however, of confining the lecture to one of these problems, that of the resurrection of Christ; and proceeded to weave a most ingenius and convincing argument for the resurrection of Jesus Christ, upon solely scientific grounds. His reasoning was occasionally a little too philosophical for some of his hearers to follow him, but for the most part it was clear and convincing to all. The Missouri preachers were all delighted with this introduction of Prof. Haggard to our Lectureship, and his strong presentation of this fundamental fact of our holy religion was like placing an added bulwark to the tower of their faith. He will meet with a hearty weclcome, should he return to our state at any time. His lecture was reviewed by Bro. J. B. Briney, of Moberly, and followed by a most helpful discusion.

The lecture of Pres. Clinton Lockhart, of Christian University, on "The New Testament View of Prohecy," was pronounced by all one of the best ever delivered before our Lectureship. As it will be published in the Christian Quarterly, I need say but little about it. Every preacher who may not be taking this publication could well afford to subscribe for it, if only to secure Pres. Lockhart's lecture. It was a fresh and original treatment of a most vital theme, and avoided undue conservatism on the one hand, or rash radicalism on the other. Many difficulties were cleared away, some luminous definitions suggested and the whole atmosphere of biblical criticism purged of something of the mists that have probably obscured the thoughts of many. Bro. A. B. Phillips, of Fulton, gave us an interesting review of the lecture, his partial disagreement with which opened the door to an animated discussion.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: E. B. Redd, Platte City, president; Edmund Wilks, California, vice-prsident; W. S. St. Clair, Columbia, secretary; J. P. Pinkerton, Jefferson City, and S. D. Dutcher, Mexico, executive committee. Palmyra is the place of the next meeting, and with such a crop of officers we may look for the best time we have ever had, next year.

I have but space for a few words regarding the Ministerial Association, which followed immediately upon the close of the Lectureship. A larger proportion of ministers stayed to its sessions, showing that it is growing in favor with them. The opening address of Pres. J. B. Jones, of Fulton, on "The Ministry of the Twentieth Century," was a strong plea for the manly facing of the present and on-coming problems of Christian civilization on the part of the ministry, who must be leaders in every effort to uplift the race. This address will be published. Pres. Clinton Lockhart made a stirring appeal, in his informal address as president of the Association, for a higher ideal for the Missouri ministry. Bro. H. F. Davis spoke on "The Ministry and the Bible-school;" Levi Marshall, of Hannibal, on "The Ministr's Library," and L. J. Marshall, of Palmyra, on "Studies of Uneducated Preachers." These were all interesting and helpful, the papers of the two Marshalls being especially helpful in suggesting to the preacher some principles and methods by which he might better equip himself for his holy ministry. It was a grand and inspiring meeting throughout. Every Missouri preacher ought to have been there.

BITTER TASTE.

It Aids in the Detection of Unwholesome Food.

Daniel Webster in the famous White trial in Salem, Mass., years ago, declared that "murder will out." This maxim has been found applicable to many other things besides murder. Housewives know it to be true when there is alum in baking powder. A bitterness in the bread at once betrays the alum's presence. It can't conceal its true nature. The alum bitterness "will out," and because it will physicians, who understand the harmful effect of alum on the system, are at a loss to know why people continue to buy baking powders containing it. All baking powders sold for twenty-five cents a can and less contain alum. There is surely no economy in using these cheap powders. For a pure cream of tartar powder, as Dr. Price's was shown to be at the World's Fair, goes so much farther and gives so much better results, there is no doubt of its being more economical in the long run.

UNIVERSITY SKEPTICISM.

At the last meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, of this city, a resolution was passed nominating a committee to investigate the alleged skepticism taught in the University of Cincinnati. There has been some little stir among the orthodox over the question. Dr. Work, of the Presbyterian Church, has been a leader in the agitation, and speaking upon the resolution did not hesitate to say he thought heretics were all prevalent abominations, and remarked with about all the emphasis his six foot physique could muster, that "damnable heresies" were being taught in the scientific chair of our University, citing Peter as authority for such language. The committee was appointed, and there will no doubt be the story of a terrible storm in a coffeepot when its report is in. The McMicken will, by which the school was endowed, specified that the instruction should be moral and religious in nature and influence, though there is no Bible School in connection with the University. Several charges have been made in sermons and interviews, but it remains to be seen how many will be submitted in writing for the committee's consideration. It will probably develop that some teachers of science are quite as dogmatic and intolerant as some preachers of theology.

CHURCH NEWS.

The "revival" season is fast drawing to a close. Good meetings have been held in most of the churches, though none were attended with remarkable ingatherings. Bro. Frank Tyrrell is now with Bro. Harvout at the Central with seventeen accessions the first week. Bro Pine has begun a meeting with his congregation at Eastern Ave. Evangelist Allan Wilson is at Madisonville. It is not out of place here to note that Bro. Wilson's meeting with Bro. Geo. A. Black, of Hamilton, in January, was remarkable, resulting in one hundred and thirty accessions. Bro. Hill, of Indiana, has taken the Fergus St. pulpit and Bro. J. K. Hester, ex-pastor, has closed a successful meeting at Sherwood, O., and will next go to Rat Portage, Canada, about one hundred and thirty miles east of Winnipeg, for a meeting under the auspices of the home board. Robt. T. Mathews, of Louisville, takes the pulpit of the Central, Newport, vacated by J. A. Erwin, now our missionary in Porto Rico, and thus is added to our ranks one of the brightest minds of the brotherhood. It was with many regrets that we gave S. D. Dutcher to Missouri again. He was the leading pulpit power among us in the city and well beloved for his quiet, dignified and sympathetic manhood. His place has not yet been filled. Bro. Tyrrell gave one of his ususal energetic and thoughtful addresses before the ministerial association the 13th inst.

The reports from the foreign missionary offerings of our churches indicate a decided gain over last year. That missions pay is well certified in the offering of the Norwood Church, itself until this time receiving help from the district board. Yet, giving almost one dollar per resident member in this offering is six times its apportionment.

Committee meetings for the coming Jubilee Conventions are the order now for all times and seasons, and plans are already far progressed.

"Of Water and of the Spirit."

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—In your issue of February 23, 1899, is a question, "Why is it that water precedes Spirit in John 3:5? by Discipulus. The answer given to this question is a popular one. But I differ from the views set forth in it. And as we live in a country of free thought, and Jesus tells us that the truth makes us free (John 8:32), I ask a place in your columns for a brief answer to said question according to my understanding thereof.

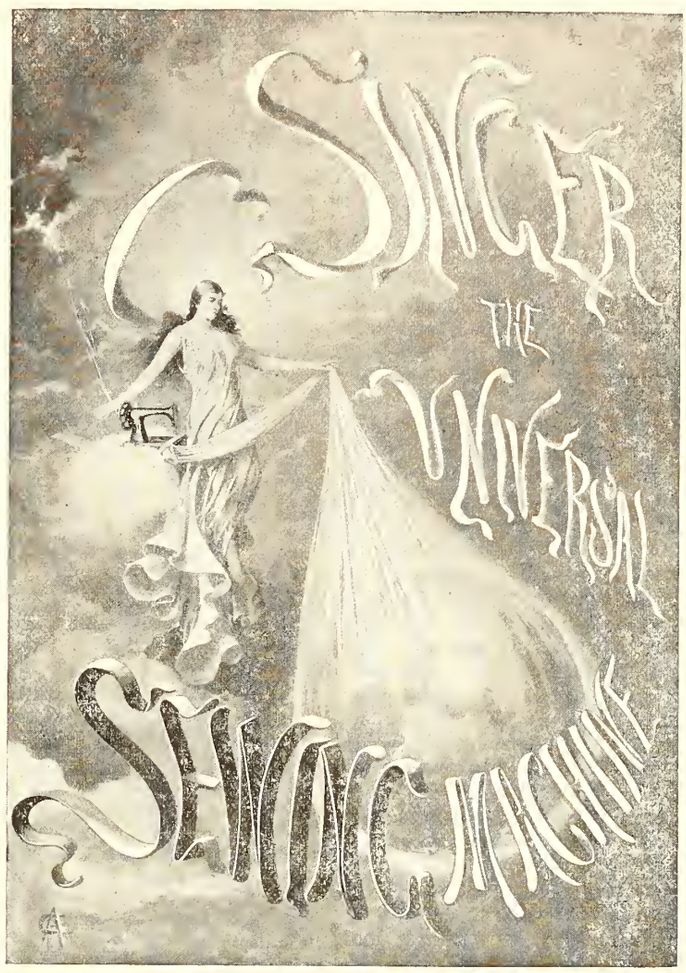
Two births are represented here, "Born of water and of the Spirit." The reason why Jesus put water before the Spirit here is, because it occurs first. The water birth I understand to be the natural birth, or as Jesus puts it in verse 6, "Born of the flesh." If you turn to the Apocrypha and read Eschoras 8:8 you will find a key to this idea.

Baptism is never called a birth of water. It is called a burial, "Buried with him [Jesus] into death" (Rom. 6:4; Col. 2:12, 13). As to what Nicodemus knew about John's baptism, the Book is silent. He may have been baptized for aught we know, for he was friendly toward Jesus, if not a disciple (see John 7:5; 19:39). But we do know how he understood the Master, for he said: "How can a man be born when he is old? Can he enter a second time into his mother's womb and be born?" (verse 4.) This shows that he understood Jesus to refer to the natural birth as the first birth, which was of the flesh, or of matter. But he did not understand what Jesus meant by the birth of the Spirit. So Jesus told him plainly, saying: "That which is born of the flesh [or of water] is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit" (verse 6).

There can be no birth without first a begettal. So James says: "Of his own will begat he us with the Word of truth" (1:18). So it is by faith in the gospel, or Word of truth, that we are begotten of God. In this way we are the children of God in embryo, and then grow to the birth by adding to our faith the virtues written by Peter, in his first epistle (1:4-8). So that in God's due time in the regenesis we may be born again, or of the Spirit, by the power of God. "For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. 1:11). This is the kingdom of God that Jesus was talking about (not the church), for the word kingdom here is from the Greek word basilicia. So Jesus then said, "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again" (verse 7). Then Jesus instructs him concerning the evidence of the new birth: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth: so [like unto] is every one that is born of the Spirit" (verse 8).

Up to the present time none but Jesus has ever been able to do this, to come and go as the wind. Whenever a person becomes visible to us (even after his baptism) we can always discern from whence he came and whither he goeth. So it was with Jesus when he made his appearance among the people: they could always tell whence he came and whither he went, until his resurrection from the dead. After that he appeared and disappeared in a way that none could trace; for "he vanished out of their sight" (Luke 24:31). And so it will be with the true disciples of Jesus, when born of the Spirit as he was, at the resurrection, for "we shall be like him" (John 3:2).

So the water birth precedes the Spirit birth, because there can be no Spirit birth unless there is first a water or natural birth.



J. B. COX.

Indianapolis, Ind.

[The position taken in the foregoing article has been advanced a number of times by different men, but it has not become any more tenable by the occasional new advocate which it finds. The interpretation given of the language of the Savior seems contrary to the plainest principles of interpretation and puts the passage out of harmony with every other passage on the same subject. There is, indeed, a reference to a first birth, but it is in the phrase "born again" or "born from above." What Jesus subsequently says is in relation to that second birth which is "of water and of the Spirit." The incongruity of having Jesus insist that a man must be born of his mother and of the Holy Spirit before he can enter into the kingdom of God ought to be apparent to every one. Jesus never concerned himself with teaching unborn souls the necessity of being born into this world, and surely there was no need of his teaching those who had already been born that it was a condition of admission into the kingdom of God. The idea that the birth of the Spirit refers to the resurrection of the body is equally untenable and contrary to the teaching of the Scriptures. Jesus is teaching human duty, and neither one's birth into this world nor his resurrection from the dead can be called a divine command or a human duty. This interpretation takes the language of Jesus, therefore, entirely out of the sphere of practical teaching concerning duty and life, and makes the entrance into the kingdom of God depend upon acts with which the individual has nothing to do! The strange thing is that such a theory has ever found an advocate among intelligent Christian people.—EDITOR.]

Shall we Stop our State Mission Work?

That is a strange question to ask. A work through which thousands have been led to Christ; hundreds of churches and Bible-schools have been organized, and houses of worship have been built by the hundred; 'tis strange that any one should ask such a question about such a work. This very year the state board spent $50 at a small town where two railroads crossed. The few members who lived here, on account of previous failures, were disheartened and discouraged. This small sum of money not only gave them a preacher for one-fourth the time for a year, but has built them a house of worship that cost $2,100, reorganized, organized a Bible-school and added 36 members. Stop such a work in view of the fact, too, that there are hundreds of just such openings in the state? Every one says no. This work must continue. Now one thing is certain, if it does continue you must support it. This is the Lord's work, and if you are the Lord's child you will make it a part of your work and do all in your power to support it. Write T. A. Abbott now and let him know what you and your church will do in the support of the work that is redeeming Missouri.

Fraternally yours,

G. A. HOFFMANN.

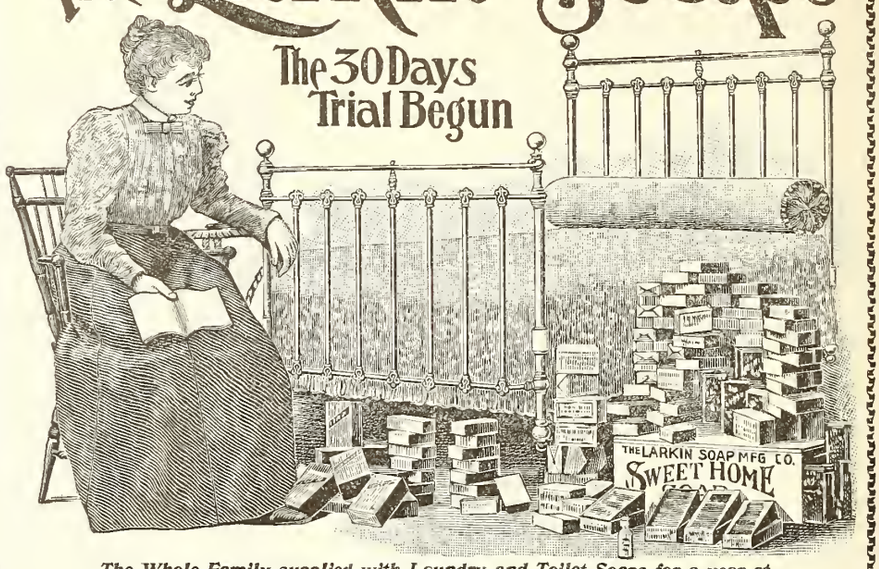
Impressions of a Newcomer to the Hiram House.



Going into a social settlement opens up a new world to one who has never lived in such a place. One object of the settlement is to make it a home; but the peace and quiet which usually prevail in the home atmosphere are largely wanting. Much of the home comfort which might be enjoyed by the residents is given up that a greater amount of good may be done. One is impressed by the work done by the settlement with limited facilities. The nursery rooms are used for class rooms, the kindergarten for a club room and the living rooms for clubs and games. Even the dining room comes in at times for its share of occupation.

The settlement supports a nursery, kindergarten, evening classes, clubs, elocution class, music class, gymnasium, etc. For most of these privileges a small sum is charged that the recipient may not feel that he is receiving charity. The clubs and classes give a chance of a higher education to some who would never attain it in any other way. The kindergarten and nursery care for children, some of whom would otherwise have to remain at home, perhaps without a fire, while their mothers work. One little baby is brought here about six o'clock, these bitter winter mornings, to stay while its mother earns their bread. Many of these children are made much more comfortable by donations of clothing from kind-hearted people. Most of the people here do not belong to the very poor class, to whom charity must be given to enable them to exist at all, but they are people who receive small wages or have iittle work and must be assisted in order to live with any degree of comfort. There is a call for donations of clothing and quilts and comforters. According to the general rule, not to give charity, a small sum is charged for these, the proceeds going to help keep up the nursery. Thus for a small amount of money these poor people may obtain clothing which they otherwise could not buy. If the need is pressing, the clothing is given to them. One little child told how mamma put their wearing apparel on the bed, placed the pillows over them and then put her arms around the child to keep her from freezing during some of the bitter cold weather. In every community could there not be found old clothing and bedclothing which people would give to these poor people if some person would only take the time to collect it? If the community does not feel able to pay the freight charges, the clothing may be sent C. O. D. and the settlement will pay them.

It certainly is not the most desirable kind of a life on Orange Street. The building we occupy is not the warmest, and it is heated by stoves which are not the most desirable way of heating a building. So the residents are liable to suffer from cold. Another thing which is very disagreeable is the dust and dirt. If cleanliness is next to godliness and the latter is as hard to maintain as the former, the inhabitants of Orange Street ought to be congratulated if they possess even a limited supply. City life is not very healthful at the best, and in a locality like this the very air is laden with disease and death. Disease germs lurk in the dust ready to be breathed by the passer-by, while the air is rendered stagnant and unwholesome by houses standing in two close prxoimity for its proper circulation. If the sanitary conditions of the place are a menace to the health of us who have had the advantage of growing up under healthful conditions, how much more so must they be to those who have lived all their lives in these or similar surroundings. Their bodies are weakened by the unsanitary conditions and disease readily finds in them a victim. One is impressed by the atmosphere of culture which pervades the Hiram House. Its residents are people of refinement among whom it is a pleasure to live. Sometimes when we hear the discussions at the table it is hard to realize that we are only in a little oasis in a desert where want and misery are common conditions. Although Hiram House has its disadvantages, it is not without its comforts, some of them homely enough it is true, but where people of culture are gathered together with books and a few comforts, life may be made endurable and even pleasant under adverse circumstances. From Mid-Continent, St. Louis: The offers made by the Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., as above, are most generous. The terms are such that no fair-minded person can object to. We know the firm. Members of the staff of this paper have purchased and used the Soaps, and are glad to say that everything is as represented. The Soaps are excellent, the premiums wonderful.

From Word and Work, St. Louis: How they do it, giving honest value in a combination box of "Sweet Home" Soap, we can't tell, but they do it every time, and have for years.

We desire to call the attention of our readers to a slight error in the advertisement of Maker-to-Wearer Hosiery Co., which accurred in our issue of March 9th. It should have read, "Six pairs Gibraltar Brand Guranteed 25c. Hosiery for One Dollar. The figure "2" was omitted by accident, thus making it read "5c. Hosiery." These goods are a bargain at the price offered. See their advertisement in this issus on page 414.

Convention and Conference.

The state convention of the Iowa Anti-saloon League will be held at the Plymouth Congregational Church, Des Moines, on Monday and Tuesday, April 3, 4, and the Ministerial Association of Des Moines has called a conference of the ministers of Iowa, of all denominations, at the same time and place, for a free consultation with a view to united action in temperance and prohibition work throughout the state. Monday evening and Tuesday forenoon will be occupied by the League Convention and Tuesday afternoon and evening by the Ministerial Conference. Rev. H. H. Abrams, superintendent of the State League, will speak at the opening session Monday evening, and Dr. E. L. Eaton of the M. E. Church at the closing session Tuesday evening. On account of the shortness of the time until the convention, it is not expected that every local league can meet and appoint delegates, but active workers can come from every league and from localities where there are no leagues. Every active worker of every temperance or religious organization, who will come and act in harmony with the league, will be cordially welcomed as a member of the convention. The vigorous campaign, now in progress by the league against the saloon and dram drugstores of Des Moines, call for the help of every earnest temperance man and woman in Iowa, to rescue our capital city from the dominion of the liquor power. Come in time for the first session, Monday evening. Don't wait for a personal letter of invitation.

By order of committee.

Sec. I. A. S. League.

W. C. T. U. Notes.

Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, of Portland, Me., president of the National W. C. T. U., and Miss Anna A. Gordon, vice-president, will attend a series of W. C. T. U. conferences, which are being arranged for them in the coast cities. Their tour will begin at Guthrie, Okla., and will cover the larger cities of Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

The presidents of these states are working up the meetings and large audiences are promised to meet their representatives. The conferences will tend to awaken an interest that will materially extend the influence of the next convention to be held at Seattle, Wash., and the first to go to the coast cities. Mrs. Stevens and Miss Gordon will be at headquarters, Chicago, largely in April.

The signature of the lieutenant-governor of Illinois has been affixed to the bill which has passed both Houses of the legislature to place a statue of Miss Frances E. Willard in Statuary Hall, Washington. Each state is entitled to place the statue of two of their distinguished citizens, and Illinois does herself proud to thus honor their greatest woman citizen.

The observance of the first anniversary of the death of Miss Willard has been almost universally observed by more than eight thousand local auxiliaries of the W. C. T. U. in the United States. Responses from these meetings in the shape of a gift of $2.00 to the national treasury are being received by the treasurer, giving promise of a great advance in broadening the work in needy and sparesely populated states.

A representative of the National W. C. T. U., Mrs. Angie F. Newman, of Lincoln, Neb., is on her way to Manila to look after the work there. She will stop at Hawaii en route to give assistance and welcome to this new American territory and its well organized societies. Other organizers are planning to visit Cuba and Porto Rico.

The Evansville Meeting.

"The greatest revival ever held in Evansville by any people" closed on Wednesday evening. Bro. Scoville began the meeting at Bethany Church by dedicating our new building. He continued with this little church of 33 members during the next two weeks, with packed houses, in spite of the fact that Evansville had the coldest weather ever known in our history—below zero all week, as much as 15 degrees at times. At the end of two weeks we went to Evans' Hall, the largest in the city, and began with an audience of 2,500. A baptistery, surrounded with plants, was built on the stage in one day, and the preaching, by word and example, continued. At the last service 51 were added, 57 the last day, 134 the last week, with a total of 234 during the meeting. The meeting in the hall was carried on in conjunction with the First Christian Church—a central committee being appointed to man, age the whole service. This committee carried out Bro. Scoville's directions to the letter, without regard to expense; hence the great results. Ten thousand cards were distributed in one day, and street cars and stores were placarded. This made the whole city talk about the meeting; the boys along the street whistled the songs that were sung. Prof. Huston had charge of the singing, with Miss Nona McCormick as soloist. Though but sixteen years old, this young woman did as much by her contact with the people as by her marvelous voice. Hundred's waited patiently their turn to meet her, and she was keptbusy shaking hands. The additions are largely from sectarian families, the young people leading the way, the parents, with few exceptions, making no objection, though some of these held positions of honor in other churches. This proves that Bro. Scoville knows how to preach the truth in love. "Read your Bible and do what it tells you," was the constant command. And the Bible was never read in this city as it has been during the past month. Many of them were German Bibles, too.

But once or twice did he use the name of a sectarian body, and then it was in praise. In consequence, nobody went away angry, but hundreds did go away convinced. He did not preach a single sermon on baptism, but at every baptism he would say in substance: "This sister has gone down into the water just as the Eunuch did. She will be buried in baptism, just as Paul was, and will rise to walk in newness of life, as he did." His chart showing every case of conversion and what they did was copied and taken home "to see if these things were so." His cards showing the Bible way of baptism were distributed by the thousand and studied by the people. There is scarcely need to say that we all love Bro. Scoville for doing so faithful a work for the Lord under such discouraging circumstances.

In conclusion, I am curious to know how often in our brotherhood the last night's service of 51 additions has been exceeded.

MRS. O. A. CARR.

Educational Conference for Illinois.

The trusees or Eureka College have determined to call a conference of the Churches of Christ in this state at Springfield, Ill., May 15, at 10 o'clock A. M., to continue one day and evening. A program will be published in due time.

This call is not to sound any note of alarm; on the contrary it grows out of the belief that there are larger and better things ahead for the college. The trustees are planning for enlargement, but feel that they cannot carry the college forward to the high success which awaits it, without the united counsel and co-operation of the whole brotherhood.

A new era has dawned upon the educational progress of our country. Millions of dollars are being appropriated out of the taxes paid by the people for the support of universities and normal schools. Millions more are being poured out of private purses to endow and equip great denominational institutions. The self-sustaining college, and the endowment of only a few thousands of dollars, are things of the past. We cannot longer succeed by employing the means and methods of the past, however adequate they may have been for their day and generation. Our people must arouse themselves and prepare to meet the demands made upon them by the new order of things or else fall hopelessly out of the possession. The conference hereby called will be to help us adjust ourselves to the larger efforts which must now be undertaken.

We hope to have a large attendance. Everybody will be welcome. The Springfield church, with characteristic generosity, has invited us to be its guests. Such entertainment as may be required, they will furnish; and they express the hope that they may have a very large number of the brethren visit them.

Every one of our preachers in the state ought to go if possible. We especially desire to see a large number of the leading business men and women of the churches. I hereby urge all of the ministers and church officers to bring this matter before their congregations at the earliest possible moment, and have delegates appointed who will pledge themselves to attend. Send me, on a postal card, the names of those appointed.

Let it be distinctly understood that the meeting will not be for the purpose of asking those who attend for money. Nothing of the sort will be done. We want counsel, prayer, plans, the formulation of the proper policy, and not to bleed those who come.

We hope to see present every former student of the college that can possibly attend, both from this and other states.

Now, brethren, let us do our utmost, one and all, to gather together a great company. Let the brethren leave their farms, their stores, their shops and their homes for one day in order to help plan for the larger success which is sure to come whenever we are ready to receive it. J. H. HARDIN, Pres.

Arkansas Mission Notes.

The churches at Nashville, Prescott and contiguous congregations are arranging to employ a preacher. A good move.

The work at Pine Bluff is a standing monument to the wisdom of co-operation. Bro. Crutcher, notwithstanding the severity of the weather, has raised the money and paid the first note due Church Extension. Few men under the circumstances could have done this. Bro. C. is recognized as a power among the religious forces at Pine Bluff. He is receiving about one-half what his talents would command in many places. God rewards the faithful, but we cannot afford to neglect them.

Bro. Kincaid is doing a splendid work at Hot Springs. He has assisted in organizing a meeting of the preachers of the city. He reports for the quarter: Sermons, 24; additions, 9; pastoral calls, 290; raised for all purposes, $170; Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor active.

Fredrick Wyatt, Mena, reports: Days, 40; discourses, 11; baptisms, 1; other additions, 16; additions Y. P. S. C. E., 11. Attendance increasing.

Bro. Allhands, Arkadelphia: Good work done. Baptized a young lady, a student at Quachita College, Feb. 19th. There has been decided improvement at Arkadelphia during the year past.

Bro. Jones, Amity: Good work is being done through all his field. He preaches at Amity and Mt. Ida, at each of which places one hundred students are brought together, and "Bro. Joe" is popular with them. A house of worship will be erected soon at Mt. Ida.

Bro. Stainer has raised good interest at North Little Rock. He has large congregations. The house has been improved very much in appearance and much good has been done. Appointment has been made for the organization of the Stuttgart district. Bro. Jordan's work at Rogers is progressing favorably.

The writer is now assisting Bro. Jones in Caddo Gap district. Has visited Nashville, Hope, Prescott, Mena, Hot Springs, Camden, Arkadelphia, Mt. Ida, Amity and Caddo Gap recently.

Will all Arkansas churches work for a liberal contribution to home work the first Sunday in May?

The home board is helping us and let us show our appreciation. No matter how weak, let each church give something. Don't hesitate to send to B. L. Smith a little if you can not make it large. God's blessings be with all.

E. C. BROWNING.

Cotner University Rescue League.

Recently a very strong article appeared in our national journals from the pen of F. A. Bright, president of our state mission board, entitled, "A Supreme Opportunity in Our Educational Work." Bro. Bright stated plain facts. Our opportunity is supreme. Seven thousand dollars will now save this property.

Through the concessions and subscriptions of creditors and the friends of Christian education, an indebtedness of $62,000 has melted away until $7,000 more will claim this trophy for the Churches of Christ.

All that has been gained hangs upon the raising of this balance by June 1st, '99, as we no longer have this chance after July 1st, the latest date of settlement.

We pray for a quick response from brethren everywhere.

Ten years of splendid educational work stands to the credit of the school. Some of our best educators have been in charge of our courses of study. Now Cotner is a member of the State College Union by virtue of her courses of study and the quality of work done. This Union is headed by the State University.

At present we have a body of ten consecrated teachers, led by Pres. W. P. Aylesworth, who are working nobly to hold this work.

This is a strategic point for our educational work. Scores of young people have already gone out from Cotner. This year, besides general students, thirty-three are preparing for gospel work at home and abroad.

Let all friends of Christian education join in this great struggle. We have been diligently at work in a field full of difficulties, and have received an earnest response; but drought for years makes the victory impossible to us single-handed. A failure just at this point means untold loss to the Lord's work in this great Northwest, and shame reflected upon a people who fail to grasp such an opportunity. We extend our hands toward Kansas, South Dakota, Colorado, Iowa, Missouri and the brethren in every direction. Aid us immediately in this critical moment, and help us crown with success a work so well begun.

Send me a postal card or a letter with either cash or pledge of one dollar or more for the Trust Fund, which is being sacredly kept in a vault, until the glad day comes when we have enough to pay over and get a clear title to this valuable plant. All pledges due on or before June 1st, 1899. A few days since I received a one hundred-dollar pledge by mail, and some smaller pledges have come in response to Bro. Bright's article.

"That thou doest do quickly." May these words come with force, not leading to the betrayal of the Master's work, but to the honoring of our Lord in the extension of his kingdom.

Greater and greater interest is being shown. Seven thousand Disciples could settle this matter speedily. Brethren, come forward. Here are a few words from those who are deeply interested in this undertaking.

Shall we allow this opportunity to pass by? This property cost one hundred thousand dollars. Without ownership of the property the school cannot be conducted much longer. This is needed to prepare young men for the ministry. Our cause will be put back fifty years in this state if we lose this school. It cannot, it must not be.

F. A. BRIGHT,
Pres. State Mission Board.
Beatrice, Neb.

What if there have been mistakes? Those mistakes are all being retrieved by this last move, and this is our golden opportunity to reap the benefit of this retrieving. Other colleges have made mistakes, if possible worse than Cotner has made. But strong men, with true and faithful hearts, took hold of them and saved them from sinking.

Many of our churches owe almost their existence to Cotner. The Fremont Church—whatever that may be now or in the future—owes its being very largely to Cotner.

MRS. W. A. COLLINS,

Cotner must certainly be saved. The good it has done amply repays all that has been spent in the enterprise. The good it can do is not to be compared with the amount it will take to place it upon a firm foundation. I will pay twenty-five dollars.

Jubilee! Jubilee!

America should lead the world in civilization and religion. "HOME MISSIONS TO THE FRONT" is in strict harmony with the principles of substantial development. The restoration, of primitive Christianity is the restoration, not only of the primitive faith of the church, but of the primitive work as well—world-wide evangelization. America is white unto the harvest, the Master calls for laborers, the laborers are worthy of their hire. $100,000 for Home Missions in 1899 is possible and should by all means be actual from our million people in the United States. Count me as one who will strive to do all he can in 1899 to arouse greater interest in and more loyal support for Home Missions. W. H. WAGGONER.

The American Christian Missionary Society is Worthy of Our Support.

While the history of the Society's past has on account of meagre support contained far fewer successes than we have wished and prayed for, it is still an honorable one. Many

WM. F. COWDEN.

Sunday-schools and Endeavor Societies and churches, from Boston to San Francisco and from Minneapolis to the summer sea of the Southland, have received its timely, Christly help. By no means least among the things it has done is the fact that it has fostered throughout our mighty myriads with the voices and pens of its earnest secretaries and its faithful friends that spirit of missions which is to us increasingly as the breath of the Omnipotent.

Its present plans and undertakings are equally honorable. Twenty-eight state boards and twelve new stations are now promised the Society's support. That these burdens will be carried, even triumphantly, there is perhaps no better pledge apart from the divine promises than the occupancy of the secretarial offices by Benj. L. and C. C. Smith.

But other and higher things than these proclaim the Society's right to our support. I mean the multiplied and vital interests and the glorious ideals for which it stands, the purification, preservation and divine renewal of our country by the salvation of her citizens, the swift evangelization of the whole world whose remotest ends are daily more represented among us, and finally and not least, the strengthening of the hands and the beautifying of the face of the church with the strength and beauty of her Lord.

The American Christian Missionary Society deserves and cries aloud by these holy things for our largest and best gifts!

Best Way to Take the May Offering.

Collection implies the willingness and the ability of the congregation to give. No worthy success can be achieved at any time without previous preparation. The gathering of fruit, ripe, rich and luscious, is an easy task compared with the work of setting out, tilling, pruning and developing the orchard. Order and system secure the easy, speedy and complete saving of all the fruit. But what is more important than all things is that the fruit shall be on the trees ready for the hands of the gatherers.

Let the preparation that extends through the whole year, previous to the taking of the offering—sermons, prayers, songs, prayer-meeting talks and house-to-house, earnest, faithful presentation of the great needs of the waste places in our own land—go before complete success.

Never has there been such a demand for generous contributions to home work. The Pacific Coast and the territory intervening between the Sierras and the Mississippi Valley are calling for help. The strategic points in cities present and future must be seized and held by the advocates of pure, primitive Christianity.

Our plea, freed from sectarianism and bigotry, must stand out in its full-orbed power. Calls are heard for the most generous gifts from the noble souls who have hitherto sustained our soldiers as they achieved the victories in the West. Ten thousand new contributors are needed to swell the tide of helpfulness.

We assume that the people are thoroughly posted in all that is going on under the direction of our General Missionary Board, that they are in deep sympathy with the work and the workers, that they are able to give and willing to give. This being the case, the best way to take the May offering from the congregation is, we think, first, that all the hymns and the prayers and the sermons be filled with the whole enthusiasm of missions and that the conscience be fully aroused for the work, that pencils and paper be previously prepared and that where the cash is not in hand every member present be induced to make a pledge, and if the people are sufficiently cultivated in giving, to allow some generous soul to take the lead by a large contribution, that others may be induced to fall in line by making gifts or pledges.

Christians may provoke one another to love good works. Corinth stimulated Macedonia. One church may provoke another to generosity. One generous heart may spread the contagion of philanthropy to a hundred souls.

If there be first a willing mind it is accepted according to what a man hath, not according to what he hath not. The willing mind comes from cultivation, the unwilling mind is surrounded by obstructions that must be rooted out.

No man is so poor but that he can afford, no matter how many other obligations he may have, to lend his hand to make the May offerings exceed all past liberality. Our nation is ripe for great missionary enthusiasm, our opportunities are greater than ever before, and we feel sure that with the proper effort the church will surpass all expectations in its benevolence. On Thirty Days' Trial.

The offer the Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., of Buffalo, N. Y., make our readers in this issue of our paper, is made possible by the fact that they deal directly with the consumer, wiping out all middlemen's profits. We know the Soaps they make are good. That the Larkin Co. have faith in the quality of their soaps and in our readers is evidenced by the offer they make of a thirty days' free trial of their goods before the bill is payable. Then if you are not satisfied with the soaps, or the premium, you need only to notify the Company and they will take the goods away, making no charge for what you have used. The price of the box and the premium is only the ordinary cost of the soaps alone; the premium you get costs you nothing. If you prefer, you can have the soaps alone, that is you forego the premium and get double the quantity of soaps, or $20.00 worth for $10.00. The Larkin Idea is, by saving the middlemen's profits and expense, to double the purchasing power of a $10.00 bill. No one need hesitate to sent a trial order to the Larkin Co. under the conditions they make.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Huntington, March 24.—We have just closed a 10 days' meeting at Mt. Hope, Fayette Co., with 29 added. There was no church organization when the writer went to them, but they are now fully prepared to carry on the Lord's work in a scriptural manner. Bro. C. C. Brown, one of the elders, and a godly man, gave a lot for a house of worship and placed the deed on record. Sisters Sarah Smith and F. C. Caverndish have solicited $400 for the building, and they will begin work on the house as soon as the weather permits. They have begun right, as they have already taken the collection for Foreign Missions and the money is in the hands of F. M. Rains. They will also take the collection for Home Missions in May. E. ZEIGLER.

MINNESOTA.

HURON S. DAK., March 20.—Our cause is now established at Dundee, closing our meeting March 12. Bitterest opposition existed. We used the Presbyterian church for our meeting. Several prominent members of that church took a stand for the Bible alone and united with us. Bro. Atwood, of Luverne, Minn., will preach for this congregation two nights every two weeks until fall. Those people are grounded in the faith, and will carry it on to victory. Bro. Vandewalker, late pastor of the Christian Church, Sioux City, Iowa, did the preaching, and presented the simple gospel truths in a firm, fearless way. Seed was sown for future development. Bro. S. T. Crawford and his brother were the only members when we began. They were faithful financially and otherwise. Greatcred it is due them. The music was heartily entered into, and had its effect. Pray for Dundee.—F. HOWARD SWEETMAN, singer.

IOWA.

Bloomington, March 22.—We have just closed a three weeks' meeting with 21 accessions; 19 by obedience. Sister Pearl Pemis, of Thorntown, Ind., had charge of the music and did most excellent work. Henderson, March 21.—We began meeting here the 12th with Bro. and Sister Brickert, of Red Oak, and the first week we had eight added by confession; two by statement. Bro. Mason City, March 22.—Our meeting of three and a half weeks at Onawa closed last Thursday night with 39 added; 38 confessions, 24 of them the last five days. He organized this church years ago and has been its pastor two or three times. The church was greatly strengthened by this meeting, notwithstanding storms and sickness. Bro. Johnson brings to his work such breadth and depth of culture, and such energy and power for the cause of Christ, that we can count ourselves indeed fortunate to have had his services. He and Sister Johnson are greatly beloved for their work's sake. Their lives preach forth the gospel. Bro. Johnson's last pastoral work was at Colorado Springs, where B. B. Tyler now ministers. His present address is 204 Brace Building, Lincoln, Neb. No church desiring pastoral or evangelistic work can do no better than to write him.—OSCAR SWEENEY.

Tower Hill, March 24.—Ellis Purlee my brother from Pawnee Rock, Kas., is now assisting me in a protracted meeting. We continue indefinitely; five added to date.—CHAS. D. PURLEE.

LaHarpe, March 22.—There was a seeming discrepancy in the reports of our meeting in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I reported on Tuesday 58 and on Thursday Bro. Clements returned and preached in the afternoon at the baptizing at which two more came forward making 60 which he reported after that meeting. This is how there appeared different reports.—K. C. Easter Song.

ADELIA P. BRANHAM.

Out of fair Easter's sweet, mystic beauty
Cometh a blessing divine.
Angels waiting, on sentinel duty,
Bring message of love sublime.
Stars of the morning blend their glad voices;
Earth's saddest heart in hope now rejoices.

Heartsease in fragrance breathe the gladstory;
Lilies of purity sing.
Hyacinths sweet reflect the bright glory
Of Him who is crowned their King.
Roses resplendent in diamonds of dew
Now overshadow the myrtle's dark hue.

Out of the rock-bound tomb in the garden
Comes forth the glorified Lord.
Finished the deed that now seals our pardon—
His hand holds the blest reward.
Alleluiahs of praise, grand anthems sing,
To join with the choral the angels.

Lift up your hearts to the Kingdom of Light,
Where Seraphim host now stand;
For Christ has illumined the grave's dark night
With halo from Glory-land.
Waft the sweet melody, breezes afar,
Up to the City with white gates ajar.

Who Shall Roll Away the Stone?

BY ANNE D. BRADLEY.

I never begin to write but there is the feeling in my heart that the page may meet the eye of one who needs a whispered word of comfort. To-day the conviction was strong upon me, and caused me to anxiously seek for a theme.

And first I wrote, "God is good." I recalled the multiplied days of gladness that have crowded into my life, and my grateful heart softly re-echoed, "God is good." But I know there are lives more burdened than mine, and though they would fain hush every murmur, still it is sometimes hard, with weary frame and aching hands, to clasp the heavy load and whisper gladly, "God is good."

And next I wrote, "Father, I thank thee." But not far from me is a heart aching and bleeding from fresh wounds that will take a long, long while to heal. Sitting 'neath their heavy shadows, nursing their grief and refusing to be comforted; blinded by their tears so that they cannot see that love still guides—how can their white lips force the words, "Father, I thank thee?"

Another, because I was so helpless, I prayed for ever so tiny a light that I might flash its beams across the path of some weary or some struggling one, and cause the way to seem less dreary.

In every path there are seeming obstructions. In every heart there is some doubt or fear of what may come. Every one of us long to press on, yet shrink back because we are sure our feeble strength will not suffice to do the work that is so needed. From every willing but forboding spirit the cry arises, "Who shall roll away the stone?"

Oh, troubled soul, glance backward! As together we review our past we each will find that stones, heavier far than those which menace us to-day, have often frowned upon us, but as we pressed on, lo! the mightiest ones all disappeared. An angel hand had been before us and rolled the stone away.

In the years now safely passed I recall how I was wont to wonder and vex my soul with ceaseless questions as to how I, so helpless and so weak, could fulfill the duties that pressed about me. Often and often I could only see a single step at a time. In my eager impatience to press on I could not see that light for one step at the time was quite enough for me. I forgot that I needed no more; that even if I had light for all my journey I could not possibly take more than just one step at a time.

Again, I did not understand—how could I? for my spiritual eyes were not well opened—that it was truest mercy to hedge my way on every side, and only leave a single step exposed to view. The single step—all else shut off—explained to my dull sense the very way God would have me go. I could not, even if I would, wander from the way when only one step was allowed to me.

I think of the vast army of overworked brothers and sisters all over our land. Some of them are almost too tired to pray to-night, almost too discouraged to remember that "God is good." They can only pause in their obstructed path to gravely question, "Who shall roll away the stone?"

Oh, sister, so tired of the daily, humdrum, weary hours of common toil; oh, brother, so discouraged with the heavy burdens, the sad heartache—a Friend so gentle and so full of pity draws very near to you and me, and begs us to trust his shielding love; to fear no evil; to have no anxiety for the morrow; to cast our every care upon him.

"But the obstructing stone is so great," we sob. "I know," whispers tenderly our willing burden-bearer, "but my strength is so much greater. Child, thy smallest care is watched and felt by me. Never a heartache but my own heart comprehends; never a sigh but it finds echo in the bosom which always throbs with tenderest love for thee. Always about thee are my everlasting arms, which never can grow weak and weary. I love thee, I guide thee, I shield thee. My presence wards off every evil that dares assail thee; my arm upholds thee wherever the way is rough; my omnipotent strength rolls every hindering stone away that would obstruct thy path."

Now, listening to the voice divine, faith grows bright and strong, and fear lies dead before us. No longer do we question, "Who shall roll away the stone?" for we know in whom we have believed. Though we may not fully comprehend why this or that need be, still can we trustfully whisper, "God is good." And, because as we approach the stone we find that it has been rolled away, we can exclaim with gratitude, "Father, I thank thee!"

Ft. Worth, Tex.

Love, amid the other graces in this world is like a cathedral tower, which begins on the earth, and at first is surrounded by the other parts of the structure. But at length, rising above buttressed wall and arch, and parapet and pinnacle, it shoots, spire-like, many a foot right into the air, so high that the huge cross on its summit glows like a spark in the morning light, and shines like a star in the evening sky, when the rest of the pile is enveloped in darkness. So love here is surrounded by the other graces, and divides the honors with them; but they will have felt the wrap of night and of darkness, when it will shine, luminous, against the sky of eternity.—Beecher.

Eggs and Easter.

The custom of sending presents of eggs at Easter is a very primitive one. From the earliest ages the egg has been regarded, not only as the type, but as the origin of life. It was, therefore, natural at this season of the year, when Christ's resurrection life was commemorated, our fathers should have embodied that idea in the sending of presents of eggs to their friends. In the book that records the household expenses of Edward I. one of the items of expenditure for Easter is, "450 eggs stained and covered with gold leaf." One of the Popes sent Henry VIII. an egg in a silver case. As early as 1589 eggs were in Russia the most treasured of exchanges at Easter. People went about with their pockets filled with colored eggs, and exchanged them with their friends. The Druids regarded the egg as the symbol of the sun, and believed it hatched from itself the earth and all other planets. The Chinese, the Burmese, the Syrians, and some other ancient and modern nations believed that all things sprang mysteriously from an egg. They do not seem to have troubled themselves much with the question, "Where did the egg come from?" To them this was a small matter, but the idea that the egg was the origin of life probably accounted for the custom of making presents of eggs at Easter—the time of the year at which new life begins, and at which people are more particularly reminded that the life they now possess need never perish. The legend about the bird hatching her eggs in a tree overlooking the sepulchre in which Christ was buried, and singing hopeless dirges until she saw the angels come and roll away the stone and saw Christ come forth, is well known; but it is not so well known that the very early Christians neither observed Easter nor Christmas, nor any other festival, but only endeavored to promote a life of piety and blamelessness.—Preacher's Magazine.

The Resurrection.

BY EVELYN SMITH.

Twice had the darkness covered the earth,
  Clear and moonlit was the midnight hour,
The world was wrapped in a peaceful hush
  By a living God of almighty power.
The body of Jesus lay in the tomb,
  Guards stood by with helmets and spears;
The hearts of His friends were sunk in sorrow
  As the morning star in the east appears.
After His death the third day had dawned,
  A great earthquake had shaken the place,
When lo! an angel of God descended
  With snow-white raiment and radiant face.
The guards shrunk back from that glorious sight,
  Frightened and trembling from foot to head.
As the angel rolled the stone away,
  They fell to the ground as men who were dead.
The Son of God walked forth from the grave,
  The Man who by His foes was crucified
Came back to earth from the spirit-land,
  Redeeming the world for which He had died.
God looked down from the Heavens above
  And saw His work, that it was well done;
He saw that His world was again restored
  Through the gift of His love, His beloved Son.

The Risen Christ the Life of the Bible.

L. A. BANKS, D. D.

That which keeps the Bible always up to date, making it the most live book in the world, is the ever-living Christ who lives in it. As we come to love him, and are risen with him, the Bible becomes precious to us. I have heard of a very cultivated literary critic, a lady, who reviewed a book of a certain author, and was very severe in her criticism of it, pointing out many flaws. A few months afterward she became acquainted with the author of this book, and married him. Then she reread the book, and said: "What a beautiful book! what a nice book! there are some mistakes here and there, but they ought to be overlooked." And she began to recommend that book to every one. The book was just the same as it was before, but her relation to the author was changed. Before, he was a stranger, now he was her husband; but when she began to love him, she began to love his book. When we come into fellowship with the risen Christ, the Bible becomes the most live and precious of all the books in the world to us.—Selected.

The Easter Symbol.

CHARLES KINGSLEY.

"Consider the lilies of the field." We must not take our Lord's words exactly. He is speaking of the lilies, of the bulbous plants which spring into flower in countless thousands every spring over the downs of Eastern lands. All the winter they are dead, unsightly roots hidden in the earth. But no sooner does the sun of spring shine upon their graves then they rise into sudden life and beauty, as it pleases God, and every seed takes its own peculiar body. Sown in corruption, they are raised in incorruption; sown in weakness, they are raised in power; sown in dishonor, they are raised in glory—delicate, beautiful in color, perfuming the air with fragrance, types of immortality fit for the crowns of angels.

"Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow." For even so is the resurrection of the dead. Yes, not without a divine providence, yea, a divine inspiration, has Eastertide been fixed as the season when the earth shakes off her winter's sleep, when the birds come back and the flowers begin to bloom, when every seed which falls into the ground and dies and rises again with a new body is a witness to us of the resurrection of Christ, and a witness, too, that we shall rise again; that in us as in it life shall conquer death; when every bird that comes back to sing and build among us, every flower that blows, is a witness to us of the resurrection of the Lord and of our resurrection.—Preachers' Magazine.

"Lovest Thou Me?"

(John 21:15.)

Lovest thou me? O, hear the Master say,
  Lovest thou me?
  Lovest thou me?
He gently asks. What hast thou done to-day,
What kindly deed to cheer some pilgrim's way?
  What sin-sick soul
  Has been made whole,
O'er whose dark path has shown some guiding ray?
  What ear hath heard
  Some cheering word
In gentle tone by which some heart was stirred?

O, Christian, hark! Thy Master calls again,
  Lovest thou me?
  Lovest thou me?
How sweet that voice; let it not sound in vain.
Cans't thou, lone heart, respond in words so plain,
  "Thou knowest all?"
  I hear Thy call,
O, doubt me not, tho' long I've idle lain,
  Tho' oft I may
  From Thee go astray,
O, Lord my God—Thou know'st my love to-day.

Lovest thou me? Then feed my scatter'd sheep.
  Go bring them in,
  Their love to win
From error's paths; their falt'ring steps to keep,
And thwart the foe whose eyelids never sleep.
  Yes, show thy love;
  By service prove,
Thy love for me is full, and pure, and deep.
  In service free
  Thy love I'll see,
And thus I'll know in truth, thou lovest me.

The Tallest Office Building in the World.

Towering high above the other "sky scrapers" in New York City is the Park Row Building, which lifts its twin towers 390 feet into mid-air, and unfurls its two flags over the city at a height of 447 feet above the sidewalk.

This monster structure, of twenty-nine stories, contains 950 offices, has 2,095 windows, and cost $2,400,000. It weighs 20,000 tons, and has a foundation the depth of which is 54 feet. The estimated number of occupants is 4,000.

The Park Row building is considerably the tallest commercial building in the world; and it may surprise many of our readers to know that it stands upon a foundation of sand.—The Inland.

"Three from two you can't," says the schoolboy. Right! Three from two you can't, either in dollars or dividends or sarsaparilla. It takes the best sarsaparilla root to make the best sarsaparilla extract. The best sarsaparilla comes from Honduras, C. A., and the Dr. Ayer Co. practically controls the entire product. Yet others claim to be making "best" sarsaparilla. They must be making it out of the remainder left after subtracting three from two. But, "three from two you can't." You can't make the best sarsaparilla without best root. You only get the best when you

The Length of Human Life.

"According to M. I. Holl Schooling, of Brussels," says Cosmos (February 18), "there is an old rule for finding the length of a man's life if the present age lies between 12 and 86 years. This is the rule: Subtract the present age from 86, and divide the remainder by 2; the result will give the number of years you have yet to live. This old rule was discovered by the mathematician De Moivre, who emigrated to England from France in 1865 and became a member of the Royal Society. The curves given by M. Schooling are interesting to examine. A first diagram shows the chance that every man has of living one year longer than his present age. At birth, this chance is 5 to 1; at five years, 119 to 1; at ten, 512 to 1; at fifteen, 347; at twenty, 207; at twenty-five, 156; at thirty, 129; at thirty, 120; at thirty-five, 97; at forty, 78, etc. M. Schooling affirms from his calculations that of 1,000 individuals of 60 years 599 will live to be 70, 120 to be 80 years, and 17 to be 90; while of 1,000 nonagenarians, four will reach their hundredth year. We may add that for men of 65, the average expectation of life is 10 1-3 years."—Translation made for The Literary Digest.

Justice to the Bear.

L. R. HORNISH.

Rumors of wars and wars have been;
Now let the peace voice enter in.
Millennium must come, must dawn,
When arms and armaments are gone.

Nor comes this voice from craven lands
Or pleading suppliant, who stands
With "tired hands and tottering form,"
Fearing to breast the battle's storm.

Land of Tolstoy and Turgenef!
Or Stepniak and Gortchakof!
How puny sounds the scoffer's name
Beside the synonyms of fame.

From continent to continent,
From Orient to Occident,
From tropic zone to polar sea
Goes forth the royal ukase.

Ah, who may disregard the call?
Respond, ye nations, great and small,
When he whose grandsire freed the serf
Sends peaceful challenge to the earth.

For, with the frankness of youth,
Nicolas beareth the message of truth,
And 'neath the symbol, the guise of the bear,
Breatheth the spirit of Nazareth there.

Coward is he that searcheth to find
Evil intent in the Nobility's mind.
Then, God of the nations "Be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget"—

That when our nation, torn and bleeding lay,
It was "the Lion" reached out paws to prey,
While "Ursa Major," the land of the Czar,
Stood staunch and true as the Polar star.

To Columbia fair, her hands stained with blood
Fresh from the battle, the sea's seething flood,
There cometh the dawn, the first beaming ray,
"The Star of the East," the Czar's ukase.

This, this to us is "the Truce of the Bear;"
Shall we scoff at his message? Beware!
The millennium is breaking, though storm-clouds draw nigh,
Sweeping o'er eastern continent, flashing o'er Eastern sky.

Well, one battle more, foretold in "the Book;"
Then sword turns to plowshare and spear to pruning hook,
And the nations of earth, glad from war's release,
Shall have but one ruler, the Prince of Peace.

Ave Maria.

A clergyman was once staying at the house of an English working man. He happened to see an image of the Virgin Mary standing over the mantelpiece, which struck him as incongruous. By way of making talk, he asked how it got there.

"Well, you see, sir, it cum' do' this way," replied his host, "I was a-coortin' o' two sisters—Sally an' Maria—an' I wasn't just sartin which I was to 'ave. One day, as I wor a-starin' into a shop winder, I saw that 'ere statoot, with 'Ave Maria' underneath. That came right 'ome to me, so I med up me mind right off to 'ave Maria; an' we was spliced. She's bin a reet gude wife to me, an' so I bought t'image to keep it in mind."

So it appears that images are useful in more ways than one.—The Christian Endeavor World.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

Thousands Of Families Have One in The House at All Times.

The Same Exceptional Opportunity Offered Here to All Readers of This Paper.

A prominent citizen remarked recently to the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, "It may seem surprising to you, but in my house we have a family doctor there all the time. Nor am I the only one who has this great blessing," said he. "I know of many families who have this same doctor always on hand, always within reach."

"Do I mean a man, a physician, in flesh and blood?" he asked. "No, not exactly that; the family doctor that I refer to is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy. We have not had to call a doctor to our house since we have used it."

This is the testimony of thousands who know Swamp-Root for what it is. This famous medicine is the absolute conqueror of kidney and bladder diseases, and many a man and woman who walk the streets to-day in the complete possession of health owe their lives to the power of this great discovery over kidney and bladder ills and uric acid disturbances. In diseases of the blood, no matter from what source they arise, Swamp-Root goes right to the source of the trouble, and cures by first removing the cause, and sends the blood leaping and bounding away in quest of bright eyes and rosy cheeks.

Constipation and liver troubles, urinal weaknesses and the torture that goes with them, rheumatism, stiff joints; in fact, diseases arising from any wrong condition of the blood, liver, bladder or kidneys, are promptly overcome by Dr. Kilmer's famous discovery, Swamp-Root.

None but those who have made a study of the subject realize what an immense amount of work the kidneys perform every day. They are the sewer of the system, and once they become clogged up, poison runs riot and disease has full sway. Just as a choked sewer breeds pestilence in a city, so do weak and unhealthy kidneys breed disease in the human body.

Swamp-Root clears out all the impurities, helps the kidneys to perform their work properly, drives the poison out of the blood and system, invigorates and regenerates you and adds tenfold to the pleasures and comforts of life.

Swamp-Root has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief, and has proved so successful that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, who have not already tried it, may have a free sample bottle of Swamp-Root, and thus test for themselves its wonderful curative properties.

If you will send your name and full address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., a sample bottle will be sent absolutely free by mail, postpaid, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact their very lives, to the wonderful curative properties of Swamp-Root.

This great remedy is for sale at most drug stores in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. Don't make any mistake, but make a note of the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and remember that it is prepared only by Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y.

If you take advantage of this generous offer and write for a free sample bottle be sure to mention the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Submarine Telegraphs.

The submarine telegraphs of the world, and especially the practicability of a submarine telegraph across the Pacific, are discussed at considerable length in the January number of the Summary of Commerce and Finance, just issued by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. The statement shows that the submarine telegraphs of the world number 1,500. Their aggregate length is 170,000 miles; their total cost is estimated at $250,000,000, and the number of messages annually transmitted over them, 6,000,000. All the grand divisions of the earth are now connected by their wires, and from country to country and island to island the thoughts and words of mankind are instantaneously transmitted. Beneath all oceans, save the Pacific, the universal language which this system has created flows uninterruptedly, and man talks as face to face with his fellowman at the antipodes. Darkest Africa now converses with enlightened Europe or America, and the great events of the morning are known in the evening throughout the inhabited world. Adding to the submarine lines the land-telegraph systems by which they are connected and through which they bring interior points of the various continents into instantaneous communication, the total length of telegraph lines of the world is 835,000 miles, the length of their single wires or conductors 3,500,000 miles, and the total number of messages annually sent over them 365,000,000, or an average of 1,000,000 each day. Of the 170,000 miles of submarine telegraphs, about 150,000 belong to 35 companies operating the commercial cables, which number about 320; the remainder are mostly short lines controlled by governments, and connecting forts, batteries, signal stations, lighthouses, etc., the aggregate of government lines being about 1,150 and their total length about 20,000 miles. In addition to this, the governments of the world hold about 80,000 miles of cable in stock for war purposes, ready to be laid at a moment's notice.

Illustrated Sermon.

BY CAL OGBURN.

TEXT.—We are laborers together with God.—1 Cor. 3:9.

SERMON.

The valley was parched and dry. There had been neither rain nor dew for many weeks, and everything was famishing for water. The cattle lowed plaintively as they drank from the stagnant, filthy pool, and begged for water. Men looked up toward the brassy sky and prayed for water—the harvest would fail without it—but none came. Thus the weary weeks dragged slowly by without any relief being afforded.

One day some small clouds passed over the valley, and, looking down, saw the awful famine that prevailed and heard the piteous cry that came up from every animate object for water. They pitied the sufferers, but did nothing more, for indeed what could they do? So much was needed that they could not possibly supply the demand. They wished they could do something to give relief, but it seemed utterly impossible. So they continued their journey to the distant mountains—the favorite trysting-place of the clouds—and there related their experiences and observations to other clouds, and enlisted their sympathy, and they all exclaimed, "Poor, famine-stricken valley! How we pity you!"

For several days the clouds stayed about the summits of the mountains, enjoying each other's society, until one evening there was a slight change in the temperature, which was very perceptible to the clouds, and the following morning there was not one of them to be seen in its original form. They had been turned to snow during the night, and now lay in great white heaps upon the mountains. The light, airy vapor, of which they had been composed, had been congealed. Though they had assumed a different form, they still felt a deep interest in the thirsty valley. But what could be done? They were so far away and so stiff with cold.

Just then the warm, genial sun came forth from his chamber, where he had spent the night, and kindly offered his assistance. He, too, felt an interest in the parched valley. He first embraced each feathery snowflake, for they had all complained of being chilly, and breathed his warm breath upon them all day long, from early morning till very late in the evening, and each crystal snowflake became a tiny drop of water. But none of them were any nearer the valley than before. So the sun sent three of his servants, Affinity, Adhesion and Gravitation, to assist in answering the prayer that was being offered everywhere in the valley for water. Affinity caused the little globules of melted snowflakes to have a greater longing for each other's society and to endeavor to come nearer together; Adhesion held hem in close contact, and would not willingly permit the slightest separation; while Gravitation gently, but firmly and persistently, pulled them down the mountains and far out into the parched valley—and the prayer of the famishing was answered. Each tiny speck of vapor that had once pssed over the valley as a part of the cloud that had at that time and afterward so feelingly expressed its sympathy, had done its part in bringing relief.

APPLICATION.

The cry of the needy is constantly ascending heavenward. There are many who are famishing for the water of life. We look about us and see the desolation and misery of the famine-stricken and hear their piteous appeals for relief, coming often from mute lips, and we stand appalled by the awful condition that prevails and our almost utter inability to render any needed assistance. So we pass on to enjoy each other's Christian society in some more congenial place, and thus try to forget our responsibility. Fortunate, indeed, are those who there or elsewhere are made to fully realize before it is too late that "we are laborers together with God," and to do their part, however small, in answering the prayer of those who are pleading for that water that shall be in them "a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT? For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

The Daily.

Miss Harriet Taylor, who was to take care of George and Jennie, during their parents' absence, was about fifty years of age, with hair fast turning gray, a voice soft and kind, and a way of making sweet-cakes that was the delight of her young cousins. After supper all sat in the sitting room, Jennie and Mildred working examples and George writing at the table, while Miss Harriett knitted on a red glove. Jennie was trying to reduce a fraction to the lowest terms, to see if it was the same as the answer, and she had already chased it half way across the slate, when she got to thinking about her absent mother. Suddenly a big tear stole down her cheek and blotted out her denominator.

"Did you get it?" Mildred asked, looking up suddenly. Then seeing the trouble, she put her arm about Jennie, who burst into tears, and said she wished she was grown, and then tried to laugh and couldn't. "Don't cry, Jennie," said Mildred, "haven't you got Aunt Harriet and me?"

"Yes, but that ain't papa and mamma," said Jennie. "They never went off this way before, and nobody knows when they will come back. And I am used to seeing their faces wheever I look up, and now—and now!"

"Since you see them so often," said Mildred, "I should think you could wait a little while."

"You think so because you don't know what it is to have a father and mother," sobbed Jennie. "You were a baby when yours died. But I know what it means, you see, and the more I have them the more I miss them."

"That's true," said Mildred; "it looks like every boy and girl has parents except me. And many of them don't seem to care if they have. If I had a mother, I would love her, and love her, and love her, with with all my"—here Jennie began to cry also.

"I have tried to be a mother to you, dear," said Miss Harriet, looking over her needles at Mildred, "but I know no one can fill such a place. Often I do not know just how to act, to guide you, and comfort you, and make you the splendid woman of my dreams." And tears came to Miss Harriet's eyes, because Mildred's lament caused her to feel that somehow she had failed.

"As for me," said George, "I took a big red apple to school and somebody slipped it out of my pocket and now I haven't any apple, and—boo, hoo, hoo!" He tried to imitate sobbing, but it sounded so much like a calf bawling that the girls began to laugh.

"If I haven't a mother," said Mildred, rising and throwing her arms about Miss Harriet, "I have the dearest and best old sweetcake aunt in the country and she isn't aunt to anybody but to me!"

"Just as soon as you people get through with your tears and congratulations," said George, "I have a plan here that will interest you. It is for us three to get out a daily paper, containing all the news; and we will save them up and let papa and mamma read them when they come home." He held up what appeared to be a small blank book. He had made it by folding together two pages of his scrapbook. There was a pin in the middle to keep the leaves together. He had headed the first page thus:

THE DAILY GLEANER.

No. 1. Nov. 12, Saturday, '98. Vol. I.

As the girls were interested, George continued: "This time I will write the first two pages, Jennie the next two, Mildred the next two, and we can finish up the last two somehow."

"I will write a continued story on the last two, if you want me to," suggested Mildred.

"Just the thing!" said George. "We'll have to divide up the news; this time I will write up school and town news, Jennie can do the home news and Mildred is to tell about what we leave out. Next day we will exchange our subjects. You don't want to bother over arithmetic any more on Saturday, do you!"

"I was just working ahead in the book because I hate it and had the blues," said Jennie. "But you must unpin the leaves, so I can be writing while you are writing."

"What can I be doing?" said Mildred. "I can't be writing on one side the paper while you are writing on the other side!"

"That's so," said George. "We'll have to have twelve pages, and each write four; but we will cut down the pages so they will be small. Nobody wants to get tired of writing. Now I'll fold up three sheets and hand 'em out. In this way every other leaf will be written by a different person. When you get to the bottom of your second page, and you haven't run out, write, 'Continued on page so-and-so,' and then go ahead. Afterward, we'll pin 'em all together and have quite a magazine."

All were soon busily engaged. On the first page George wrote big headlines:

"INTERVIEWED!!!

END OF THE TROUBLE REACHED!!

TONY TALKS!

"Late this afternoon George Weston had an interview with Tony Scrubbs, the secretary of the Advance Society. Tony said, 'I will write the minutes for our next meeting and leave out all the foolishness. I am not angry with Jim Dancy. I will keep the five resolutions.' . . . We understand that Tattie Marsh is fixing up a delightful corner in her mother's sitting room. She is now at work on the cushions to fit on her seats." The rest of his writing was devoted to a highly sensational account of his meeting with the robber.

In the meantime Jennie had written in great capitals the heading, "GONE!" "Why Jennie!" said Mildred, "you can't write any on the page, if your headlines take up so much room!" Jennie added under it, "MYSTERIOUS DEPARTURE!" "The headlines are the most important thing about it," she said. "I feel like making them a mile long!"

Presently Mildred appealed to Miss Harriet. "Aunt Harriet, do you know of something that kills a man about a week after he has taken it, so gradually that he doesn't know he has been poisoned?"

"Dear me!" said Miss Harriet. "Certainly not!"

"I want to kill my villain," said Mildred, complainingly, "but I don't want to shoot him or anything common like that."

"What do you mean, Mildred Taylor?" demanded Miss Harriet, who had been so absorbed in her own thoughts that she had not noticed their enterprise. "What villain?"

"Alphonso De Vandeville is his name. That's a good long name and takes up over a line just by himself."

"Listen!" said George. "Wasn't that a footstep on the front walk!"

"Mildred," said Miss Harriet, "tell me instantly what you mean by this talk of shooting and poisoning!" Before she could reply, a knock sounded at the door. Miss Harriet went to the door and demanded through the crevice, "Who is there?"

"A gentleman to see George Weston," said a man's voice.

"This is a very late hour for any one to see George," said Miss Harriet, who was very much afraid of dark nights.

"I know it's late," said the voice, "but that's the Lord's doings and not mine."

"George," said Miss Harriet, "come here and see if you recognize this voice." George came. "Why don't you open the door, Cousin Harriet?" he said.

"Because I am in charge of this house, and I shall take care of it. Now sir! speak up, so you can be identified."

"Hello, George," said the man. Miss Harriet demanded in a trembling tone, "Do you know him?"

"Yes," said George, who had turned pale, "it is Washington Shaw!"

"Who is Washington Shaw?" demanded Miss Harriett. "Don't you remember?" said George. "It is the—the robber." At this moment Horace Greeley from his woodhouse home caught a whiff of the tramp and began to bark indignantly.

Next week another Honor List. I cannot print anybody's name who does not send me the names of the books they have read. Several have written that they have kept the rules. This is not enough. I must know what you have read, and how much. Children, the Advance Society Honor List means a great deal. You would be surprised to learn how many tried to keep our five simple resolutions and failed. Let all such start again with new courage. Children, we now have 342 members. We must make it 400. What do you say? Help me bring it about.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

THE SUPPER AT BETHANY.*

From his retirement in the district of Perea across the Jordan, which had been occasioned by the dangers surrounding his work in Judea, Jesus finally made preparations to take up his journey toward Jerusalem as the Passover season approached. The teachings of this period, which are so fully set forth in the third Gospel, culminated in the incidents connected with Jesus' arrival at Jericho, where he healed the blind man and brought spiritual awakening to the heart of the publican, Zachæus, at whose home he was entertained. Continuing his journey he came to Bethany at the close of the week preceding the final week of his ministry, and here on Saturday evening, after the close of the Sabbath, which ended at sunset, he was entertained in the house of Simon, called the leper, who had perhaps been healed by Jesus of this dreadful disease. As Simon is not mentionmed in the narrative of the supper and is only alluded to by Matthew and Mark as the owner, present or perhaps past, of the house, it may be that he was dead and that he had been related to Lazarus and his sisters in some manner. Be that as it may, the three friends of Jesus were present at the supper, and as events proved, were perhaps the most conspicuous persons there.

Certainly no one would attract more attention than Lazarus, and perhaps to most who were present he was invested with a unique and mysterious importance by virtue of his recent resurrection at the hands of Jesus. They could not fail to be touched with awe in looking upon one who had passed through the mystery of death and had come back to the world and human society. Many must have been the questions pressed upon him by his friends as to his experiences during those strange days of his absence. That he could tell much of these experiences is scarcely probable, for the life beyond life cannot be phrased in words that human lips can frame. But if Lazarus' person was the object of awe and curiosity it was equally a time of danger for him. The Jews who saw the growing influence of Jesus and knew that the circumstances connected with the raising of Lazarus had immensely increased the reputation of the Gallean were intent upon the removal of Lazarus by fair means or foul, and thus his life was compressed with conspiracy. Whether he knew of this or it only developed in subsequent transactions we are uniformed, but perhaps nothing but the early departure of Jesus from Bethany and his entrance upon more conspicuous tasks gave safety to Lazarus.

The second figure of this interesting group of people gathered at the supper was Martha, the older sister of Lazarus, who seemed to have played the part of hostess, or at least to have assisted in the function of hospitality. Martha has long been the type of the scrupulous and provident housekeeper, and perhaps has often been misunderstood as too intent upon the purely practical concerns of life and has thus been misjudged in contrast with her more quiet and thoughtful sister Mary. But the words of Jesus in Luke 10:41 do not rebuke her carefulness and industry, but rather the overanxiety about entertainment, which Jesus regarded as sufficiently insured by the simple provisions which always awaited him in the Bethany home. Certainly his words convey no emphasis upon the superiority of the meditative, reflective character over the practical and industrious. Both types are liable to exaggeration, and it is the exaggeration which disutrbs the symmetry and beauty of any character.

*Sunday-school Lesson for April 9th, 1899—The Anointing at Bethany (John 12:1-11). Golden Text—She hath done what she could (Mark 14:8). Lesson Outline —1. The supper and the spikenard (1-3); 2. Judas and Jesus (4-8); 3. The priests and the people (9-11).

The figure of Mary is put in strong light in this story of the Bethany supper. There was much for which she was grateful. The friendship and love of Jesus for herself and her brother and sister constituted a blessing of inexpressible value. But the recent restoration of her brother from death called, as she felt, for some unusual expression of gratitude. She had purchased a jar of the costliest perfume the age afforded, and seizing the only occasion offered she came at the moment when the feast was nearing its conclusion and when it was customary to bestow garlands upon the guests, bringing her offering, which was only an outward expression of the rarer treasures of her gratitude and love. The odorous ointment she poured upon his head and his feet, as appears from a comparison of the three narratives, and wiped his feet with her hair, while the odor filled the apartment like incense. Mark even asserts that she devoted the beautiful alabaster cruise to its final and sole consecration to Jesus by breaking it in the act of anointing. Viewed from the angle of utilitarianism this act seems at first like a misappropriation of money that might have been more usefully employed. But such construction would only reflect the spirit of a Judas and would not express the true element of devotion which Mary felt in her heart. The story of her love has been told in every land where the gospel is preached, just as Jesus said it would be. She was giving the most eloquent expression to her nature and her gratitude. Every nature must express itself in its own way. She had done what she could. Already Jesus saw in her act the significance of a preparation for his burial, whose near approach no one but himself could discern. It was a beautiful and fragrant offering by one who could have expressed her sentiments in no more appropriate manner.

But Judas was there also, and his attitude may be well understood. It is customary for us to quickly accept the judgment pronounced upon him by the evangelist in the light which came to be subsequently thrown upon his character. The dishonest purposes of his life and his ambitions were already manifesting themselves in such cavils as here found utterance. The money might better have been given to the poor, he said. It represented the results of many days' labor. It was not practical to spend it in that manner. That such sentiments did not emanate solely from a man who was a thief and was soon to become a traitor, but were shared by some of the disciples, as the other evangelists assert, shows how cold and barren a view of Christian life may be taken by a so-called "practical" nature. There are men who study political economy without ever perceiving that the factors which make up the conditions of human life, the markets and their values, are not exhausted in terms of corn, horses and land, but that human sentiment and conscience are to be reckoned within any true and comprehensive theory of human relations. It is, after all, the crass and meagre soul that complains because beautiful and artistic offerings are made to the cause of Christ in the form of architecture in churches and other Christian institutions. No less is ever provided for charity or for preaching the gospel in the regions beyond because Christians out of their abundance erect to God monuments of devotion which are the lasting memorials of a sentiment as beautiful as that which filled the heart of Mary of Bethany. The so-called practical man who insists that no money shall be wasted in the finer services of art and music as connected with religion, generally ends by giving nothing to the poor or to missions. It is the glory of our Christian faith that it not only leads us to think of the unfortunate, but it refines and ennobles the whole nature, sensibilities and emotions, and leaves the lasting impress of a purer esthetics and a nobler art.

IN FEARFUL TORTURE.

DANEY, WIS.

To be flayed alive is a terrible ordeal, and yet this is almost the experience of Mr. Chas. Lisans, one of our citizens. He relates it to Dr. Peter Fahrney, of Chicago, Ill., as follows: "I must write and tell you of a remarkable cure which your Blood Vitalizer has brought about. My whole body was covered with a skin eruption, which itched terribly. I was in such agony that I would scratch and tear the skin to pieces, and sometimes cut it with a knife until the blood would flow. This would give me relief for a short time but I would soon be as bad as ever. Last fall I happened to get hold of your paper, the Surprise, wherein I read about your Blood Vitalizer. I sent for a trial box. I had used the medicine but a short time when a clear skin formed. I began to feel better, and in three weeks my whole body was covered with a clear skin. I have been well ever since. Accept my heartfelt thanks for what your Vitalizer has done for me. I shall always have one thing in mind, and that is to recommend your remedies to others."

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is not a drug store medicine. Only special local agents sell it. For particulars, address Dr. P. Fahrney, 112-114 South Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Christian Endeavor.

By Burris A. Jenkins.

TOPIC FOR APRIL 9.

"THE HOLY GARMENTS."

(Eph. 4:20-24; Rom. 6:4.)

"Put on Christ," is an expression frequent in the writings of Paul. He would have us clothed with Christ, so endued with his Spirit as to be encompassed by him. Putting on Christ in baptism—perhaps the expression has reference to the pure, white garments in which the candidate in the early church was clothed before entering the water. Christ is put on as the whiteness of a garment.

Seeing how beautiful and how full of meaning is this symbolic ordinance, ought we not to be extremely careful regarding even our outward accessories of it? Endeavorers, if your minister and committee on baptism are not careful to choose for the candidates beautiful garments, try quietly and humbly to influence them to obtain white garments; they are inexpensive and beautiful.

The very ordinance itself—in which one is clothed with the cleansing element as with a garment, and in which clothing process one is symbolically born anew, made alive from a death to an old life, to a holy newness—is full of meaning. Paul sees in it a picture of that close and intimate union between the believer and the Lord Christ, which he calls putting on Christ, being in Christ, a new creature, being one with Christ.

Clothing does not make the man, but clothing goes a long way toward showing what the man is made of. As a man's clothing, though it may be poor, must be clean, so must the clothing of his life be spotless. How can this better be accomplished than by making the clothing holy—even by being clothed with Christ.

"Clothed with light as with a garment," would be true even of poor mortals, such as we, if we were clothed in him, for is he not the light of the world?

To be clothed with light—what a joy to poor, blind mortals, groping and yearning for enlightenment and truth. "Mehr licht! Mehr licht!" cried the German poet, as he died, and "more light! more light!" is the cry that comes up from human hearts everywhere. Put on Christ, the holy garment, and thou shalt dwell in unending light.

The priests put on, at certain times in the services, certain sacred garments, and at certain most holy moments they employ still more sacred garments. To us all moments are most sacred, and at all times we can wear the most holy garment—clothed with Christ. At no time let us lay him aside.

Even the outward cothing—our flesh—is called the sacred temple of God. Let us be careful never to defile it.

Our Opportunities.

By W. J. Lhamon, Director.

"America is another name for opportunity. Our whole history appears like the last effort of divine Providence in behalf of the human race." This language is attributed to Emerson. Every year brings emphasis to these thoughtful, thilling words. The year 1898 surpasses all others since Emerson wrote in the burden of opportunity it has revealed to American Christians. It is for our statesmen to say what shall be done politically with the new lands leaning upon us; it is for Christians to say what will be done with them morally and religiously. While Cuba, Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands are making their special appeal to both our piety and our patriotism, they are, in reality, but joining the grand chorus of appeal that comes to us from Africa, Turkey, India, China and Japan. In short, that vast portion of the world still sitting in darkness and in the region and shadow of death appeals largely to our own great country for light and life. If from the view-point of the merchant, the statesman and the patriot America means opportunity, so likewise from the view-point of the Christian Africa means opportunity, and Japan means opportunity, and China and India, and almost all the pagan portions of the earth have the same meaning. If once, in prophetic vision, Ethiopia was seen stretching out her hands towards GOD, to-day in plainest, absolute pleading, easily seen by all open-eyed Christians, the whole world stretches out her hands Christward. And since with pitiful eyes the lowliest are ever looking up to the loftiest, those who, by Christ, have been in any degree exalted, are bound to reach down with helping hands to the helpless ones. In proportion as we are Christly we must and will hear and heed the calls for help, even as Jesus himself heard them and we must answer, saying in Pauline fashion: "We in Christ's stead pray ye, Be reconciled to God."

Our opportunities are therefore as numerous and far-reaching as the vast fields of paganism. And they are not exhausted by those vast fields. We run the rounds of the world and come back home to find many a field untilled. Our North, our West and our South, our country districts and our city slums are all appealing to us with tremendous force and awful warnings. Red men, black men and the foreigners among us, from all lands, have their peculiar claims upon the Church of Christ, and they make us their debtors in the same way that the whole world appealed to Paul, causing him to cry out, "I am a debtor both to the Jew and the Gentile."

Our circumstances give emphasis to our opportunities. Our ability is the measure of our responsibility regarding them. Surely, never was a people more able to rise up in answer to the calls of God and say, "Behold, Lord, here we are; send us." A few summary hints of our ability are in place.

1. We are a well-schooled people, and God and the nations are claiming our culture.

2. We have the highest civilization, and all its instruments and resources should be held at the command of Christ and the calls of those for whom he died.

3. We are an immensely wealthy people, and our gold belongs to our Lord. We are not so much as tithing our means for him. If we were we should even now be seizing many of the opportunities that are slipping away from us.

4. We have intercommunication and commerce with the whole world, and if Christians will to do it they can build a church wherever an American tills a field, and set forth the Lord's Table wherever a civilized man sets up a counter.

5. We speak a language that is rapidly getting hold of countless millions of people and that bids fair to become "the language of the earth." Our sweet and noble English is unrivaled, both as regards its literature and the number of people who speak it. And wherever our letters go they carry their rich treasure of Christly thought and sentiment. In many a land the English-speaking evangelist has pioneered the way for the English alphabet, and in turn the English alphabet is preparing the way for many an English-speaking evangelist.

Opportunities, possibilities, the commands of Christ, the calls of the nations are unitedly constraining us to an enlargement of our efforts. We must all be expansionists if we would be Christly. We must expand with our gifts the treasuries of our societies, home and foreign. We must expand with our prayers and pleadings the churches of which we are members till they know no other theme than that of Christ's commission. We must expand, some of us at least, with the gifts of our own lives, the forces that are in the fields; and lastly, we must exalt this whole theme till it expands through all souls of all churches and fills the whole earth with its magnitude and glory.

DOCTRINE AND LIFE. By G. L. Brokaw. Christian Index Co., Des Moines, Iowa, publishers. Price, postpaid, $1.50.

This book is a compilation of sermons from some of the leading preachers of Iowa and, we are glad to know, is selling rapidly. The themes treated in these sermons are largely evangelical and treated in a logical and scholarly way. Some of them are what might be called doctrinal or polemical sermons and intended to throw light upon some problems about which many are honestly troubled, but there is a strong presentation of the practical side of the Christian life in them as well. As this book is the first from the press of the Christian Index Company, its make-up mechanically speaks well for its publishers, who have informed us that the second edition is about completed, the first being already exhausted.

THE REDEMPTION OF AFRICA. By Fredric Perry Noble. Fleming H. Revell, Chicago, publishers. Two Vols., 450 pages each, 8vo., cloth, $4.00.

It would be difficult to overstate the magnitude of the work accomplished in the above-named book or its importance to the literature of the world's missions. Not until one has read these volumes can he realize their grasp upon the history of Africa and the battlefield that continent has been in the contest of its many religions for supremacy. Beginning with the dawn of religious history in that continent the author has carefully outlined every religious movement that has appeared upon its soil or figured in its civilizations known to history, and their downfall. The reader will be especially interested in the ancient missions of this continent, also the account of the overthrow of primitive Christianity by Islamism and the effort to regain the continent from its grasp.

While dealing with so many religions and of such dissimilar characteristics and strong antagonisms the author has displayed remarkable freedom from narrowness, bigotry and religious bias. He has conformed to the duty of a historian as fully as possible under the circumstances, displaying always the desire to deal fairly with his subject and to conform to the facts. His work, is therefore, thoroughly catholic in spirit and an important contribution to religious and missionary history as well as a great light shed upon that dark continent. This work is not limited to strictly religious missions, but includes also the history of educational, literary, medical and philanthropic movements and societies on that continent, closing with a directory of these agencies and missions. The numerous maps, diagrams and illustrations also greatly interest and assist the reader.

One of the evidently good results to come from this work will be the incentives which it furnishes for an enlargement of the missionary spirit. The numerous admirable sketches of missionaries, some of whom are among the world's greatest missionaries, will be an inspiration to many to become missionaries and of more to better support those now in the mission field. There is nothing dry about the work. Everything related sparkles with the enthusiasm of an interested author who sets forth his facts in an easy, pleasing style. The reader will probably learn more about Africa in this book than from any other volume of its size extant, and in addition a larger and truer knowledge of its dominant religions from the dawn of history to the present time; especially of the evangelical character of Christianity. It is a book of great value and will evidently take front rank as a text-book on missions in the world as well as in Africa. In view of the larger part that Africa is yet to play in the civilizations of the world no student of missions can afford to be without this work. It is the most comprehensive, concise and important missionary book that we have yet seen, ancient or modern.

THE GREAT REVIVAL AND THE LITTLE TENT MEETING; Or "Christian Experience" of To-day. By J. S. Lamar.

This is No. 1 of Vol. I of the Christian Tract Series, published by the Oracle Publishing Company, 358 Dearborn Street, Chicago. This story is so vivid and lifelike a description of two types of religious revivals, seen in almost every town and city, that it will be read with unflagging interest. The author is a most graceful writer, but he knows how to add a little vinegar, pepper and salt where he thinks these condiments are needed. The experience of Henry Manning has often been duplicated in the history of our religious movement. These tracts are to be published monthly, and the regular subscription price is 50 cents a year, but the company is making a special advance offer of 25 cents per year until further notice. At this nominal cost the Tract Series should have a large patronage. We are not doing half enough in tract distribution.

J. P. McCaskey, Lancaster, Pa., editor of the Pennsylvania School Journal, now in its 46th year, is also the compiler of a book of Christmas songs, hymns and cards with selections from Beecher, Wallace, Auerbach, Abbott, Warren and Dickens, and illustrated by masterpieces from some of the greatest artists of the world. The title of the book is "Christmas in Song and Story." The book is highly commended by the leading journals of the day. It contains 320 pages and is sold for $2.50.

ALLEN.

Elijah S. Allen was born near Harrodsburg, Kentucky, Nov. 4, 1810, and emigrated to Indiana when eight years old. On the 2nd day of August, 1835, he was married to Sarrah A. Field and to them were born three sons and three daughters, four of whom are living. He joined the Christian Church about 60 years ago and lived a faithful, devoted Christian life. His companion was called from labor to reward April 9, 1894. On the 20th day of March, 1899, he quietly fell asleep surrounded by his children and many of his friends. His youngest daughter with whom he lived during his last years is the wife of Bro. C. A. Manker, who has been one of our ablest defenders of the primitive gospel, but who is now almost entirely confined to his room by the ravages of disease. On the 21st inst., in the presence of a large concourse of sorrowing friends and relatives, we laid Bro. Allen's body in the grave.

Mrs. Louisa Coons died in Pomona at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Sallie Dillman, March 9, 1899. She was born in Kentucky in 1823. She united with the Christian Church at the age of 14. She was baptized by John L. Gano. Her husband died in the Lord 30 years ago. Three sons and two daughters had gone on before her to the better land. There remains on this side a son, David Coons, of St. Louis, and four daughters, Mrs. Lizzie Herman and Mrs. Sallie Dillman, of Pomona, Mrs. Mollie Rhorer, of San Francisco, and Mrs. Orrie Dillman, of Oakland. Grandma Coons was one of God's elect women.

FRYMIRE.

Judge Jasper Frymire departed this life March 16, at Higdon, Mo., after a continued illness of many months. Bro. Frymire was one of our most worthy and respected Christian workers, holding many places of trust bestowed upon him by the people. He served as judge for two terms, as justice two terms, was an elder of the congregation at Marble Hill, Mo., for many years. At the time of his death he was engaged in general merchandising at Higdon, Mo. A large gathering of friends paid their last tribute to the remains of one whose life was made up of noble deeds. A devoted wife will miss a companion, a daughter will miss a father, an only son on the distant battlefield will no longer have the counsel and advice that can be given by a father. May the good Lord lead us gently by his hand until we shall meet our loved ones who have gone on before.

Publishers' Notes.

"Queen Esther," the late production from the pen of Rev. M. M. Davis, Dallas, Texas, recites, in a dramatic manner, the career of this Queen of Xerxes, and impressively brings out the grand lessons from her eventful life. The reader of this book will find that the author has shown Queen Esther in new and glowing light.

The preacher can find thought for the foundation for quite a number of sermons in this book. Many lessons are found in it that will apply to the women of the present time. It is a beautiful cloth-bound book of 132 pages, 12 mo. size, and the price is 75 cents, postpaid.

"I think the book may do much good in meeting the difficulties of young naturalists perplexed by the sophistries of agnostic or spontaneous evolution." Such is the testimony of Sir William Dawson of the McGill University, Montreal, Canada, concerning "Organic Evolution Considered," the late work by Prof. A. Fairhurst, of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky. The book contains 21 chapters, 386 pages and the price is $1.50 per copy, postpaid.

T. W. Grafton's new book, "Men of Yesterday," is now on the press, and will be ready for delivery in a short time. This work is especially adapted to acquaint our church members with a brief history of the lives of a few of the prominent men among the Disciples of Christ, who have labored to promote the cause of the Reformation. Many have had the pleasure of reading "Life of Alexander Campbell," by Grafton, and for them to read "Men of Yesterday," will give them a knowledge of the history of representative men identified with the Disciples of Christ. This work contains a series of biographical sketches of the lives of the following prominent men: Barton W. Stone, John Smith, Isaac Errett, Barton W. Johnson and Otis A. Burgess. It can be said of these men, "They rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." This book will be put up in latest modern style, and will be an ornament in the library or on the table. It will contain 281 pages, and the price is $1.00, postpaid.

We are working now putting into type a new book which we feel sure will be a source of delight to many students, teachers and preachers. We refer to the late literary production from the pen of Prof. H. W. Everest. He calls this book "The Science and Pedagogy of Ethics." No doubt this can truly be called the author's latest and best literary work.

"Mary Ardmore" is a religious story of a high order. The author is J. H. Stark, who gained quite a reputation as a writer of religious stories in his former production called "Hugh Carlin." The story in "Mary Ardmore is based on the importance of having clearly defined religious convictions and holding steadfastly to them. In the book will be found a lucid explanation of the teachings of the New Testament in conversion and kindred subjects. The price is $1.00, postpaid.

"Superior to any we have ever used," is what has been written us by those who have "Gospel Call" song books in their church and Sunday-school.

If your church or Sunday-school contemplates buying new song books, before finally deciding you should examine "Gospel Call." The immense sale reached by "Gospel Call" is convincing evidence of its popularity.

See this music book before making your purchase. Write the Christian Pub. Co., St. Louis, Mo., for particulars and price.

All students of the Old Testament know it contains many romantic narratives, but many who are familiar with the general history therein would like to study some of the prominent characters of the Bible as seen from the standpoint of a modern author. J. Breckenridge Ellis' late books, "In the Days of Jehu" and "King Saul," will present these Jewish kings in new light to the average student of the Bible. The author displays wonderful knowledge of Jewish history. The readers will find that the author has led them into new fields of thought in the study of Bible character and history.

The price of "In the Days of Jehu" is 75 cents and "King Saul" is $1.00.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The capture of Malolos, the capital of the Filipino insurgents, marks the end of the first part of the campaign in the Philippines. We would like to believe that it means the end of the whole struggle, but the evidence now available does not warrant that conclusion. The past week was occupied by a steady advance from Manila into the heart of the enemy's country. Malolos, the seat of Aguinaldo's government, is north of Manila, with which it is connected by railroad, and on the coast, which is here fringed with islands separated from each other and from the mainland by shallow waterways available only for boats of light draft. The army has proceeded north, following the railroad and (less closely) the coast and driving the insurgents before it. The advance was a long intermittent skirmish, occasionally rising into brisk battle when the Filipinos made a stand at a river or a fortified town. The railroad was partially destroyed by the insurgents as they retreated and rebuilt by the Americans as they advanced, so that the latter maintained constant communication with Manila by rail and wire. The first formidable resistance was encountered at Marilas, which was taken on Monday after a fierce fight. On Tuesday the troops advanced on Bulacan, which was abandoned and fired by the Filipinos. Bocave was taken on Wednesday, and Thursday night the troops camped within sight of Malolos, which was captured after surprisingly feeble resistance Friday morning. Here as elsewhere the insurgents fired the principal buildings before leaving, and the inhabitants fled before the approach of the army. The insurgent army has retreated still farther toward the north.

What will be the effect of the capture of the insurgent capital? It must be borne in mind that it is only the seat of government which is taken, not the government itself or the army or its leaders. Aguinaldo is the insurgent government, and Aguinaldo is portable. Since the government had practically no power except what came from Aguinaldo's personal influence, it will perhaps suffer less than most governments would from the loss of its local habitation. A certain loss of prestige in the eyes of the natives must result from the capture of the capital and the burning of the palace, but apart from this the significance of the fall of Malolos is to be seen by viewing it, not as a cause of possible future developments, but as an indication of present conditions. The city was strongly fortified and as well suited for defense as any post the insurgents could hope to find. If the insurgents were in condition to make a stubborn resistance anywhere, surely it would be at this point, at once their capital and their strongest fort. The surrender seems to indicate, then, that the policy of the insurgents in the future will be to keep out of range and yield ground without decisive battles. This may mean that Aguinaldo's forces will desert him and make their peace with the United States, or it may mean that the army will break up into a multitude of guerilla bands which will continue a desultory, bushwhacking warfare indefinitely. General Otis, at least, does not seem to consider his work done, for he cables that he is "preparing for continued active campaign." We are inclined to believe that, while the fall of the insurgent capital may be considered as closing one section of the war, it lacks much of being the close of the war.

Three representatives of the Cuban Assembly are in Washington trying to present to the President the resolutions passed by the Assembly in regard to the $3,000,000. The difficulty arises from the fact that they want official recognition for themselves and the Assembly which sent them. As a matter of fact there is less ground for recognizing the legitimacy of the Military Assemby now than there was for recognizing the Cuban Republic before the war. The resolutions themselves (as is the way with such documents) are much more respectful in tone than was the debate out of which they sprang. After a resolution of gratitude to the United States for past favors, the second resolution proceeds as sollows: "To declare at the same time to the people and to the Government of the United States that the people in arms and the Assembly, as its legitimate representative, are grateful for the present of $3,000,000, with which the President of the United States wants to contribute to the aid and disbandment of our soldiers; but that, founded on the greater and more exact knowledge of the character and needs of the army and the agricultural and economic situation of our country, the Assembly of Representatives, because it wishes the peace and desires to contribute to the humanitarian ends of the policy of intervention, considers it its duty to declare that this sum, which for our honor we can not accept as a gift, but as a loan, is by all means insufficient, and so useless, and therefore asks of the President of the United States his necessary authorization to raise the funds which are indispensable, and which will be exclusively applied to the Cuban troops, so that they can be disbanded without difficulties or apprehensions—so that a definite and lasting peace may reign in the Island of Cuba."

If the members of the two wings of the Democratic party entertained any hope that the schism which divided the party in 1896 has been healed, the developments in connection with the Jefferson dinners in New York have dispelled the fond illusion. When the Belmont and Croker ten-dollar-a-plate dinner was projected it was with a view to exhibiting the restored harmony of the Democracy and incidentally calking any leaks which might still remain in the party ship. Croker and Belmont, both of whom favor expansion and oppose the financial doctrine of the Chicago platform, were willing to ignore differences of opinion on these minor points which do not, in their minds, constitute the party issue. The scheme was foredoomed to failure, for the only way to unite the two sections of the Democracy is to get their minds off of these topics, and that can only be accomplished by setting before them some issue on which they can all take the same side. Up to date no issue answering that description has been found. The attempt to unite silver Democrats and gold Democrats, expansionist Democrats and anti-expansionist Democrats, on nothing in particular but the exhilaration of a ten-dollar dinner, cannot be considered an exhibition of profound political sagacity. Mr. Bryan declined the invitation which was sent to him, and in his letters (several of them) to Mr. Belmont expressed his conviction of the uselessness of "political communion between Jefferson Democrats who stand upon the Chicago platform and the Republican allies who masquerade as Democrats between campaigns in order to give more potency to their betrayal of Democratic principles on election day." It will not do to say that Mr. Bryan has lost his following, and that the Chicago platform has no friends left. The evidence does not point that way. At the same time one cannot but believe that, as matters stand now, with the added expansion idea, the defection from Mr. Bryan will be larger in 1900 than it was in 1896. This Jefferson-dinner episode has widened and exhibited the breach within the party. By latest accounts four different dinners, ranging in price from one dollar to ten, are to be given to accommodate as many different elements of the party.

One of the darkest features of "Darkest Africa" has been the menace of war among the several enlightened nations of Europe who are jealous of each other's attempts to introduce the light of civilization. In particular, the relations of England and France in North Africa have for years afforded ground for serious apprehensions. Happily, an agreement has been reached by which each government recognizes the other's right to be in Africa and both agree upon the boundary of their spheres of influence. This is an event of importance in European history. It means that such exciting episodes as the French occupation of Fashoda and the consequent clash with Great Brit-
